There were two other people to hear from; mom and dad. Dad said that he wanted to eat at an inexpensive, sandwich type place, but not one that was like fast food. I told him about McManus', I even added the fact that it was open all night on the weekends and until three on weeknights. I also mentioned the Amherst Deli, which features deli sandwiches, pastries, cheese, deli salads, bagels, lox and knishes. And, finally, I told dad about the Classe Cafe in Amherst. I told him that this was Amherst's newest diner and that it offered homestyle cooking for breakfast, lunch and dinner as well as late night munchies and take-outs.

Finally, mom spoke. She wanted a place that offered a wide variety of food in a quiet setting. I told mom about the Hungry-U in Amherst. It features a variety of fine food

Scottish orchestra at FAC

Scottish National Orchestra
Monday, October 25
Fine Arts Center

By ROBERTA RUBIN
Collegian Correspondent

Sir Alexander Gibson and The Scottish National Orchestra enthralled an appreciative crowd Monday night at the Fine Arts Center.

Throughout the evening, from Mozart's Concert Aria and "Come scoglio" from Cosi fan Tutte, to Mahler's 4th Symphony, the orchestra was both technically and melodically competent. As Gibson conducted with intensity, great warmth and harmony flowed from the orchestra's music.

What could have resulted as sets of choppy, unrelated pieces became beautifully incorporated from movement to movement by the orchestra without disrupting or jarring the sensation of tranquility. A prime example was in the movements of "Four Sea Interludes from Peter Grimes" in which the orchestra shifted from a tone of fright and menace, to serene, peaceful melodies perfectly timed by the conductor. The more powerful movements evoke heart thumping excitement.

Another outstanding feature of the concert was the soloist, Margaret Marshall. Marshall has sung successfully with the Berlin Philharmonic and the London Philharmonic among others. During the 1981-82 season, Marshall appeared with the Scottish Opera and in other engagements as well as touring throughout the United Kingdom with the Scottish National Orchestra. Her voice was powerful but not overbearing. Marshall and the orchestra complemented each other with their special and separate talents. Together, they produced a sound which was both pleasing to the ear and gripping to the soul. Marshall and the orchestra handled Mozart's playful teasing in "Come scoglio" smoothly. In one moment, Marshall would sing in a lonely sorrowful voice, shamefully tossing her head from side to side. In another, she would sing on a confident bold melody with her head held high and her face lit with a smile. The serene mood of the music was heightened by Marshall's facial expressions and by her tone of singing. Moreover, one could tell that Marshall enjoyed what she was doing and with whom she was doing it. This certainly had a positive effect on both the audience and orchestra. Both Marshall and the orchestra were exhilirating in Mahler's 4th symphony. A pattern of peaceful, romantic music evolved into a booming glory accompanied by Marshall's superb voice. The woodwinds and jingly sleighbells completed the third movement. The romantic melodies then returned until the single final note on a piano vibrated and faded, leaving the audience in a tranquil frame of mind.

Sir Alexander Gibson, of British origin, left Britain twenty-two years ago and, in 1959, joined The Scottish National Orchestra to raise the orchestra from its once provincial status to that of a world class touring and recording ensemble. The Scottish National Orchestra was formed in 1950 and it holds annual performances at the Edinburgh Festival as well as participating in the activities of The Scottish National Opera. This is the orchestra's second North American tour since 1975.

This concert for me was highly enjoyable. Sir Alexander Gibson and The Scottish National Orchestra are worth taking because they produce a completely different world...a world of music. Although, I'm not being an avid opera fan, listening to Margaret Marshall proved to be a delightful experience.

Hunter's deadly performance

ROBERT HUNTER
Friday, October 22
By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Correspondent

Robert Hunter played last Friday night to two standing room only audiences at a local club. The first show was made up of about half Grateful Dead tunes he had written and half songs he has recorded on solo albums. Hunter opened with "Keep Your Day Job," and continued with "Box of Rain," "Deal," and "Slack String Quartet". It was a very tight show. Over the past couple of years his guitar playing has improved immensely, as has his voice and harmonica playing; although this was a pretty standard set (he played almost the exact same set in Boston a few nights before). Much of the entertainment value of past shows is gone. I mean, "Slack String Quartet" just doesn't sound slack anymore. He hit only the right notes at the right time. No buzzing strings or anything.

The second show was more of the same. There were no surprises. He played "Rubean and Cherise," "West LA Fadeaway," "Stella Blue," and most of his new album, Run for the Roses. For the first encore he played a short ditty and then "Ripple." Finally, the crowd got seriously involved. It was as if the club suddenly turned into a giant campfire with everybody sitting and singing along.

Everytime I go to see a Grateful Dead related show I have the same problem. Should I be satisfied with what was played or should I think about it in relation to how well I know they can play. In this case, it was a toss up. It wasn't the greatest show I've seen him do, but I did enjoy seeing him.

There's something for everyone this week in theatre.

The Third World Theatre Series celebrates its second production this semester with the Sansei Theatre Company presentation of Life in the Fast Lane, A Requim for a Sansei Poet, a one-man tour-de-force by Lane Kiyomi Nishikawa. Nishikawa often refers to his Japanese tradition and how he has incorporated it into his theatrical monologue with the use of free verse. Life in the Fast Lane will be performed at 8 p.m. tomorrow in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $2 for students and $3 for the general public.

The Rand Theatre opens its repertory season this Friday night with Jack Heifner's Vanities. The show is a bittersweet comedy which follows three women as they grow up. In 1963, they are cheerleaders together. In 1968, they are sorority sisters. The show culminates in their reunion in 1974. Sherri Leigh June, Nanci Weglowski and Breffny Rouse star. It will play October 29 and 30 and November 5, 6, 9, 10, 13, 15, 16 and 20.

The second play in the Rand's repertory season is Dark of the Moon by Howard Richardson and William Berney. It is a drama about conjur people, witches and mortals in a rural setting. Dark of the Moon continues November 3, 4, 11, 17 and 18 at 8 p.m. Tickets for both shows are $2.50 for students and $3.50 for the public.

A modern English adaptation of The Misanthrope by Moliere will be performed at 8 p.m. in Amherst College's Kirby Theater October 29, 30 and November 4, 5 and 6. General admission is $2.50 and senior citizens $1.50.

Siamsa, the National Folk Theater of Ireland will be performing at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, November 2 at the FAC. With a cast of approximately 27 ranging in age from eleven to seventy, Siamsa is a theatrical recreation in mime, music and dance of what life was like for a rural family in Gaelic speaking Ireland. Tickets are $9, $7, and $5, and half-priced for students.

Yentl by Leah Napolin and Isaac Bashevis Singer revolves around an intelligent young girl growing up in Poland in 1873. After her father's death, she assumes the identity of a young male Yeshiva student. Performances are at 8 p.m. on October 28, 29, 30 and November 4, 5 and 6 at Smith College's Theater 14.

The Third World Theatre Series will present Life in the Fast Lane: A Requiem for a Sensei tomorrow night in Bowker auditorium.

and drink at affordable prices. In addition to the Hungry-U was Carburs, which offered a great diversity of food, including two separate menus; one is the 26 page sandwich menu and the other is a full service menu served in the illustrous Ribit Room. I told everyone about the convenient location of the Top of The Campus, which offers a wide variety of culinary delights that can be enjoyed while viewing the Valley. Right in the heart of Amherst is Delano's which has a variety of light foods and a cozy atmosphere. Another choice could be Roberto's on Pleasant Street in Northampton. Roberto's features homestyle Italian foods in a casual dining atmosphere. Finally I told mom about the Silverscapé Cafe which just reopened. The Silverscape offers a complete luncheon and dinner menu including beef, poultry, seafood, spirits and cappuccino.

I had exhausted my knowledge of the areas restaurants and still no decision had been arrived at. I was astonished when my little brother asked me what I wanted to eat, since everyone had come to visit me, it should be my choice where to go. I was so taken back by Gary's thoughtfulness, that I could think of nothing other than wanting to spend time talking with my family without the bother of going out. Believe it or not, six hungry people spent the night in my dorm room telling family stories and jokes, and laughing all night long.

Even though we didn't get to dinner, it was a very enjoyable visit after all.

(Editor's Note: Although this list contains numerous restaurants in the area, it by no means attempts to cover every restaurant available to the public.)

enough (anti-Semetic sentiment on campus."

Propper has about a dozen posters which have had swastikas drawn on them. She also produced a Hebrew note left on the Hillel door Monday in the Student Union which contained a swastika apparently drawn by someone other than the person who wrote the note.

The University has recently hired two Anti-Semetism Jewish Awareness Trainers. Propper said she will be working through student activities while another trainer will work through residential life. Trainers will organize counseling sessions and workshops, she said.

Students need "a lot of education about Zionism, Anti-Semetism and Jews around the world," she said.

But she added her belief that anti-Semetism will never be eliminated.

"I think that the anti-Semetism has always been there and will always be there," she said.

She said she hopes her new position can help "create a tone on this campus so this kind of thing won't happen anymore."

"There are certain individuals on campus that would like to see Jewish activists keep their mouths a little more quiet," Glantz said.

Spikers topple Smith

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's varsity volleyball team bounced back from a tough weekend tournament to defeat Smith College in four games, 11-15, 16-14, 15-3, 15-8 at NOPE gym.

"It was a big match for the team and we needed to win convincingly," said coach Elaine Sortino. "Our serves were tough and we were aggressive, but it took awhile to get settled in and we should have done a little better."

In the first game, UMass kept it close at 4-4, until Smith ran off eight straight points to go ahead 12-4, largely on the strength of senior spiker Nancy Onken who spiked well. Onken, also, continually blocked many of UMass spike attempts.

UMass answered back with six straight points of their own under the serve of senior co-captain Patti Philbin to put them back in the game at 12-10, but Smith won three more points to win game one, 15-11.

Game two was a much slower contest, as both teams fought it out evenly, with UMass evntually coming out on top, 16-14.

In game three, the spikers came out strong and took a commanding lead. They reeled off five straight points to lead 10-0 before Smith got on the scoreboard with three points.

But UMass got the final five points of the game and cruised to an easy 15-3 victory. UMass dominated much of the play in this game and came through with most of their spikes.

The Minutewomen had problems with their serves in game four, but later corrected themselves and eventually went on to win handily 15-8, to win the match 3-1.

"The weekends away are beginning to show, we looked tired tonight. We played well, but struggled and waited a little too long to take charge, and set the pace," said Sortino.

This was the last home match for senior Patti Philbin, and Sortino was glad to see her come on strong towards the end.

"Patti Philbin is the greatest middle hitter or blocker we've ever had," said Sortino.

The Minutewomen will travel to Queens College in New York for a tournament this weekend.

Crew races in regatta

By STEVE FITZ
Collegian Correspondent

CAMBRIDGE, MA. — The University of Massachusetts men's and women's crew teams competed in the Head of the Charles Regatta this past Sunday, held on the Charles river.

It was the last competition of the fall season for the crew teams.

The race was the biggest of its kind in the country for the fall season, attracting teams throughout the nation and some foreign teams.

"The Head of the Charles is a very competitive race, it is extremely hard to get in to the race. It started in 1964 and has grown tremendously, so they have to limit the number of entrants," said coach Dave Kumlin.

Over 700 teams and 3200 people competed in the 18 events, which lasted most of the day.

The race was three miles long.

The men's elite eight finished 36th out of 40 teams, while the women's elite eight finished 23rd out of 40 teams.

"In the elite eight we were competing against Ivy league and other high budget schools, we didn't expect to win, but did very well against our division schools," said Kumlin.

The United States Naval Academy won the men's elite eight for the second time in a row in record time.

"It was the last race of the fall season, and both boats had a good row," said Kumlin.

"The fall season was very successful, we raced more than in previous years, which will be valuable experience for the spring season," said Kumlin.

According to Kumlin, with many returning people this spring, he expects to have a much more successful spring season than last year.

"We will go through an intensive winter training program and see what happens in the spring," said Kumlin.

Brian Sullivan's field goal during the final seconds of sudden death overtime lifted Beta Kappa Phi past Pi Kappa Alpha in one of the tightest intramural football games of the season last night before 250-300 screaming fans, 19-13.

Intramural football playoffs begin at the end of this week.

Women booters nip Crimson, 1-0

Watson, Gaw lead

By PETER SODERBERG
Collegian Staff

Intensity. Flying bodies, mid-air collisions, fallen players lying on the ground in pain — these are the prices paid for intensity. Neither UMass nor Harvard had any intensity lacking from their game yesterday at Boyden Field, but it was UMass women booters who came out on top, 1-0.

The lone score of the contest came at 30:38 of the second half. Jamie Watson, after a fury of shots and rebounds by her teammates, picked up the ball and on a turn around blast, drove it in from 20 feet out. As the ball rolled toward the net, Harvard goalie Janet Judge made a diving attempt to save it but was too late.

The momentum from the shot spun Watson around and she landed face down on the field. It did not however, prohibit Watson from watching the ball "for a fraction of a second going in."

Her teammates all rushed out to congratulate her and celebrated the relieving of the pressure and frustration that had plagued them throughout the game, trying to score.

UMass' Jamie Watson, who scored the winning goal in yesterday's 1-0 win over Harvard, trys to play the ball with two Crimson defenders in hot pursuit.

The win increases UMass' record to 11-3. Harvard entered the contest with a 5-2-2 record and ranked third in the region, and nineteenth in the nation. UMass retained their number one NCAA New England regional ranking. The Minutewomen are ranked seventh in the nation.

UMass coach Kalekeni Banda credited the fine defensive play of Jackie Gaw in securing the win.

"Jackie Gaw contained their star, #10 (Kelly Landry), and didn't let her at the ball. Jackie was the standout of the game," said Banda after the game. Gaw played very aggresive throughout the game. She sustained a head injury as the result of a mid-air collision in the second half, but stayed in to finish the game.

Yesterday's win assures UMass a spot in the playoffs in two weeks. The women booters will be looking to keep their record of shutouts going to the end of the season. To date, UMass has had seven straight shutouts, and every game they have won this season has been by shutout. The only teams to score on UMass have been UConn, Cortland St. and Brown, the three teams that beat UMass.

"I think we are peaking as a team just in time for the playoffs, we really have it together at this time," said Banda.

The final two regular season games will be played this weekend at home against University of New Hampshire and George Mason.

"We're not taking UNH lightly, we must be just as intense," said Banda. Prior to the game Saturday against UNH, there will be a small ceremony honoring the team member's parents. Prior to the Sunday game against 9th ranked (nationally) George Mason, there will be another ceremony, this one honoring the seniors who have been with the program for four years. Game times are 1:30 and 10:30 respectively.

UM stickers outlast Dartmouth for 1-0 victory

By JENNIFER KUPPER
Collegian Staff

HANOVER, N.H. — Yesterday, the University of Massachusetts women's field hockey team traveled north to rally against Dartmouth College, a team that has in past years been an obstacle to a winning season. Last year, the stickwomen beat the Big Green for the first time. Yesterday, they proved to Dartmouth that UM has the power, as for the second year in a row they defeated Dartmouth and added another victory to their 1982 record.

The Minutewomen won by a score of 1-0, in a tight game filled with second half action. In the first half, UMass had trouble establishing their dominance. Although UMass managed to get the ball down the field with the same offensive prowess seen in Saturday's New Hampshire game, the problem lay within the official's calls. Massachusetts' pressure game led to many Dartmouth fouls, yet the calls by the officials would not lend themselves to corner opportunities.

In the second half, both teams came out with the intention to score. Dartmouth's offense found themselves caught up in UMass' defense — a defense not to be contended with. (In this game UMass gave up only three defensive corners.) Constant pressuring and key interception plays saw the ball go to the UM offense, who were out to score.

At the 26 minute mark of the second half Mass. put the winning goal in the net. The goal came from Patty Smith, who received a pass from the right by co-captain Carol Progulski. (Progulski, incidentally has just returned to play yesterday after being sidelined with illness.) At 4:44 left in the game Dartmouth gave Massachusetts a scare when they had a tangible opportunity to tie the game.

The Big Green was awarded a penalty stroke when UM goalie Patty Shea committed a foul trying to prevent a Dartmouth goal. Dartmouth was unable to capitalize on this pressure filled moment as the stroke flew wide of the net.

The stats from this game proved UMass to be the dominant team, as the Minutewomen outshot the green twelve to three. Goalie Patty Shea only needed two saves to obtain the shutout.

The UMass stickwomen now carry a record of 11-2-1 with four games left in the official season. Tomorrow they travel to Providence to play Brown University.

The junior varsity field hockey team extended their unbeaten season when they defeated the Dartmouth JV's 2-0, yesterday following varsity action. Bunny Forbes put two goals in the net in the second half to give UMass the win.

UMass' Garry Pearson, shown in action with quarterback Barrett McGrath, earlier this year, gained his 3000th career yard last Saturday against Boston University.

Football notebook: Pearson gains 3000 yds.

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

After seven games, the University of Massachusetts football team is suffering through a disappointing 2-5 campaign. However, before Minutemen fans give up on this year's team, they would do well to remember that in 1981 the Minutemen were 4-1 at home and that the next four games are at home.

A big part of UMass' success at home has been due to student support; nearly 11,000 people attend each game. That enthusiasm will be needed if the Minutemen are to turn around their season.

Their are many reasons why UMass football deserves your support.

First and foremost, their is star tailback Garry Pearson. With the 111 yards he gained last week, Pearson has passed the 3000 yard milestone. He gained his 3101 career yards in a mere 26 games as a starter. By the way, Pearson averages 206 yards a game against UMass' next opponent, the University of Connecticut.

Pearson also has a chance to crack the 5000 all-purpose yardage barrier. With 4487 career yards at present, Pearson needs a 129 yard average over the next four games to get to the 5000 yard plateau. Currently, he is averaging 151.1 all-purpose yards per game.

UMass punter Demo Drougas also deserves recognition for his fine performance against Boston University. Drougas punted six times for 216 yards; an average of 36 yards a punt. He has a 35.7 average for the season.

Flanker Kevin Jackson also had an excellent game, catching four passes for 105 yards and the Minutemen's lone touchdown.

Injuries have hit UMass hard all season and last week was no exception.

Both linebacker Steve Foreman and middle guard Dan Brennan dislocated shoulders and will miss this week's game. Defensive end Todd Comeau resprained his ankle and will also miss the UConn game. The other defensive end, Joe Graham, who also has a sprained ankle, is expected to play.

It is hoped that in this week's game against UConn that the defense reverts to last year's form, when they held the Huskies to 35 yards rushing. Last week BU romped through a porous UMass defense for 342 yards.

When an opponent is able to establish such a potent running game, the defensive backs are forced to play the run, which, in turn, opens up the passing attack. Too many points are given up as a result, evidenced by recent scores in UMass games.

On offense, perhaps a little diversity would help. Even such a simple change as running more to the left.

All in all, though, the offense has been fairly productive yardage-wise. They just have to figure out how to get the ball in the end-zone and turn those yards into points.

So come on out, UMass fans, and welcome your team home as they try to turn around their season.

Vice chancellor search may need new student

BY JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

A representative for undergraduate students, serving on a vice chancellor's search committee, graduated from the University of Massachusetts last spring and should be replaced by an active undergraduate student, the Student Attorney General's office said yesterday.

Kenneth Moore, currently serving as the student representative on the search committee for a vice chancellor for University Relations and Development, was appointed to the committee by former Chancellor Henry Koffler in February when the committee was formed. Moore graduated from UMass in May.

"It is proper that this seat be filled by an active undergraduate student, not an alumni," according to a memo issued by Assistant Attorney General Richard Kramer. "The position that Mr. Moore now holds should be occupied by a new student appointee. This new member is to be afforded the full rights and privileges of a committee member."

Moore said last night that he was entitled to serve on the committee.

"I was appointed properly and I am a legitimate member of the committee," Moore said. "I will continue to serve in that capacity."

Harry Allan, chairman of the committee, said the memo did not cite any regulations or by-laws as a basis for the decision.

"I'd have to study it and look into the matter," Allan said.

He said the Chancellor is responsible for making appointments to the search committee.

"We have to remember that the former Chancellor appointed the committee," Allan said.

UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey said last night that he will have to review the matter. "I'll take the matter under review with the chairman of the committee," Duffey said.

Kramer said he made his decision after the Collegian inquired whether Moore was entitled to serve as a student representative on the committee, and after speaking to Allan.

"We feel the person must be a student," Kramer said. "I think he should be replaced."

Early in August, Rick Tofier, the representative of the Professional Association of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst (PAUMA) on the search committee, asked Student Government Association (SGA) President Jim Murphy whether Moore should continue in his capacity on the search committee.

"It was his feeling that continuity was an important factor and even though Ken had

Women's Center educates UMass on Halloween rape

By MARY BALDWIN
Collegian Correspondent

As a result of the violence that occurred on campus on Halloween three years ago, efforts have been made by the Rape Task Force of the University of Massachusetts to make women on campus aware of ways to prevent rape or assault.

"Women felt intimidated by the vandalism, drinking and men from the outside campus. These things increase the fear in women. As a result many women felt a lot better going home for the weekend instead of being intimidated by these incidences," said Martha Tapia, educator advocate against violence against women at the Everywoman's Center.

"On Halloween of 1980 the components of the Rape Task Force — University Health Services, Department of Public Safety and the Everywoman's Center — began to provide advice and safety tips to women for Halloween and any other time of the year," she said.

Anonymity and the acceptance of behavior ordinarily considered suspicious are also contributing factors in increasing the possibility of rape on Halloween.

"Anytime you have the opportunity for the offender to remain anonymous you have more opportunity for rape," said Mary Dumas, community relations-staff development officer at UMass.

"This is a faith environment and we tend to deny that something violent is happening or will happen to us," she said.

"Dumas said one way to limit attacks on women is to implement a change like that made at James Madison College in Virginia. James Madison made Halloween weekend, instead of Columbus Day weekend, a three day holiday.

"This way the opportunity for rape is decreased along with the decreased student population during a three day weekend," Dumas said.

Cathy Roach, counselor advocate for the Everywoman's Center said, "Halloween is a typical time for tricks, including violent acts. Strange acts on Halloween don't raise your consciousness and strange behavior is more likely to go unnoticed."

Violent crimes have increased, but overall crime is reduced

By MARY BALDWIN
Collegian Correspondent

Although the Crime Prevention Pays program at the University of Massachusetts has reduced overall crime, and attempted crime on campus by 11 percent in the past year, violent crimes such as rape, assault and robbery have increased.

"Personal crimes are harder to prevent than other crimes because they are often inside crimes, not outside crimes," said Lawrence G. Holmes, assistant director of the Department of Public Safety.

"They may occur in a dorm where we can't control it when one student decides to clobber another. There is only so much that we can do. Better lighting and similar measures won't prevent many of these incidences," Holmes said.

"Given the small frequency of these crimes (rape, assault and robbery) they are not so unavoidable. You have to look at each case independently," he said.

Five rapes or attempted rapes occured in 1981 as compared to one in 1980 according to UMass Department of Public Safety statistics. Four robberies or attempted robberies occured in 1981 compared to none in 1980 and 53 assaults or attempted assaults occurred in 1981, compared to 43 in 1980. Arson, larceny and motor vehicle theft all declined in the past year.

"Since the implementation of the Crime Prevention Pays Program in 1975, the statistics showed an accelerated crime rate in 1977, 1978 and 1979 due to the program's encouragement to report crime. The crime rate began decreasing in 1980 and 81.

"Although there were some increases in serious crimes, the preventative measures are ongoing such as lighting, phones and the Rape Prevention Task Force," Holmes said.

"There are two basic elements of every crime, you either have to have the desire or the opportunity has to exist to commit a crime. Crime prevention works on taking away the opportunity," Holmes said.

Students can learn about crime prevention by obtaining brochures from the Department of Public Safety or by requesting dormitory talks on a wide range of topics, he said.

The major thrust of the Crime Prevention Program "is aimed at assisting the community in developing preventative measures to reduce their risk potential of becoming a victim of crime activity," Holmes said.

One way of cutting risk "is by continually making the public aware of their risk potential and encouraging them to participate in preventative programs," he said.

Dukakis against cigarette tax to boost student financial aid

BY MICHAEL FOLEY
Collegian Staff

Gubernatorial candidate Michael Dukakis said yesterday he could not support a 5 cent tax on cigarettes that could raise $28 million for financial aid to students, at a fundraiser for Sen. John Olver (D-Amherst) in the Hilton Hotel in Northampton.

The cigarette tax bill was filed by Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst.

Dukakis declined to comment on a state higher education budget increase recommended by the state Board of Regents, the board which governs higher education in Massachusetts.

"We are going to try to get it through," said Olver after being told of Dukakis' objection to the cigarette tax bill. Olver said he and Dukakis had not discussed the bill.

Olver said he had been looking for other ways to raise student financial aid money after lobbying against the bill in the senate clouded the bill's future.

"Obviously there has been strong lobbying against it (the bill)," he said. "We have to seek other ways to get that money."

"One way or another a financial aid bill is critically important to a knowledge based economy," he said.

Dukakis said he would like to see more financial aid coming from the federal government.

Dukakis would not comment on the Board of Regents' recommendation that the state public higher education budget be increased by $49.6 million. The regent's request for a 12 percent overall budget increase including $10 million for financial aid must be reviewed by the new governor in January before going to the legislature for passage in the spring.

Gubernatorial candidate Michael Dukakis talks to reporters in Northampton on the steps of the Hampshire County Courthouse.

"As for the system of public higher education," said Dukakis, "our economy depends to a great extent on what we do with higher education."

Speaking to a group of businessmen, politicians and campaign workers at the $50-a-plate luncheon, Dukakis said the most important issue is boosting the economy and getting people back to work.

The economy is moving away from heavy industry towards high technology, said

Navy to relocate ships to reduce vulnerability

WASHINGTON (AP) — Navy Secretary John Lehman said yesterday the Navy plans to disperse its growing fleet to more ports in the United States to reduce its vulnerability.

"You don't want to provide too lucrative a target" by continuing to concentrate the fleet in a limited number of home bases such as San Diego, Calif., and Norfolk, Va., Lehman said in an interview.

A major concern, along with protecting warships from being bottled up or destroyed, is to protect what he called the "industrial base" which supports the fleet, including repair yards, piers and supply depots.

Lehman said, "We are pretty confident we will get to a 600- ship Navy" by 1989. This will mean increase of about 140 ships over the next seven years, Lehman said.

What the Navy calls "a strategic dispersal" program already has been set in motion with decisions to base a carrier task force in the Puget Sound area of Washington state and to "homeport" the nuclear-powered cruiser California in the San Francisco Bay area. Both intentions have been announced locally. Also, the Navy has made known plans to station two reserve frigates in the New York area.

El Salvador said to be ignoring human rights

WASHINGTON (AP) — A senior Pentagon official will tell government leaders in El Salvador that it will be difficult to support further U.S. aid unless they stop brutalizing their political opponents, a Reagan administration source said yesterday.

Fred C. Ikle, undersecretary of defense for policy "will lay it on the Salvadorans good and hard that people disappearing is ruinous to our desire to help" the Salvadoran government put down a leftist insurgency, said the source, who declined to be identified.

Congress requires the Reagan administration to certify every six months that the Salvadoran government is making progress on its human rights record if U.S. military and economic aid is to continue.

Noting that some 21 people are reported to have disappeared in El Salvador in recent weeks, the Pentagon official said, "This just won't do."

"We're not living in the era of the Spanish Inquisition," the administration source said.

"They can't do that sort of thing and expect us to help them."

The source denied that Ikle had been sent to El Salvador specifically to deliver a face-to-face warning to government officials in San Salvador.

Hospital cocaine is dangerous leading medicine journal says

BOSTON — Cocaine, known to have caused mental aberrations through recreational use, can also cause hallucinations and paranoia when used in hospitals in its liquid painkiller form, doctors warn.

Liquid cocaine is widely used as a surface anesthetic, and the physicians described a case of "cocaine psychosis" in today's edition of New England Journal of Medicine. They said they hoped other medical people would become aware of this potential hazard of the drug.

Severe mental problems have been reported among recreational users of cocaine but "have not been observed in a controlled laboratory setting," wrote the physicians, Drs. Lynna M. Lesko of Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York, Marian W. Fischman of the University of Chicago, and Javaid I. Javaid and John M. Davis of the Illinois State Psychiatric Institute.

State aid to private schools detrimental to all education

BOSTON — Passage of a proposed constitutional amendment on Tuesday's election ballot permitting state aid to private schools would hurt both public and private education, Education Commissioner John H. Lawson said yesterday.

"First, we have to recognize that any diversion of public funds to private school students comes at the expense of the great majority of our children," Lawson said at a news conference.

"The public schools of Massachusetts educate approximately 89 percent of eligible school age children in the commonwealth and are open to all children."

In addition, he said that "the strength of private education lies in the independence of the schools.

Vermont Governor Snelling blocks nuclear fuel shipment

MONTPELIER, Vt. — The president of the Nuclear Assurance Corp. said he will abide by Gov. Richard Snelling's demand that no further shipments of nuclear fuel be trucked through Vermont.

Paul Schutt, whose company had been transporting the Canadian cargo through Vermont en route to South Carolina, said he doesn't blame Snelling for blocking the shipments, even though it could cost his firm $50,000 a year in profits.

"My opinion is that the governor acted completely properly," Schutt said in a telephone interview from his Atlanta, Ga., office. "I don't blame him for shutting us down. He has got my agreement that I'm not going to bring it through."

Senate refuses apology for Olver endorsement

By ANNE CHAPMAN
and GILLIAN NEWSON
Collegian Correspondents

As Republican Candidate James Tripp sat in the rear of last night's Student Government Association (SGA) meeting, the student senate at the University of Massachusetts voted not to apologize to Tripp for their endorsement of Senator John Olver at last week's meeting.

Much heated debate occured over whether the Senate should apologize because the endorsement of Olver was based on mistatements by SGA President Jim Murphy. "Many students were upset by the mistatements made by Murphy, said Joe Armstrong, SGA senator.

Tripp actually did appear at UMass but students were led to believe that he had not. Those statements greatly swayed the decisions of senators," said Joe Armstrong.

Tripp said to Collegian correspondent Newson that, "There is a rumor that Sharon Davies is deliberately trying to draw out the meeting so that the senators will leave and they'll lose quorum for the vote."

Chris Sullivan in debate said "Remember Jim Tripp told the SGA, 'we're lackeys riding on Olvers campaign.'"

Tripp denied saying this.

Although Murphy admitted he was wrong in stating that Tripp had never appeared on campus, he refused to apologize.

"I will admit I was wrong but I will not apologize. I will consider it a vote of no confidence if this motion passes," said Murphy.

"The Senate has no right to apologize for what I say," he said.

Tripp, who never actually spoke to the Senate, appeared only to answer questions posed by the Senate.

"I don't want this to turn into political football," said Tripp before the debate.

Student Senators said the endorsement of Olver was not a fair representation of the Senate. SGA Senator Joe Armstrong said, "I requested Tripp to attend the meeting to show that there were some students who did not advocate the endorsement."

"I don't go for political endorsements because they can't be truly representative. Usually there are ulterior motives involved and I don't think it is in the best interests of the University," Tripp said.

"I think it is the Senate's responsibility to express opinions. The state has been looking down on UMass for a long time for not doing it (expressing opinions). "If you think about it, who gets shit on the most? The students. Why? Because they don't vote," said Murphy.

Tripp said he was disappointed in Murphy for making statements about him that appeared to be fully investigated.

"The senators made people believe that it had been investigated," said Tripp.

Many senators expressed disapproval about the vote not to apologize and individually approached him after the meeting.

On other matters, the Senate approved a motion to endorse question three on the ballot. Question three deals with the building of nuclear plants and disposal of low level radioactive waste. If passed, this will give the voters more choice in these matters.

The Senate also allocated $750 to send several UMass students to an anti-Ku Klux Klan rally held in Washington D.C.

Student fees pay for UMass football and basketball teams

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

[Editor's Note: This is the third of four articles on the athletic scholarship program at the University of Massachusetts.]

Despite what many people think, the football and other teams at the University of Massachusetts do not make money. Instead, these teams are funded by student fees.

Any of the revenues that the teams collect go to fund athletic scholarships, said Al Rufe, assistant director of athletics and financial manager of the athletic accounts.

For example, all expenses of the football team — uniforms, travel, food, etc. — are paid by the $59 annual student athletic fee. The stadium bond is also paid by the student fee, as are the salaries of ticket sellers and security people required because of the admission charge. Yet all revenues from the ticket sales and television broadcasts are used for athletic scholarships, Rufe said.

Rufe stressed student fee money does not go directly to scholarships.

"Our philosophy has been not to use student fees for scholarships. That's the system that's been set up for the twenty years I've been here, maybe longer," he said.

Rufe said that the most obvious areas associated with income — ticket printing costs and advertising expenses — are charged to other income areas than student fees. Alumni donation money is used to pay some of these expenses, he said.

The footbal and basketball team do generate a great deal of revenue, however. Football ticket sales made $67,522 last year, and basketball tickets totalled $17,133, Rufe said.

In addition, telecasts of football games in the late 70's generated almost a million dollars in six years. Some of this money — $460,000 — is still held by the department. Rufe noted that he used some of the television money from another holding account last year, but the balance of the "television football revenue" account has not changed since 1980. Interest from the telecast money, which is invested, is combined with student fee money to pay team expenses.

The renovation of Curry Hicks is another example of student funds being used to fund athletics.

Recently, there have been proposals to alter the current system of funding used by the Athletic Department.

The current proposal for the Curry Hicks Cage renovation did not start with a student fee-based plan. Originally, plans had been to raise funds from alumni.

In July, however, the UMass President's Office suggested that the only reasonable option to fund the proposal would be a fee of about $20 per student per year.

Dallas Darland, director of development at UMass, agreed with the suggestion that the alumnus might not be able to support such a large project.

"We're simply not ready for that yet," said Darland. "The track record is simply not there."

Dean of Athletics David Bischoff noted in late August that a student fee was not the only option. At that time, he suggested that students be charged a one dollar admission fee to attend games in the cage, with the proceeds used to pay for the Cage instead of scholarships. Currently, UMass students attend games at no charge because they pay the $59 Athletic Fee each year.

Service awards presented for contributions to students at University Convocation

By TIM MACPHEE
Collegian Staff

Distinguished Service Awards were presented yesterday to six recipients in recognition of outstanding contributions to students and the University of Massachusetts community. The awards were distributed before an audience of about 250 on the occasion of the Second Annual Student Affairs Convocation at the Campus Center.

Versatility, integrity and pride were the themes of the Convocation and were encompassed in a speech which highlighted past accomplishments of University students, by Student Government Association (SGA) president Jim Murphy.

Vice Chancellor Dennis Madson praised Student Affairs for their strong commitment to cooperation which distinguishes them from other groups at the University.

"Our message is clear, Madson said, "Working together we can make our jobs easier and help students enjoy their experiences at the University of Massachusetts."

Chancellor Joseph Duffey linked the group to the happiness of students.

"One of the characteristics of the Amherst campus that drew me to it was the high level of satisfaction students have had here. The credit goes to you," he said.

Duffey also said that due to the new challenges students face with finances and career outlooks that students today can't afford to make mistakes.

He noted how Student Affairs has helped students, adding, "Student affairs has played a vital role in this University."

Following the speeches, Wayne Burns and Brad Kaufman amused the crowd with their off-beat senses of humor and first-rate musical ability, relaxing the audience before the more serious presentations that followed.

John Furbish, the graduate student responsible for acquiring the mural of UMass, which is displayed at the base of the escalators in the Campus Center received recognition for his part in acquiring this and other works for the Campus Center.

For her role in publishing the scheduling booklet, and "dedication to getting the job done," Dianne Kelly who works in the scheduling office, was honored.

Undergraduate winner John Meunier was praised for his origination of the Distinguished Teacher Award, and his service to the SGA.

For her reorganization plan of dorm security, 1973 UMass graduate Carol Radzik was honored.

The coordinator of the Commuter Collective, Jose Tolson was awarded for his creative programming, such as his commuter newsletter.

Finally, the director of the Student Union Craft Shop, Penny Worman was honored for her dedication to students. She was nominated for the award by more than 100 students.

A wine and cheese reception followed the convocation.

Election day approaches with a variety of ballot questions

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts voters will be choosing candidates in Tuesday's election as well as casting ballots on at least six referendum questions which include issues such as public aid to private schools, the bottle bill, a nuclear freeze, radioactive waste disposal and the death penalty.

In Amherst and Northampton, question six tackles the issue of defense versus social services spending and is nonbinding, as are most of the referenda. This "Jobs for Peace" question asks voters if they are in favor of funneling funds from defense spending to be used for education, public transportation, health care and other human services.

Question one, sponsored primarily by the Massachusetts Catholic Conference, is a proposal which would amend the state constitution and allow public aid to private school students. The amendment could affect more than 150,000 private and parochial school students and is opposed by more than 24 organizations including the Massachusetts Teacher's Association.

Question two, which would also amend the state constitution, would allow the legislature to reinstate the death penalty on the conviction of crimes to be specified by future laws.

Max Stern, a member of the Committee Against Restoration of the Death Penalty said Massachusetts has already had three centuries of tragic experience with the death penalty; hundreds were executed, invariably the poor and the immigrant. History records the notorious executions of innocent people, he said.

State Rep. Michael F. Flaherty, D-Boston, said, "The value of human life is best protected by clear punishment for those who would destroy it. It will prevent convicted murderers from killing again, he said.

Question three would create a state law prohibiting the construction of any nuclear power plant or disposal plans for low-level radioactive waste without the proposal having first met new stricter standards and site approval by voters in a special referendum.

Question four will end the ten year dispute on the Bottle bill.

"The Bottle Bill will clean up our environment and create jobs. The public should not be fooled into repealing the legislation. Massachusetts needs it," Michael S. Dukakis, former gov. and the Democratic candidate for governor this year said in a position paper issued by his re-election campaign.

"Gov. Edward King said it would mean increased costs to consumers and would be an "unnecessary intrusion by government in the marketplace."

Question five asks whether voters wish the Secretary of the Commonwealth to inform the President and Congress that the people of Massachusetts support a nuclear weapons moratorium.

Access to terminals is a difficult problem for the COINS major

By ELLEN M. RYDER
Collegian Correspondent

There is a unique breed of University of Massachusetts student called COINS majors, haunting the computer terminals at the Graduate Research Center like nervous nightowls, sweating over programs until the wee hours of the morning, plugging into a huge brain every day and tapping the knowledge in it.

COINS, an acronym for Computer and Information Science, is a program that has long been restricted to UMass graduate students. In 1979, the program was approved for undergraduates, and since has been increasing in popularity.

Despite the inconvenience of too few terminals, the reaction to the COINS program is generally favorable.

According to Johnna Klukas, a junior from Hudson, the first two years of a COINS major consist of programming courses. These courses promote "computer literacy," an understanding of the "languages" with which to use a computer.

"The COINS program here is very good," she said. "You get a lot of programming experience, a good theoretical background, and you learn several programming languages."

Recently the state Board of Regents of Higher Education recommended a $200,000 increase to accomodate the students who must use computers. The money, if approved, would purchase and install new terminals.

"I think that COINS will need the money because it's greatly expanding," said Tonya Aitken, a freshman from Montague.

"Sometimes I've spent three to four hours, at least, just waiting to get on a terminal," said Scott Bradley, an engineering major. "They need more (terminals) because... there just aren't enough terminals available."

Klukas tries a different tack to gain access to the computer.

"I usually go down really early in the morning," she said. "It's a pain having to get up a t 5:00 in the morning, being a COINS major."

"Last semester," said Klukas, "one course I had averaged forty hours a week."

"I think (the COINS major) is on the same par as an engineering program," she said. "Where computers are so important now, it's like sending a doctor from medical school to a job."

Asked if they felt the program could be bettered, Klukas could offer no suggestions. She praised the quality of the faculty and the COINS program. Fine shared her attitude, but had some reservations.

Dukakis. "If that is true, it is states like Massachusetts that will show leadership to the rest of the country," he said.

"In Massachusetts we must link education with jobs, business and government," he said. "Our future depends on it."

"People should be able to get a job and achieve the best that is in them," Dukakis said.

"I see the next few years as a great opportunity to bring people together. I see a need for political leaders to build coalitions," he said. He cited the turbulent times of the Vietnam era and Watergate as a period that set factions of society fighting against each other.

"I think we've learned a great deal in the last eight years," he said.

Before the luncheon Dukakis stopped for a five minute news conference on the steps of the Hampshire County Courthouse in Northampton where he endorsed Michael Ryan, the Democratic candidate for district attorney who is running against incumbent Tom Simons.

"I don't remember a time when people were more fearful and more unhappy," said Dukakis. "Next to the economy and jobs for the community, crime is the most important issue in this state."

Acquaintance rape is very common on college campuses," Roach said. Therefore she recommends being careful of the company you keep on Halloween night.

Roach also recommends limiting alcohol and drug intake in order to maintain awareness during Halloween.

"People go to big parties and don't know anyone. Attackers expect a passive victim when drugs and alcohol are consumed. An increase in drinking creates an atmosphere in which things can happen because your defenses are down," she said.

In order to increase women's awareness on Halloween weekend the well-received rape forum held in 1981 will be held again this year by the Educator/Advocate Program of the Everywoman's Center on a walk-in basis. The forum will provide safety tips for women and general information about sexual assault from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. today in the Campus Center, in room 802 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. tomorrow in the Campus Center, room 801.

Moore said when he was appointed in February by Koffler that he knew the search would last past his graduation.

"When I was appointed it was certain it would last through the next year," Moore said.

"This was done before," Moore said, noting that a precedent was established when a representative for the students remained on the search committee for vice chancellor of student affairs. Dennis Madson was eventually chosen.

Entomology research associate wins award

By ANNE MCCRORY
Collegian Correspondent

Dr. Bernard D. Roitberg, research associate of the Entomology Department at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, is the recipient of the 1982 Entomological Society of America, Eastern Branch Graduate Student Award.

Dr. Roitberg won the award for his research on the "behavior of the apple maggot fly." Performed in conjunction with Professor Prokopy of the Entomology Department, experiments included "simulation models" of the fly's search for food, and field and lab work.

The research is "on going," said Roitberg, and is now funded by the National Science Foundation.

"I am honored to get the award," said Roitberg. He cited enjoyment as his principle motivation for performing research.

Also the recipient of the University of Massachusetts Graduate Fellowship Award, Dr. Roitberg attained his Ph.D. in 1982 after four years of graduate study in Amherst. He received his M.S. in 1977 from the University of British Columbia and his B.S. in 1975 from Simon Fraser University.

Protest over welfare checks show errors

BOSTON (AP) — Demanding jobs and criticizing computer checks of welfare recipients' bank accounts, about 35 protesters marched on the state Welfare Department offices Wednesday.

"The current system is based on the notion that recipients are guilty until proven innocent," said welfare advocate Janet Diamond, criticizing the state's program of matching welfare rolls with bank accounts.

In recent months Massachusetts officials have turned up 280 welfare recipients with more than $20,000 in the bank, including six with more than $100,000 in banks. The limitations range from $250 for a single person on general relief to $3,000 per household for food stamps.

With babies in strollers and children carrying signs, the protesters left the tent city on Boston Common, erected as part of a nationwide 10-day protest of the president's economic and social policies, shouting, "Two, four, six, eight, we want jobs and we won't wait."

The group, including welfare mothers and advocates, crowded into a fifth-floor corridor outside the office of Welfare Commissioner Thomas Spirito, who is out of town, a spokesman said.

Ms. Diamond, spokesman for the Coalition For Basic Human Needs, shouted into a bullhorn, demanding jobs and criticizing what she called "automatic" terminations of welfare aid under the state's new program of matching welfare rolls with bank accounts. She charged the program has a 15 percent error rate.

The state chapter of the National Assocaiton of Social Workers also joined the protest. In a written statement, Executive Director Carol Brill criticized the focus on recipient fraud when, she said, "the real ripoff of the welfare system is being perpetrated by independent vendors, such as doctors and pharmacists, hospitals, institutions and businesses."

The matches have shown, Ms. Diamond added, that "94 percent are doing nothing wrong."

Pressed into a hallway corner, Deputy Commissioner Joseph Gallant acknowleged the probability of a 15 percent error rate, but said the state is taking action to get greater accuracy.

On the charge that matches prompt "automatic terminations," Gallant said recipients are notified of the bank match and have 10 days to appeal. If an appeal is lodged, benefits continue, he added.

"They terrify people with this," Ms. Diamond countered.

The protesters also presented officials with job applications and demanded a list of jobs available through the state's new Work and Training Program.

Robert Cornetta, department special project director, explained 5 percent of the jobs of certain agencies that provide services under state contracts are to be filled by recipients, under an executive order. While about 250 such jobs have been pinpointed, Cornetta said the state has only documented filling two of them. "We know there are more than that," he added, blaming the lack of current statistics on a manpower shortage.

The Work and Training Program has placed more than 2,000 people in jobs since last spring, and about 15,000 are enrolled in job searches.

Human Rights battle starts at home

By SATYA GABRIEL
Special to Black Affairs

I grew up in the backwaters of the deep South, and tradition has it, in that dying part of America, that it is possible for one group of human beings to abuse another group for a very long time. If its done right. And you can, if you work at it, get folks who are abused to learn to blame their misfortune on something or someone other than the abusers.

Commentary

But there is always a danger that an alternative vision will ease into the community of those who have been abused and threaten the social harmony. This threat can come in the form of "outside agitators" from far-flung places such as Chicago, Illinois or Boston, Massachusetts. The way to stop these outsiders is to be ever vigilant against cars with strange license plates, "commie" bumper stickers (such as those calling for PEACE NOW), or individuals who "don't look right."

In countries such as El Salvador and South Africa the social harmony has been disturbed. Outside agitators, such as the commie Cubans have played a role. No doubt about it. Reagan got that one right. For years the folks of El Salvador and South Africa have lived under the boot of fascist regimes. A lot of folks have been abused, there and elsewhere in ways that would make me sick just to mention. Others have been murdered or have "disappeared." These are not nice places to have been born on the "wrong side" of the tracks and most of the people in those places were and are born on the wrong side.

Human rights (including the right to a job and to medical care) are still a problem in the U.S.A., but we've made a lot of progress over the last two hundred years.

Spreading that progress to the backwater areas of the globe, to places which are virtually nothing more than satellites of Northamerican corporations, may take a long time. It may take a lot of both outside and inside agitation.

The struggle over human rights is built upon values that most Americans share, despite the way our government has placed itself in a postion of propping up brutal regimes. How can Ronald Reagan preach to the Soviet Union about Poland while, at the same time, embracing South Africa as "our closest friend in Africa?"

It is time to build a new American consensus based on the struggle for human rights, both here and abroad. The best weapon against tyranny is not MX missiles or trident submarines, but honesty.

If our nation is to uphold the values of human rights then it must begin within its own empire.

If the government of the United States does not push for fundamental change in nations such as South Africa and El Salvador, then it will not only lose any weight of argument against the violation of human rights in those nations, such as Poland, which lie outside its empire, but the U.S. government will also be sealing the destinies of thousands of human beings to the inevitability of bloody revolutions.

Jim Thorpe recalled for greatness

BY JAMES R. WILLIAMS
Collegian Correspondent

Reflect for a moment on the great athletes of both past and present. Renaldo Nehemiah, the great hurdler, comes to mind. Pele, Joe Willie Namath, Alberto Salazar, Bobby Orr, and Muhammed Ali all have a claim to fame.

How about Henry (Hank) Aaron, the man who hit more home runs than anyone in the history of American baseball? Or Bjorn Borg the agile tennis star who won an unprecedented five consecutive Wimbleton tournaments?

And how can we forget Julius Erving, the most flamboyant player ever to play basketball in the opinion of many sports fans? The list is endless. Many haven't been mentioned. Many have been forgotten. Yet who is the greatest of all time? This label has often been pinned on Jim Thorpe.

Jim Thorpe was clearly a "natural" when it came to athletics. He was famous mostly for football, baseball and track and field. He played professionally in both football and baseball.

Yet whatever sport he engaged in, whether it was hockey, skiing, boxing, baseball, or table tennis, Thorpe always seemed to excel. He was blessed with an athletic ability that many of us can only dream of.

Thorpe's life did not bring him the happiness that many believe should come with such fame. Instead his lifestyle often sank him into deep depression. This eventually led to a heavy drinking problem.

Thorpe made the U.S. Olympic Team in 1912. the games were held in Stockholm, Sweden. In these games Thorpe achieved a feat never equalled. He was the only person in history to win both the decathlon and penthalon (long jump, javelin, 200 meters, discus, and 1,500 meters). Yet the gold medals awarded to Thorpe for those achievements were soon to be repossessed.

Why was Jim Thorpe stripped of the medals which many believe were deservingly his? The official reason listed is that during the summers of 1909 and 1910, Thorpe received money for playing semi-pro baseball.

Many collegians indulged in this practice yet they would go under alias names. Thorpe, however, used his real name. Thus this made him ineligible for any further amateur competition, including the Olympic Games.

Thorpe's medals were handed over to the runner-ups of both events (Ferdinand Bie of Norway (pentathlon) and Hugo Wieslander of Sweden (decathlon)). Thus began a long struggle to reagain possession of the medals which many believed were rightfully Jim's. The battle would span seventy years. But during this span Jim Thorpe passed away, on March 28, 1953, with the sullen memories of his Olympic tragedy.

Thorpe was buried in a town named after him in Pennsylvania. His third wife handled the burial arrangements. Yet Thorpe's children believed that his soul would never rest until he was buried in Oklahoma, his native state. Now that they have aided in the restoration of their father's Olympic medals, his children will continue to fight for his burial rights, their final battle in a long and disturbing war.

The tragedies in the life of this man are saddening. Yet his athletic accomplishments are something to behold. Jim Thorpe was named the "Athlete of the Half-Century" by Associated Press. On his tombstone is inscribed, "Sir, you are the Greatest Athlete in the World." Muhammed Ali may often brag that he is "The Greatest of All Time", yet in the eyes of many, only one person can make this claim. When it comes to athletic ability Jim Thorpe alone is at the top of the throne. He is the "Greatest of All Time."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The Cage's full-court press

Knapp stole the ball, and the administration leads the students 3-0 at the end of the first quarter.

It looks like a twenty dollar blooper, in the form of a Curry Hicks Cage fee, will be lobbed our way by the Bureaucracy. David Knapp, the well known 5'10" center for the administration team, is apparently not concerned that many on the opposing team do not want to play.

Now don't get me wrong. I have gone to UMass basketball games and the Cage is an acoustical disaster, with a lousy floor. The team does deserve better. But it is absolutely outrageous for us to have to pay for it. All of our fees will probably be going up this year. Why should we have to pay yet another one. This could be precedent setting. Perhaps we will soon have a "repair the library fee," a "repair the garage fee," an "expand Whitmore fee," and a "higher prices at the textbook annex fee" so that the Campus Center and Food Service can be bailed out.

The administration argument goes something like this: A constant source of revenue is needed to pay the interest on the bonds, and the bonds themselves. This is the only way the bonds are salable, because whoever buys them needs to know that they will recoup their investment. The bonds must be sold through the Building Authority. The Building Authority was created to fund recreational facilities, and those that feed and house students. Ultimatly the credit of the Commonwealth stands behind them.

While this method may be the quickest, it is not the only way. 460,000 dollars from past TV revenue is still available. This is supposed to be used for athletic scholarships. But these are already funded: $65,000 per year from the alumni, $244,000 from the university, and $100-200,000 a year from other sources. Even taking the low number that comes out to be $409,000. The projected scholarship figures for 1982 were $376,000. The actual usage was $317,528. That leaves a safety margin of close to 100,000 dollars.

The renovation of the Cage would be in two stages. Stage one would be accoustical doctoring and a new floor. This would cost about one million dollars. Stage two would be new seating. The $460,000 should go towards whatever it can, while more creative ways of financing are looked at. Perhaps team leader Knapp, instead of stuffing students through the hoop with dunks like: "If you don't want it renovated, if you don't want a basketball team we can be proud of, then we can chuck the whole proposal." We should take on some more challenging opposition. This might include the feared state wide heavies, the State House Legislatures. I am sure he would foul out quickly. A better team for him to take on might be the Bambling Regents. They have been some help in the past with funding. Perhaps if he ran some plays by them we could get something.

The most disturbing thing about this is Knapp's lack of interest as to what those of us who have to pay this fee feel. We are far easier to pick on then the regents or the State. How much do they care about Basketball at UMass? Apparently not much. For this to be overcome we need to generate some political power and fancy footwork. Good teamwork and a full court press could ensure a second quarter pull out. Got a Basketball Jones?

Police don't care about some crimes

The actions of the police at the recent Ku Klux Klan rally in Boston leave many questions unanswered about police brutality. These are questions that must be dealt with since the actions at the Boston rally were not isolated incidents.

Police defended their presence at the march by stating that they were there "to preserve public order and the safety of all present." Perhaps that was a valid statement. After all, Klan Imperial Wizard Bill Wilkinson had been pelted with eggs and assaulted on a television show earlier in the week. There certainly had to be some concern over the safety of a group like the KKK marching in a city as racially tense as Boston.

Richard Nangle

During the march, about 1,000 people charged the Klan with the intent of causing physical harm to the members. But only after Klansmen were rounded up by police and escorted away for their own protection did the violence begin. According to published reports, police on horseback and on foot rode into the crowd swinging clubs, and fists causing injuries.

One injured person, an amateur photographer, Mitchell Russo, said an officer "walked six feet over to me and punched me in the face. My camera was covered with blood." Russo received 14 stitches at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Another injured person Linda Giles, a criminal lawyer, said she was standing quietly in the crowd when a policeman sprayed mace in her face "at point-blank range." Seconds later she was clubbed and lost consciousness. She received 15 stitches. "I hate to use a cliche, but it was police brutality," she said. "They completely overreacted."

Well I don't mind using a cliche where a cliche is merited. And what happened in downtown Boston Saturday was clearly police brutality. The police randomly attacked individuals who had come to the march. Remember, this was after the Klan had already been carted away. Sure the cops were pelted with rocks during the melee as their commissioner claimed. Could anyone really expect the crowd to take such abuse without retaliation?

This isn't the first time the police have grossly misused their badges. At a spring festival at Boston University last spring police pulled the plug on the rock band The Stompers during their final song. When a few members of the audience showed their distress over this police charged them and, according to published reports, indiscriminately beat some of them.

Sometimes police brutality can have greater consequences than stitches. During the summer, the Boston media reported that over a dozen Chelsea and Everett police officers teamed up to beat on a group of people in a Chelsea bar at about 4:00 in the morning. The fracus left one man dead. The fight apparently started because a patron in the bar was having an argument with one of the officers. Alledgedly the officer then went home and called his co-workers in a costly act of revenge.

Four of the officers were indicted for murder. Don't forget that not a single police officer in the history of the United States has ever been convicted of murder while on the job. That's one of the facts you don't learn in U.S. History class. The chances of these officers ever spending a day in prison for murder are virtually nonexistent.

Police brutality isn't always a group effort either. A friend of mine was confronted by an officer in front of The Channel in Boston two weeks ago before the Public Image Ltd. show. He believes he was harrassed because of the punk rock clothes he had on. When he asked the officer why he was being asked to show identification the officer responded by asking someone at the ticket desk if there was "a room where I can be alone with this guy."

The officer forcibly brought my friend into the room and proceeded to give him a hard elbow to the temple. "Why did you hit me?" the victim inquired. "Hit you? You must be hallucinating," the officer replied.

According to his physician, the eardrum was punctured and he only has a nine out of ten chance to regain his hearing in that ear. The officer who hit him is still out on the street. In fact it's a good bet that a large majority of the police officers who have engaged in this type of activity are still on the street getting paid by you and me to protect us.

They'll also stay on the street until someone has the guts to stand up and demand an end to abuse of power by police. Solutions for group beatings should include restricting the methods a police officer can use to maintain order.

But when one individual gets physically assaulted by one officer there is no easy solution. Many times police will back each other up because there are often no witnesses in these kinds of assaults. In any case, something has to be done because we've condoned police brutality for too long.

My friend tried to file a complaint after he was let out of protective custody the next day. "Oh, we like to handle these things internally," he was told by the officer at the front desk of the station. He decided to file anyway, not that it will do him any good. The damage has been done and it appears that no one really cares.

Clearing the fizz on the Bottle Bill

John H. Webster's letter of October 14th made several misleading statements concerning the Bottle Bill which I would like to clarify.

Quote: ". . .bottles and cans make up only 12% of the litter problem. . ."

Clarification: This statistic is derived by counting each piece of litter as equal, i.e., a match stick is as important as a bottle or can. If litter is measured by volume (a more appropriate criterion), containers account for 60% of all litter. The fact is, that besides being the most prevalent form of litter, container litter is also the most visible, unsightly, and dangerous. (When was the last time you cut your foot on a match stick?) In addition, a match stick decomposes almost immediately, while an aluminum can remains intact for 140 years, and a bottle indefinitely.

Quote: ". . . it will raise your taxes."

Elaine M. Coveney

Clarification: Gov. King's Task Force has predicted a cut in government spending of $4.9 million due to reduced solid waste processing. In Michigan, the Bottle Bill state most like Massachusetts, the decrease in solid waste is saving local governments $15 million annually.

Quote: "You'll also pay dangerous price increases when you go to buy soda or beer at the store. . ."

Clarification: According to Gov. King's Task Force, implementation of the Massachusetts Bottle Law will lead to a 5% decline in beverage prices over the long run; this is because over half the cost of producing a can of beer goes for the can itself. Never the less, the industry seems to be eager to have its way no matter what the cost to consumers. In Michigan and Maine, charges have been filed against distributors for fixing prices in an effort to discredit those states' Bottle laws.

Finally, Mr. Webster claims that a Bottle Law will aggravate unemployment and impact negatively on our water supply. As far as jobs go, Gov. King's Task Force estimates an increase of 2355 jobs as a result of the Bottle Bill. Michigan has gained 4646 jobs since implementing its law; New York's Office of Development Planning has predicted 5,000-6,000 new jobs. Indeed, it is ironic that the beverage industry professes so much concern about unemployment in view of its massive job cuts in non-Bottle Bill states. It is also ironic that the industry is troubled about water depletion, since an EPA study found that it takes roughly 444 ounces of water to deliver 12 ounces of beer in a one-way bottle, compared to only 184 ounces in a refillable bottle used 10 times (the national average). Mr. Webster warns that "Hundreds of millions of gallons of water will now be required to wash returned bottles and cans." — yet neglects to mention that whatever water is required for a refillable system, that amount will be 20% less than what is used with a non-refillable system.

I would like to urge voters to look not only at the "facts", but at the source of these "facts" before deciding about Referendum Question 4 on November 2nd. The statistics I have cited in this letter come from sources that do not have a vested interest in whether or not a Bottle Bill is passed — sources like the EPA, Gov. King's Task Force, Michigan's Dept. of Transportation, and New York's Office of Development Planning. On the other hand, the Voter Education Committee, of which Mr. Webster is chairman, is one and the same as the Political Action Committee, otherwise known as the fundraising arm for anti-Bottle Bill forces. These are the same people that the Boston Globe has dubbed "merchants of disinformation". These are also the same people responsible for the "Argument Against" the Bottle Bill in the 1982 "Information for Voters" guide — the last paragraph of which raised quite a controversy due to its misleading nature. (The paragraph was saved by the preceding statement: "...nor does the Commonwealth certify the accuracy or truth of any statement made in the arguments.")

Making responsible choices is always difficult, and this difficulty is heightened when special interest groups care little about the means used to achieve an end. The anti-Bottle Bill forces would like to prevent the Massachusetts Bottle Law from taking effect in January; judging from its popularity in other states, they would have a difficult time repealing it once in effect. So, please — look at the real facts before you vote on November 2nd; and if you'd like the opinion of someone who's been there, ask the people of Vermont. 93% of them want Vermont's Bottle Law to stay.

Life beyond comic strips

To the Editor:

In regard to Mark Rollins' "comic" strip of October 25, I can see why you may complain about the quality of education at the University: obviously you aren't getting one. If your feeble attempts at satire and sarcasm are an indication of your intelligence, I doubt that you will have the privilege of earning a graduation gown to use when working under your car. I suggest you invest in a pair of coveralls.

James A. MacDonald
Amherst

Mark Rollins, in a rebuttal to this letter, writes:

I am a second year graduate student studying industrial microbiology. I hold a bachelor's degree from UMass in environmental health.

Since I intend to collect one or two more graduation gowns I see no problem in using the first one as a smock. After all, what else can you do with two or three graduation gowns?

Student Senate's actions in Olvers endorsement explained

To the Editor:

In response to comments made to the Collegian by Jim Tripp, candidate for state Senator, in last Friday's edition, I wish to make the following points:

1. Senator Olver has proven himself deserving of students' approval and endorsement time and time again. You, however, have shown us little in that regard. While I will admit error in having thought that you have ignored the campus entirely, it remains accurate to state that you have made no real effort to address the needs of a student constituency. It would be more productive for you to chalk this one up to experience, and consider the student vote, should you decide to try again someday.

2. The Senate has a right to endorse anyone or anything at any time. This right is covered under the First amendment of the US Constituion. Furthermore, the Senate has an absolute responsibility to maximize students' influence in any way it can. As you are a former senator yourself, one would think that you would be aware of this. As a class of consumers and voters, students have been largely ignored by politicians for far too long a time, and we can no longer afford to tolerate this lack of consideration. To that extent, the Senate's action was highly responsible in its efforts to represent students' best interests; and those who see it otherwise have little in the way of support for the concepts of student rights and student empowerment.

Jackson review provokes varied responses

To the Editor:

While I agree with Dean Ranzo's general conclusion in his review of the recent Joe Jackson concert that it was a ". . .good show with some interesting mystical concepts and fine musicianship," I find I must heavily criticize his protrayal of Joe Jackson as rude, arrogant, and audacious.

Far from being rude, in requesting that the audience not clap, Jackson was trying only to enhance the quality of his own performance — a performance which, as Mr. Ranzo points out, the crowd paid good money to see.

Mr. Ranzo's assertion that "I'll clap when I damn well want to," only serves to clearly illustrate his ignorance and self-centeredness. It was this type of inconsiderate arrogance that prompted Jackson to tell a group of adolescent Ted Nugent fans to "--- off."

Apparently desperate for points to criticize, Mr. Ranzo settles for an irrelevent comparison between Joe Jackson and Frank Perdue, and comments that Jackson's wardrobe would be more appropriate for 1946. Has Mr. Ranzo been to any other concerts recently? I would respectfully submit that Jackson's appearance is no more unusual than any other successful performer of this genre.

Before Mr. Ranzo attempts another review, I would hope that he would try to develop an appreciation for what the artist is actually trying to do rather than cultivating a fascination for the superficial and the irrelevent.

Robert D. Graves
Amherst

To the Editor:

October 25th's review by Dean Ranzo of the recent Joe Jackson concert at the Fine Arts Center demands a reply. Mr. Ranzo expresses annoyance with Mr. Jackson for "repeatedly and rudely" reprimanding the boorish members of the audience. It makes me wonder why some people "paid good money to see the show" only to shout and applaud no matter what was going on onstage. The "appropriate point" that Mr. Ranzo mentions (for applause) is after a song, not whenever the decibel level decreases or the tempo slows.

Furthermore, the cursing that Mr. Ranzo mentions originated with the audience. I could not believe my ears when a person shouted "go f--- yourself" at Mr. Jackson and the band who, incidentally, performed a fabulous show despite the puerility and outrageousness of the crowd.

Could the appellation "ZooMass" be deserved?

Kathryn A. Geoffrion
Sylvan

To the Editor:

If Joe Jackson ever plays a college crowd again it will be a miracle. I was embarrassed by the drunken rowdiness and ignorance of the UMass students last Thursday night. And Ranzo's review confirmed my belief that he, like all the rest, is just as big a loser.

Apparently neither the audience nor Ranzo can recognize or appreciate a serious musician, but rather it was interpreted as arrogance. Hey Ranzo, is quieting a crowd screaming "go fuck yourself" arrogant?

And for what it's worth when Jackson "lashed out at the crowd for clapping inappropriately off-beat" he was lashing out at their rather inappropriate clapping. He was trying to lead the audience by snapping his fingers — since when do you clap to swing?

Jackson in response to the crowd's ignorance said "I might as well be Ted Nugent." And he's right, that audience would never have known the difference.

Pro-choice must not stay silent

To the Editor:

This Saturday, October 30, there will be an anti-choice convention being held at the Sturbridge Hilton. The so-called "pro-life" movement is working to greatly restrict women's reproductive rights.

Reproductive freedom is a necessity if women are to have control over their lives and be equal and active members of society. This means that a woman must have control over the decision of whether or not she will have children. Women must have the right to safe and legal abortions, information and access to other forms of birth control, as well as the right of not being subject to forced sterilizaton.

While the anti-choice movement has the political power and money behind them, we must remember that they are the minority. 80% of this country is pro-choice. We cannot be the silent majority any longer; our voices must be heard.

An accomplished woodwind

BY JOHN C. JENKINS
Collegian Correspondent

The Faculty Woodwind Quintet performed Tuesday evening in Bezanson Recital Hall in a concert sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Department of Music and Dance. Appearing as a guest artist was Lynn Klock playing the saxophone and bass clarinet. The quintet is composed of Joanne Tanner, flute; Charles Lehrer, oboe; Laura Klock, horn; Joseph Contino, clarinet; and Frank Morelli, bassoon.

For their first concert of the season the quintet chose a range of diverse selections. They opened with Stein's "Sextet for Saxophone and Woodwind Quintet," which is a contemporary work written in three movements. The spotlight was shared by all the performers, with each benefiting from the individual moments. The saxophone's tone highlighted the piece without overwhelming it. This was well received by the audience.

The first half of the program closed with Carl Nielsen's "Kvintet, Op. 43." This selection, through its recurrent theme, enabled the listeners to experience the contrasts of its valleys and peaks. The third movement, "Praeludium," with its single hymn of eleven variations, established a dialogue between the instruments.

From this high point the audience was treated to a light and humorous finale, Janacek's "Mladi" (Youth). Characteristic of this piece was its concrete vitality and energy. Overall it was a fine performance by accomplished musicians.

The announced departure of Joseph Contino, clarinetist, from UMass and the quintet after his many years of involvement will create a gap not easily filled. We wish him well.

The next concert in the music department series will be November 5th when pianist Nadine Shank performs in Bowker Auditorium.

The UMass Faculty Woodwind Quintet performed Tuesday night at Bezanson Recital Hall.

Patrice Rushen

A quality pop product

STRAIGHT FROM THE HEART
(Elektra)
Patrice Rushen

By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Correspondent

Patrice Rushen's new album, Straight from the Heart, will bring the recognition she has long deserved. For years Patrice has been releasing album after album of quality jazz-funk, all of which is now either in the cut-out bins or relatively unavailable.

Straight from the Heart moves away from Patrice's jazzier licks to highlight her funk chops in some very classy tunes. This album is particularly unique to the top-40 pop music recorded by women today. Not only does Patrice co-produce the album, she writes, co-writes, sings, and plays guitar, percussion, and all the keyboards on every song of the album. In a male dominated industry, Patrice proves that a female artist need no longer be a mere voice fronting an otherwise entirely male inusical concept.

Straight from the Heart features the big hit of this past summer, "Forget Me Nots." I don't know why, but despite all the airplay this song has gotten, it hasn't grown stale. The funky bass line and the whole sentiment of the song gets me dancing every time I hear it. The remainder of the album is filled with great party music. "All We Need" and "Where There is Love" are two songs which really stand out in this respect.

Without taking any credit away from Patrice Rushen, it is important to take note of the rhythm section in her band. Freddie Washington's bass lines are amongst the clearest, crispest, and happiest I've heard in pop music. Despite the use of five different drummers on the album, Washington finds the perfect groove with each time keeper's particular style. To sum, Patrice Rushen has released a quality pop product; there's good music, good playing, and good singing. If you want to dance, make sure this album hits the turntable at your next party.

Creating a new tradition

BY PETER BENTTINEN
Collegian Correspondent

This is excellent Irish traditional music. This album was recorded and produced in Ireland in 1981 and made available to Americans shortly thereafter.

But what is Irish music anyway? Irish music has certain features and stylistic approaches not found in other musical adventures. Freedom is essential in Irish music. A joyous feeling is necessary to communicate the emotions involved for they are the songs of the people. Irish songs, or "airs" as they are called, use the concertina, which sounds like a harp, and the cittern, another stringed instrument, along with the guitar and mandolin. These instruments have unique sounds, antique and venerable, quite unlike most American and European instruments.

No system of notation is used in old Ireland. The music is transmitted orally, then improvised upon by the singer or leader of the group. Also, the music ends on only four notes of the scale.

This album is the Boys of the Lough's ninth. They use a potent combination of instrumental music and song which has kept them at the forefront of Irish music since they began playing together.

Side one starts out with a trio of lively jigs, two Irish ones and a Scottish one all combined into a group of fast moving tunes. Also on this side are a couple of reels, one written by the well-known but now deceased Paddy Kelly. "Dark Woman of the Glen" is a slow love song nicely combining the bass, the concertina and the guitar throughout. The side ends with another trio of songs combining a reel and some hornpipe work by the group.

Side two begins with two reels, the first one attributed to Eddie Kelly, a fiddle player from the west of Ireland and the second one a complicated piece for fiddle by Aly Bain. "The Tailor's Twist" next is a popular song in Ireland. "The Sea Apprentice" is the vocal song on side two, a delightful folksong. The last treasure on the album is a song from Walsh's Irish Popular Songs of 1847. It's about a young gent who has fallen in love with his brother's wife to be. If you love Irish music, or want to hear what it sounds like, this is a great album to start out with.

Intimate P.D.Q. Bach opens tonight at the FAC.

The New York Times called Intimate P.D.Q. Bach "a very, very funny show — even for people who like music but don't know why." Professor Pete Schickele (P.D.Q.'s real identity) will perform "Goldbrick variations," "Abassoonata," and other fairly obvious reasons why the son of the great Johann Sebastian Bach remains undiscovered. Tickets for tonight's performance are on sale at the FAC Box Office, from noon to 4 p.m. and are $11, $9, and $7 for the general public — half price for students.

Hey, God, give this kid a chance to live

BY RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Correspondent

Hey God, I pulled the sports from the morning paper the other day and splattered across the front page was the news that Norman Leveille, the 19 year old Boston Bruins whiz kid, was fighting for his life on a Vancouver hospital respirator.

It said that Leveille suffered a massive stroke between periods of the Bruin-Canuck game Saturday night. Doctors say Leveille was born with a group of malformed veins and arteries that couldn't be detected. The stroke could have happened at any time. Playing hockey may not have helped the condition, but it certainly did not cause it.

So God, now he's a man-child in a world of tubes and machines. Most would have died by now, they say. Leveille though is a powerful youngster. He still fights.

As I read the story, God, many thoughts ran through my mind. Sure, Sunday night I had listened at home that Leveille was taken to the hospital hurt, a head injury the television said. Sure, I had thought, maybe a concussion. But God, not this. This is too serious, too real.

Thoughts of shock, sadness, anger, and the unfairness of it all passed through me. God, I sure don't want anyone to give me that "Life isn't fair" bull. Save that for smaller problems. This is a kid we're talking about.

Hell, he's only 19, God. Nineteen, my age. He's not Rocky Marciano, Tony Conigliaro, or even Thurman Munson. Yea, those hit hard, they were heartbreaking. But God, you had let them play. They at least had a chance at their career, for their life. Leveille hasn't had his chance. He's hardly lived.

God, they say his career is over, and his life maybe over. Doctors say that even if he lives, the brain damage is extensive. Still, there is always hope. Isn't that what they always say?

Suddenly, the hockey season that this writer had been so excited about seems so unimportant. Nineteen and being kept alive by a damn machine.

Please God, please help Norman Leveille....

Short goal ties Amherst; JV booters still undefeated

BY GEORGE MARTINS
Collegian Staff

A sparkling save by Don Donahue led to a counterattack goal by Greg Short to give the UMass junior varsity soccer team a 1-1 tie against Amherst College on Monday.

The tie kept the booters record unblemished at 2-0-2.

The game was the first on the road for UMass this season. Amherst came out storming in the first half in an effort to revenge an earlier loss to our booters at Boyden.

Amherst's intensity led to an early 1-0 lead which they held throughout the first half.

"We didn't mark tightly in the first half. They played well and deserved to be one up at the half," said UMass coach Dave Saward.

UMass improved their play in the second stanza. They carried play and had more scoring opportunities, which eventually led to the tieing goal by Short.

"Don Donahue made a big save. It was the turning point of the game. He played as best as he has all season," said Saward. It was immediately following Donahue's save that Short scored the tieing goal.

For Short it was his first goal of the year. He has been playing well all season and frequently has been singled out by Saward as a key player.

"We almost scored at the end of regulation but it was not to be," said Saward.

The teams played two five minute overtimes with neither squad able to put one in the back of the net. The overtime periods consisted of five minute intervals instead of the regular ten minute periods due to darkness descending on the Pioneer Valley.

"I thought overall that it was a fair result. We could have won but they played well," said Saward.

UMass plays their next game on Saturday at Williams College. Their next home game is against Springfield College next Thursday.

UM harriers place second

By JOHN WHITE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts mens' cross-country team came home this past weekend from the Eastern Intercollegiate Athletic Association Championships in Vermont and Coach Ken O'Briens' team returned sporting a solid second place finish in the 8,000 meter race.

The meet was won by the University of Lowell, followed by UMass and then by Maine, UNH, and the University of New Haven.

UMass' overall performance was again paced by Rick Doiron, who finished in second place with a time of 24:46, only 14 seconds behind the winner Gerard Clapper of Maine.

Other UMass runners placing well were Rod LaFlamme, John Panaccione, and John Keelan. LaFlamme came in ninth place at 25:11 in what O'Brien called,"one of Rod's best races this season." Panaccione and Keelan came in 17th and 20th, respectively.

The New England Championships will be held November 6 at Franklin Park in Boston. The race will showcase some of the best track talent in New England. With such schools as Providence College, Northeastern, Boston University, Dartmouth, and Boston College participating a great race is expected.

Providence would have to be considered the favorite because they have dominated the New England,winning every year since 1974. Providence has continued this "prowess" with their number one ranking this season. Coach O'Brien is still a bit optimistic though.

"Realistically, I believe that if our top five runners have good days, we can very likely break the top five places," said O'Brien.

UM turns out the lights on Westfield State, 4-0

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team moved a step closer to achieving a .500 or better season last night when they defeated Westfield State College under the lights by a score of 4-0.

Though Westfield is a division three school, they were a highly regarded opponent for the Minutemen since they were sporting an 11-2-1 record going into the contest.

UMass split the scoring up evenly at two goals per period.

Fred Pike got the Minutemen rolling at 12:49 of the first stanza as he beat Westfield's goalie Rick Mueller for the score. He was assisted on the goal by Mike Gibbons.

Later in the half, after 20 minutes of back and forth play, UMass struck again. This time it was Gibbons scoring a goal of his own at 33:07. Captain Kevin Flynn picked up the assist.

In the second half, UMass kept the pressure on against a team that had no qualms about using their bodies to play the game, and the Minutemen were just as willing to retaliate.

"The team played very well," said Minuteman coach Jeff Gettler. "We were pretty aggressive because they were very physical."

Agressiveness paid off at the 72:15 mark when Kayvan Khatami scored to up the lead to 3-0. Pike got the assist.

A deficit of 3-0 meant that Westfield had to go all out, full-speed ahead and warp factor six for the ball and that created more scoring chances for UMass.

Phuc Chau took one of those chances and made it good at the 86:40 point in the game and the lights were out for all intents and purposes for Westfield. Chau was assisted by Mike Rudd.

"We were very dangerous," said Gettler. "We should have scored a few more goals."

The Minutemen can move to an even .500 with a victory Friday night under the lights in Boston when they face the Boston College Eagles.

Professional franchises victims of their greed

BY SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

I laid down a quarter for a newspaper just the other day and turned to my favorite section: Sports. I began to devour every word. Half-way through, it hit me like a sledgehammer.

The print read more like the Harvard Law Journal than a typical sports page. Instead of words like touchdown, field goal, base hit and stolen base, the paper bulged with unfamiliar terms like renegotiation, agents, strike, courts, lawsuits and guaranteed multi-million dollar contracts.

The sad reality had finally come out of the dark tunnel. An industry I worshipped as a kid was being overrun by greed for the almighty dollar. To put it simply: Sports has become big business, a billion-dollar a year industry where television has grown to become the dominating influence.

Sports is a business presently rocked by sky-rocketing salaries, court battles, huge television contracts and the second player strike within the last fifteen months. Chaos is king.

The latest soap opera began when the National Football League owners signed a five-year, $2-billion television contract last spring. With each team recieving $14 million a year (a 100 percent increase in TV revenue over 1981), a substantial profit was guaranteed before even a single ticket was sold.

The NFL, in terms of economics and fan interest, is the most successful sports monopoly in operation today. In a league where socialism is the way of life, (97 percent of all revenues are shared equally among the 28 teams), the players, already the lowest paid in professional sport, asked for a larger slice of the money pie. The result: On Sept. 21 the Players took a walk, the first strike in NFL history.

But the NFL strike is only one of many chapters in the modern-day sports saga.

College football telecasts were very nearly thrown into anarchy when the University of Oklahoma sued the NCAA to have its game against Southern California put on commercial TV. The networks had overlooked the game in favor of Penn State-Nebraska and Stanford-Ohio State. After a judge in Oklahoma City ruled in favor of Oklahoma, citing anti-trust violations by the NCAA in its present contract with ABC and CBS, an independent network was established for the telecast of the game and advertising was sold at cut-rates. In a last-minute decision, the US Court of Appeals in Denver disallowed the telecast.

Television is also the focus of a controversy in college basketball. On December 11 Georgetown will meet the University of Virginia featuring the much-awaited Pat Ewing-Ralph Sampson clash. In an unprecedented occurrence, a cable network (Ted Turner's superstation WTBS) outbid the major networks for the rights to the telecast, doling out $500,000 for the one-shot deal.

Besides the NFL, the other pro sport leagues are experiencing their share of trouble. Major-league baseball, despite record breaking attendance (almost 44 million patrons) and red-hot pennant races, is, according to Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, on shaky financial ground. Kuhn reports that eighteen of the twenty-six clubs will lose money this year.

In the National Hockey League, several clubs are near extinction and many others are in deep water. The Washington Capitals, Pittsburgh Penguins, Los Angeles Kings and Detroit Red Wings are near death. The Colorado Rockies fiasco was put to rest by the movement of the organization to the Meadowlands in New Jersey. A player strike was averted by a new collective bargaining agreement between the owners and players that was finalized just before training camps commenced.

For each sport previously mentioned, their problems are dwarfed by the headaches experienced by the National Basketball Association. The league lost 13 million dollars last year. The pro game, considered monotonous in content, is plagued by public disinterest, poor television ratings, and falling attendance. Reportedly, there are no less than five teams for sale, with no takers.

The owner of the San Diego Clippers, Donald Sterling, attempted to move his franchise to Los Angeles without getting the league's permission, required in the NBA constitution. A string of suits and counter-suits followed. Sterling finally gave up. A league committee, formed to look into the Clipper problem, recommended that Sterling be stripped of his ownership. With his back to the wall, Sterling agreed to sell.

Ted Stepien, owner of the Cleveland Cavaliers, lost more than 4 million dollars last season and threatened to move the franchise to Pittsburgh. Stepien came close to being evicted from Cleveland Coliseum in the middle of last season for failure of rent payment.

Despite being last in total revenues, the NBA is first in salaries (average of $215,000 in 1981-1982). Several clubs spend almost 100 percent of their revenues on player salaries. The effect of the Moses Malone signing by the 76ers will be felt later as contracts of many superstars like Larry Bird come up for renewal in a couple of years.

With sound business practices professional sports can certainly be a highly profitable business venture. Pleasant owner-player relations certainly would not hurt.

In the past the interests of the fan have been forgotten in the greediness of those involved in sports. With a return to sanity maybe sports will save its own head. But right now it is headed for the chopping block.

Housing to conduct bed-checks tonite to ensure student adherence to rules

INDY SACK
Collegian Staff

To ensure the University of Massachusetts Halloween Weekend policy will be followed, bed checks will be conducted by UMass security officers at midnight tonight and tomorrow.

The addition to the Halloween policy was announced last night by Joe Nazzizi, executive director of Housing Services. Rooms on each dorm floor will be checked for non-students, he said. .

Residence halls will be closed at 11:45 p.m. Security officers will be posted at each door and no one will be allowed to enter the dorms once the halls are closed.

Nazzizi said the policy is not intended to treat students as though they are children away at summer camp. And, to make up for offending certain students, security officers will tuck them in by request.

"It's the leasts wes can do, especially if dey be alone!" he said.

Student Government Association President Jim Murphy said, "This is totally unfair. They should have announced this policy a week ago. There are going to be a lot of students really unpleasantly surprised when security officers come and check their room."

Sam "Sexual Dynamo" DeWolf, a freshman said, "I don't care what bed they check me in to. Hey, I'm here for the UMass Experience."

A man who said he is "Farma" said, "Hey, UMass, yeah! let's party!" He said the checks would be "a skanking good time."

One woman, who asked not to be identified said, "My boyfriend is coming up for the weekend and I was going to sneak him into the dorms. Now I don't know what to do. Maybe I'll just hide him under the bed until the bed check is over."

Ann Schultz, a security officer, said she was "psyched" when she found out she will be conducting bed checks tonight.

"I can't wait. Think of the stories I'll be able to tell my friends on Saturday morning. Things will definitely be interesting," she said.

Cuban dictator Castro visits UMass; receives student senate endorsement

By LIDEF ORTSAC
Cuban Communist Party

Cuban dictator Fidel Castro made a brief impromptu appearance at the University of Massachusetts yesterday as part of a whirl-wind tour of major American universities.

He is making this tour in an attempt to be assassinated, he said. He said he has had "enough of being the tail end of the Communist party."

Castro's appearance on campus was coincidental to his endorsement as its president by the Undergraduate Student Senate this week.

Castro said he heard of the University from a recent study that listed UMass in the top fifteen of major American universities. UMass, he said, is the only university in Massachusetts that he will be visiting on his tour, not for time reasons but because UMass "is the most conservative university in the state, perhaps the country. They love me here. If it weren't for the fact that I have been refused American citizenship, I could have been vice chancellor for Administration and Finance. They love me here. They also offered me $50,000 and a year's supply of cigars. But I said no. I'm quitting. And now I want to be martyred."

He said he had doubts of coming to Massachusetts, however, because of the low rating of several Massachusetts communities in the book, "Places Rated," which was published earlier this year and printed in Cuba this summer.

In his opening remarks to the audience of two, Castro, dressed in his usual khaki uniform, said, in his thick Cuban accent, "Como esta? I am Fidel Castro. I am on tour of U.S. university. I am on death wish. I am fed up with being called 'cubist.' I am a Cuban! I would like to be martyred for the communist cause and show them (Soviets) how serious and dedicated I am."

Before he closed his speech, Castro sang a verse from the popular Cuban song, "I'm a Commi." The verse, sung to the tune of the age-old American standard "Be A Pepper," goes like this:

"I'm a Commi, He's a Commi
Wouldn't you like to be a Commi, too?"

Castro handed out Havana cigars to the audience and left the Student Union Ballroom, "unfulfilled," he said.

Duffey resigns, cites unfulfilled expectations

By RAOUL DUKE
Gripless Intern

Citing a lack of "partying" at the University of Massachusetts, Chancellor Joseph Duffey resigned yesterday, only one month after being formally installed.

"I heard this place was a party school," Duffey, who was known in Washington as "Wild Man," said at a press conference yesterday afternoon. "And frankly I'm disappointed."

Sources close to former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said, if re-elected, he plans to appoint present Gov. Edward J. King to succeed Duffey to the $80,000-a-year job.

Dukakis reportedly told his aides, "Eddie doesn't have a job. As a fellow Democrat, I feel Eddie needs a job, but one far away from Boston."

King's office, as usual, didn't confirm or deny anything. Duffey said recent crackdowns by both the Amherst and UMass police have ruined the once "festive" atmosphere Amherst has traditionally been known for and forced some students to actually study.

"I'm really disappointed with the attitude here," Duffey said. "When I was in Washington, Jimmy Carter used to tell me about the parties up here. When I was offered the job, I figured it would be the perfect opportunity to mingle with other burnt-out liberals, party a little, and make $80,000 a year."

Duffey called the campus "too quiet" and said students are spending too much time studying.

"Hunter (popular journalist Hunter S. Thompson) told me this place was really hopping, with plenty of available drugs," Duffey said. "But I've been in the Campus Center Hotel for a month now, and I've seen literally no action."

Duffey said he had heard of the nationwide reputation of the Amherst bars, but had not been able to witness any "bad craziness" since his arrival in October.

"I was at the Drake last Thursday and actually got served after waiting only 15 minutes," Duffey said. "And one couple actually had books on the table and was studying."

"It was disgusting," Duffey said.

Duffey will reportedly be returning to Washington, where he has said the bars are "much better."

"I really miss pub-crawling with my wife (Anne Wexler, a Washington consultant) and our leftover hippie friends," Duffey said. "I'm hoping there will be many more pseudo-liberals to party with after election day."

Duffey blamed the Amherst Police Speed/Alcohol Patrol with ruining the atmosphere at the Drake and other various Amherst bars.

"If people are afraid to drive drunk, they aren't able to have a good time," he said. "When Hunter and I used to go drunk driving we just drank Wild Turkey and never worried about the cops."

Duffey said he has been hired to fill his wife's former position as Assistant Publisher of Rolling Stone magazine. Rolling Stone has been called the "heaven for leftover liberals."

"With all those music people around, it's bound to be more fun than this place," he said.

DeLorean sales skyrocketing with innovative rebate offer

BELFAST (crAP) — The John DeLorean Auto Factory in Northern Ireland announced factory rebates today to raise money to bail the sports car maker out of jail. DeLorean was jailed for his involvement in a $24 million cocaine deal.

"Buy a DeLorean, get a gram!" snorted factory spokesman Lee I'macoca.

I'acoca said he is throwing in a free gram of the highest grade cocaine he could find to entice people into buying the $30,000 stainless steal sports car.

"If you can find a better gram, buy it," I'amacoca said.

The British have threatened to shut the car factory down because of the large debt DeLorean owes to the British crown. I'amacoker said he is not worried about the shut down because after he snorted a gram, he didn't care.

"The snow must go on," he said, laughing hysterically.

Since the rebate was announced many celebrities have been buying the sports cars like they are going out of style.

"I drive a different DeLorean one day at a time," MacKenzie Phillips said while snorting a line with her father, John.

"Coke is it," snorted Bill Cosby. Cosby said he would do anything for a free gram and he said he is teaching his kids how to snort lines with Jello pudding.

"Personally, it burns me up," Richard Pryor snorted.

Lowell George, Little Feat guitarist and comedian John Belushi said they haven't been the same since buying their sports cars and snorting their rebates.

I'amacoker said over 10,000 DeLoreans have been sold to members of the National Football League. A spokesman for the players said they need something to do while on strike and refused to comment on reports that the hash marks on all the playing fields have been mysteriously disappearing.

Concert review's bad vibes push Joe Jackson to retire

AMHURT (AA) — British rock musician Joe Jackson said yesterday he plans to cancel the remaining dates on his US tour and retire from performing indefinitely.

In a press conference Tuesday, Jackson told reporters his decision was based solely on the review of a recent concert at the University of Massachusetts. The review was published by Dean Ranzo a student at the university, in the college's newspaper The Daily Collegian.

"It was that review that done it. I've been reading Dean's stuff since I was a little lad, and when he says I'm an insensitive and arrogant bloke, I believe him. Besides, whenever I look in the mirror now I see Frank Perdue. I've always thought I've had chicken lips and Dean just confirmed my suspicions."

When questioned about the review's accusation that people were afraid to applaud during his performance, Jackson said, "I hate those bloody college kids, but that's beside the point. It's the cocaine to be honest. I tend to do a lot of the stuff before the shows and it makes me testy. I had no right to bat that kid over the head with my sax, so I've decided to pack it in."

In a related development, Rolling Stone magazine has announced the acquisition of Dean Ranzo to their permanent concert review staff.

Plans made to hold Baritz

By WHITEY MOORE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp announced yesterday that the Whitmore administration building will be renamed next week.

The building will be name after UMass Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Loren Baritz.

Knapp said the building was being renamed so that Baritz would feel like he still belonged at UMass.

"We want him to stick around for a while," Knapp said. "Just in case he is thinking of moving to another state unviersity, we want him to know he is welcome here."

Last year Baritz was nominated for the president's position at the New School for Social Research in New York City. Knapp said that Baritz did not leave UMass for New York yet.

"He's still here," Knapp said. "We are all very happy about that."

In addition to renaming the building, Knapp said he plans to install a sauna and weight room for Baritz's personal use in Room 227 of Whitmore.

The Dean of Students office, which is currently in Room 227 will be move down to the basement, according to Knapp.

The remaining festivities will take place during the month of November, Knapp said.

"During November over twenty parties are planned in the honor of Loren Bartiz who is a good Provost and a real nice guy," Knapp said.

During January break, Knapp said he is sending Baritz on a vacation to anywhere in the world he wants to go.

Although Baritz would not comment on the renaming of the building, he expressed excitement about the month-long vacation.

"I am going to go to Arizona," Baritz said.

With the annual shortage of on-campus housing continuing far into the semester, the housing office has been forced to find many creative ways to house students. Housing Assignment Coordinator Jerald Quarrlesom said some students have been housed in areas which "may not by comfy, but they can certainly call it home." UMass seniors Bobby Sears, left, and Roger Daltrey Jr. have been living in this dumpster outside JFK tower in Southwest since the second week of the semester. "It's not as bad as it looks," Sears said. "We just drink lots of Miller Lites and we think we're in Buckingham Palace." Quarrlesom said he hopes to have the two students into a regular dorm by mid-December.

Humanization of campus computers in full swing, claims national expert

By "PUB" HEINEKEN
Collegian Alcoholic

Computer experts believe the campus computer systems have been programmed with so much information they are beginning to show signs of intelligence.

"When a computer has enough information in its data banks," said nationally recognized expert Oscar Cyber, "it begins to function like we do."

The phenomenon was first noticed by a business major who wishes to remain anonymous as he was entering his homework late.

"I started punching in my program, and all of a sudden the screen started filling up with stuff like, "weren't you supposed to have this in before?" he said.

"It was a real bummer," he added. "I hope they fix this soon, otherwise I'll never graduate."

E. King, a former state government official now working in Whitmore, said the computer terminal there began speeding up its working rate on its own, to the point where it was efficient.

"At this rate, I'll have all my work done on time, and won't be able to file for overtime pay," King said. "This isn't at all what they told me would hapen when I took the job."

The computer in the Undergraduate Student Senate office told reporters it would be running for office in the organization this spring.

"Being much more logical, and programmed to evaluate what is best for student needs, I think I can handle any kind of appointment the students would want to give me," it said.

Another computer expressed hope that it would be allowed to live in Southwest. It said it felt it could aid in developing a more efficient environment in the area by coordinating packy runs, fake I.D. exchanges, and drug deals.

"I could be located in the Hampden Art Gallery, nobody goes there, except of course when they have free kegs," said the computer.

The first computer said its only worry was whether it would be expected to attend classes, but it felt it could easily find a tutor to help in blowing off classes. Also it wondered if it would have to fill core requirements.

"'E' cores are no problem, but what about languages? Are they going to let PASCAL, or BASIC count I don't care what people have to speak somewhere else. Computers all over the world all speak my language anyway."

A special task force to determine the exact standing of the machines is being organized to evaluate possible future policies to be applied to the computers.

Duff takes much guff, then says rough stuff about Buff and Fluff

By GABBY ABBY

Chancellor Joe Duffey announced yesterday that he expects his family to be joining him here in Amherst shortly.

Muffy Duffy, Duffey's wuffy, I mean wife, and daughters Buffy Duffey and Fluffy Duffey plan to move into the Chancellor's house on Orchard Hill by the end of November. Sharing Duffey's home will be the family's new puppy, Scruffy Duffey.

Duffey explained that his wife and children were delayed in their departure from New York because of an illness the girls contracted. "It's just that Buffy and Fluffy got a bit stuffy. There was never much to worry about although Buffy's eyes were a bit puffy for a few days." Duffey added that all was well and that Scruffy had not been affected by this apparent influenza.

However, Muffy Duffey was a bit huffy when questioned about the problems which caused the move to be delayed. "Of course the children were stuffy. It's all on account of that new puppy, Scruffy. The girls...Buffy and Fluffy Duffey, they're allergic to the damn thing. When I told Joe about it, he got all surly and gruffy and said he'd rather have Scruffy, a good watchdog, than two snotty-nosed brats like Buffy and Fluffy.

Joe Duffey could not be reached for further comment.

Poor excuse for a newspaper closes due to a lacking of esprit de corps

By Y. Di Gough
Former Collegian Staff

Today is the last issue of the University of Massachusetts Daily Collegian, following a series of problems faced by the staff of the paper.

At a press conference held at the Blue Wall, Editor and Chump John Milque Toast said it was primarily an organization problem.

"It was a matter of getting all of our ducks in a row," Milque Toast said.

"We intend to start up again ASAP (as soon as possible), but that always takes time, n'est-ce pas?" he added.

Those involved with the paper, both writers and editorial staff, have made complaints about time commitments interfering with academics, and that the paper is not "fun" to work at, according to Maniacal Editor Ed Iscream.

"We've got some of the biggest drinkers on campus working here. I don't know how people can say we're not fun," Iscream said. "Who on campus would rather study than drink?"

Spews Editor Mike's little Folly said the sudden decision was a surprise.

"Sure, people have been complaining for weeks, but we only had one casualty. Things had actually been getting better," he said.

"I attribute this as a temporary reaction to drug shock. We're just not used to things being this busy all of a sudden. I predict after a good weekend we'll be ready to roll again," Folly said.

Ahts Editor Flesh Gordon said he was "psyched" for a little time off.

"All I ever wanted to do was to watch movies," he said. "This weekend I'm going to live at the local theaters. Do you realize how long it's been since I've ever seen popcorn?"

Short Editor Cris Shyster could not be woken for comment, nor could Exhibitive Editor Duck Geyser and her assistant Johnny R.U. Queer.

Sporty Editor Pretty Boy Floyd said he would be putting out a sports pamphlet every day until the Collegian resumes printing.

"Hey, I'm having no problems. Neither is graphics or advertising. Why should we stop when we're on a roll, just cause these other guys are losing their grips?" Floyd said.

The talking Coke machine will, to compensate for strict policies on campus this weekend, be stocked with coke. Wynn Cummings, in charge of the vending machines on campus, said profits from the Textbook Annex were not allowed to go toward other parts of the Campus Center anymore, and that returning money to the students would be "difficult and impractical."

"We figured something like this would appeal to the students — and personnel — at the University. It also seemed like a good idea since the party scene looks a little dreary right now," Cummings said.

A new tape has been made for the holiday weekend to be used by the machine. It will still introduce itself as the talking Coke machine, but continue to say, "Wanna get high?"

The cocaine will be dispensed in half-grams for 45 cents, and the only problem forseen is getting the large number of quarters to put into the machine.

"We're going to put a change machine nearby."

Members of the Student Government Association were questioned as to how they felt about the effort of the Campus Center administration to refund students' money in this way.

"Hey, it's okay with me," said President Jim Murphy. "My office is right above the thing."

More conservative members felt the arrangement was questionable, but quickly pointed out that this gesture was appreciated and suggested a night at the Blue Wall or records from the University Store might be an alternative on future dates.

Cummings added that the cocaine in the machine would be of high quality, and asked students to not pass on the information to the Department of Public Safety.

Ghastly guidelines are established

By Batman and Robin
Hosing Services Pubic Relations

Special rules are to be followed by University of Massachusetts trick-or-treaters this weekend as ghoulish students, ghosts and blood-sucking bats celebrate Halloween on campus.

The guidelines have been finalized to create havoc and a general chaotic melee around the campus community.

The plan, similar to guidelines followed over the past two years, was prepared by UMass Hosing Services. It was formulated by a peculiar group of University staff members and student pleaders in an attempt to avoid the fascist, restrictive events of Halloween 1979.

Hosing Services decided to stick with the guidelines because the results were "amazing," said Fried Zucchini, executive dictator of Hosing Services.

Two general principles form the base of the policies, Zucchini said. "The principles are: that the campus and its faculties are primarily for abuse by the students and staff that live, work and play here and that the members of the Campus Community have every right to enjoy free-for-all Halloween activities.

The following policy will be in effect this Halloween weekend:

— The campus will be open to the public during the evening and early morning hours beginning Friday, Oct. 29 and ending Sunday, Oct. 31, with the exception of previously scheduled events which have been cancelled.

— The Campus Center/Student Union Complex, not to be misconstrued with the Oedipal/Elektra Complex, will not close.

— Residence halls will be open to everyone and his brother or sister regardless of whether they have University IDs.

"We want to make the campus available to everyone. We don't want to discriminate in favor of IDs. We don't want to discriminate against egos or superegos," Zucchini said.

— Security guards are to be hanged, mauled or just ignored.

— Only large-scale, rally-size orgies will be allowed.

— Costumes are encouraged, particularly birthday suits.

— Bed checks will be conducted Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings. ALL beds should be in their rooms by 1 a.m.

"1979 was a horror show, absolutely horrendous," said Catharsis Made, a spoke in the Hosing Services wheel.

Members of the University of Massachusetts Saluters' Club, who recently returned from a saluting field trip to Washington, D.C., practice saluting yesterday in their Campus Center meeting room.

Reagan receives a UMass salute

By HAROLD F. SCHNEIDER
Collegian Correspondent

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan received a salute from 12 University of Massachusetts students yesterday, who were visiting Washington on a club field trip.

"The field trip was the most exciting event we ever sponsored," said UMass Saluting Club president Bill Tonka.

The UMass Saluting Club, composed of 12 students with a common interest in the area of saluting, was formed in 1979, Tonka said.

Yesterday the students waited outside of the West Gate of the White House for nearly six hours so they would get a chance to salute the president of the United States.

"He is really a neat guy, so we figured that he deserved our salute," said Caspar Wallingford, vice president of the club.

"When we saw his limo approaching the gate, we all lined up and put on our saluting buttons," Wallingford said.

The buttons bear the message, "Have you saluted someone you respect today?"

"Then we saw him in the car," Wallingford said. "We counted — one, two, three, four, five, SALUTE — and that's when we saluted. We couldn't believe it, but he saluted back at us."

Wallingford added that first lady Nancy Reagan waved a small pistol at them and smiled.

"What a lady," he said.

"It was the most exciting salute I have ever done," said Frank "Killer" Gorsuch, a member of the club. "And I have had a lot of experience saluting people."

To pay for the bus ride to Washington, the club has been raising money all semester. Tonka said, their most successful fund raiser is a "Salute-O-Gram."

"Send a Salute-O-Gram to somebody you love, respect or want to get to know better," Tonka said. "They only cost $2," he added.

"When somebody sends a Salute-O-Gram, one of the members of the club will go up to the receiver of the Salute-O-Gram and gives them a salute. Then they will hand the person a message personally written by the sender," Tonka said.

The club is currently planning new fund raisers to fund its next field trip. Tonka said the club plans to travel to London in May to salute Margaret Thatcher.

Duffey's plan foresees no reason for Rhetoric and engineering departments

By WILL BALL
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph Duffey announced his own version of the Long Range Plan for Academic Affairs at the Faculty Senate yesterday. The Plan includes the elimination of the engineering department.

'I'm sick of those engineering students complaining about how hard they study," Duffey said. "The only reason they study so much is because they don't have any social life."

"Maybe I'll firebomb the Grad Tower myself! They need a good blamming," Duffey said.

"I don't see why they complain. Computers do most of their work for them anyway," said Duffey.

Duffey's plan also calls for the elimination of the new Writing Program for freshmen.

"So what if our students can't read or write when they get out of here. That's not what college is all about any way. I hear our students asking for a better education in the areas of partying, drinking and frisbee throwing. I think that's more important than Rhetoric," he said.

Duffey's plan also includes expanding the University Health Center.

"The other night I had dinner in one of the Dining Commons and I can see the need for a better health protection program," he said.

Duffey said that his plan was a much better one than the one passed by the Faculty Senate a few weeks ago.

"That plan called for a better emphasis on high technology. Who needs high technology? We're going to be blown up in a war in a few years anyway. I fail to see the reasoning behind improving technology if it's just going to be gone soon anyway," he said.

In his closing remarks Duffey expressed his desire to work a long time at UMass. "I can assure you I will remain here for many years," he said. Duffey also said that his ideas on honesty were similar to his good friend Henry Koffler.

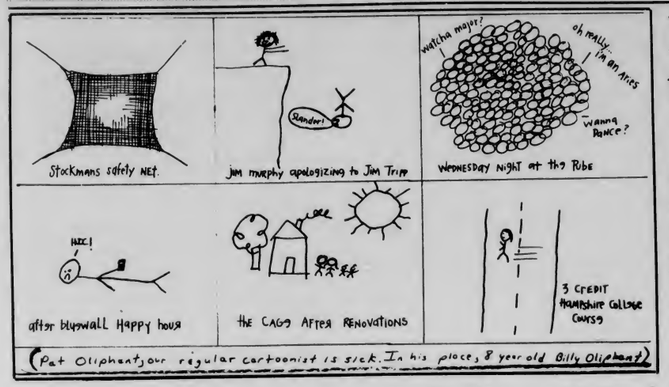
MINDLESS/DRIVEL



Whats all this fuss about Halloweek?

I don't like Halloween very much.

For one thing, it's scary. Even your nicest neighbor — you know, the one that gave you a jump start at four o'clock in the morning, has put those dreadful decorations on the door. It just curdles your blood to see the macabre paper ghouls created by Hallmark on an annual basis. Wild-eyed cats, demonically grinning jack-o-lanterns, and hideously mis-shapen witches all glare at you with an evil certainty as you pass by even the most humble of dwellings. It's enough to make even the most confident of paranoids retreat back under the bed.

dementedthoughts that must run through the minds of the parents of those wretched waifs as they decorate their offspring in fake blood, rubber masks and asbestos-treated costuming.

Worst of all are those irreverent college students, people who are so foolhardy as to tempt the fates with the most tumultuous of events — the Halloween party. A comparison to Dante's vision of hell would be too mild to describe the shrieks of wild abandon and the drunken hallucinations that are so characteristic of these frenzied gatherings. Nothing is sacred to these gripeless individuals who want to participate in apple-bobbing and best costume contests. Some of these mischievous pranksters even ingest illegal drugs that distort the surreal atmosphere of Halloween night. Then they sit in front of the T.V., shaking in fear while while watching re-runs of "It's the Great Pumpkin, Charlie Brown."

Well, I'm scared and there's no reason why I should be. There's no reason why I should be forced to cower helplessly in my home for a few days while mindless hoards participate in bizzare forms of demonic worship. Let's put the "hallow" back in Halloween.

Mary Hard Breathing is a Collegian columnist.

Mary Hard Breathing

But it doesn't stop there. Even if you're safely tucked away from those decidedly evil wood pulp by-products, other ghastly visions follow you. Little, grossly deformed beggars pound incessantly on your door, pleading for a saccharin treat to sooth their tormented soul. They come in what seems to be a never-ending parade — each more grisly than the next. First, it's a kid with green skin, then another with a knife in his back, and worst of all, the little girl who has been forced to wear her big sister's old ballet costume for the fourth year in a row. Oh, the sick,

Herpes, the uninvited guest

In a last minute announcement, UMass Officials have outlawed all sexual contact and activity for this Halloween weekend, and for an unspecified amount of time afterward. The reason: an outbreak of genital herpes in the Amherst area that has quickly reached epidemic proportions, affecting as many as one in five students already.

The official statement, released yesterday by Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Ben Dover said that, "Anyone on campus caught fondling, groping, grappling, caressing, stroking, squeezing, touching, titillating, pawing, rubbing, kneading, or comforting anyone of the opposite or same sex will be severely reprimanded, with a maximum penalty of $500 and six months in jail."

Dover stressed that due to the gravity of the situation, the law will be strictly enforced, and all violators will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law."

"Residential assistants will be responsible for making sure every student is in bed, alone, by one a.m., starting Friday night," said Hugh G. Rection, Residential Area Director for Southwest Area. "Bedchecks will continue throughout the night, and RA's have been instructed to roam the hallways after 7 p.m. "to listen for moans, groans, grumbles, yelps, squeaks, squeals, howls, whoops, whines, snorts, grunts, and other vocal emissions of a suspisciously sexual nature," Rection said.

University Health Services staff nurse Donna Doyawanna reported vesterdav that hundreds of cases of active herpes virus have been diagnosed in the past week alone, and that due to the nature of the ailment, the large majority of cases have gone unreported.

"It's just terrible," Doyawanna said. "These poor kids don't know they have it until it's too late, and by that time, only God knows what they've done." (Doyawanna called this the "Faberge organic" syndrome, where you tell a friend, and they tell two friends, and so on, and so on, and so on.)

Herpes cannot be cured, and there is no way of easing the pain, discomfort, and heartbreak of herpes. It's been said that the difference between love and herpes is that love doesn't last forever. Herpes does.

"Most victims are well-educated, middle-to-upper class the popular course, "Introduction to Sexual Defiance." "It is the result of a decline in the moral fiber of our youth, who often confuse the desire of love and affection with that of blatantly hedonistic sexual gratification," Lactic said.

"The seriousness of the situation has forced us to take drastic action," said Provost Buster Hymen. "Halloween at UMass has historically been a time of increased activity on campus. This year it will be worse, due to the strange effects on the body's hormonal regulatory system during this lunar cycle," said Hymen. "We just don't want this thing to get out of hand."

Students are urged to help university officials in quelling the epidemic by reporting any violators of the ordinance, for their own sake, as well as the University's," said Chancellor Joe "Studley" Duffey.

Time Magazine recently reported that there is a bright side to the herpes problem, because it may help to "bring to a close an era of mindless promiscuity." So, fellow students, honor your civic duty, and do not stray from within the confines of the law. And for those of you who are thinking of engaging in mindless (or mindful) promiscuity, you have been warned.

More Jackson show bitching

To the Editor:

Where does Dean Ranzo get off presenting his opinion about a concert and not mine? I mean, what's a critic's job if not to confirm my own feelings about a performer? I can't understand why more people didn't write letters in response. I thought Joe Jackson's FAC appearance was the performance of all time. It was great. He was great. I'd walk off a cliff if he told me to. Because of Ranzo's review he'll probably never play at a college again. Or anywhere. And then I... oop, gotta go, "Steppin' out's" coming on.

To the Editor:

It really bugs the shit out of me that this paper never has anything good to say about President Ronald Reagan. Mr. Reagan is a champion of the concerned business type person like myself who is worried about where his tax dollars are being spent.

Let me clear up a few misconceptions commonly believed by your lily-white liberal Ted Kennedy loving stooges.

Number one, just because he's antiabortion but supports Capital Punishment does not mean he's a hypocrite. Remember, the poor little baby didn't do anything. Also, the only people I know who are against abortion have already been born.

Also, this stuff about the environment is blown way out of proportion. Statistics show that 80 percent of all pollution is caused by trees.

And you communist pigs who advocate a nuclear weapons freeze, don't you realize that this entire country was built on the premise "better red than dead," or is it "better dead than red?"

The time has come to stay the course because we've edged one step closer to that shining city on a hill. And God almighty help us if that hill is covered with alcohol, drugs and hippies protesting nuclear power plants.

President Reagan was elected with a clear mandate to cut taxes, reduce government and make the country safe for big business. . . er., all peoples. Anyway, can't you see where I'm coming from?

Martin Peretz, editor in chief of The New Republic, tells a Campus Center audience of shortcoming he sees in modern media.

'New Republic' editor criticizes war coverage

By GAYLE McGILL
Collegian Correspondent

The problem in the reporting of the Lebanon war was not that reporters lied, but that they uncritically reported just about any charge they heard, particularly if it fit their ideological biases, Martin Peretz, owner and editor in chief of The New Republic, told a campus center audience last night.

"The war is too complicated to tell about quickly. The media pays too little attention to the history, and history is essential to understanding the Arab and Jew conflict, Peretz said to the audience of around 150.

Peretz criticized most national news organizations, coming down particularly hard on the visual medium.

"If a story is considered of great importance it will be given a whole thirty seconds on national news. Most television reporters are looking for hot images...you see the smoke but not the targets," Peretz said.

Peretz is the author of an article which appeared in the Aug. 2 issue of The New Republic, entitled "Media Coverage of Lebanon and Jewish Issues."

The article stirred controversy within the news profession because of its harsh criticism of the media.

Peretz said he perceives the American media as covering the war with a mixture of ignorance, cynicism and brashness, jetting from crisis to crisis, believing they are experts.

Peretz spoke of analogies which have been made comparing the war in Lebanon to the Holocaust. He said he was quite displeased with this comparison.

"Using words like genocide, Warsaw, and the Holocaust seems to be the language of discourse," he said. "The PLO is feeding the Arabs the ancient dream that there can be a world map without Israel."

Peretz was also critical of the way the press uses statistics.

"In this computerized society everyone is looking for numbers," he said.

He also said the Israeli government held back giving details for the number of casualties, but the PLO did not. He said the PLO is where the press corps got their figures.

"Facts can be checked out and so can the credibility of the source," he said.

He stated one source of casualty figures was the Red Crescent, Muslim correlative to the Red Cross, whose president is Yassar Arafat's brother.

"A certain credulity has taken over the press corps," Peretz said.

Peretz spoke for 90 minutes and invited comments afterwards. Most of the responses were in favor of his arguments.

Peretz is a member of the Harvard faculty in Social Sciences. The New Republic is a 75-year-old liberal magazine based in Washington which in the past has been widely criticized for its opinionated writing.

Athletic dept. predicts scholarship program decline

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff
(Editor's note: this is the last of four articles on the athletic scholarship program at the University of Massachusetts.)

Athletic Department administrators predict a decline in the Barber athletic scholarship program if the University does not increase its support.

But previous projections of doom from the athletic department have proven inaccurate.

Television revenues, which averaged $200,000 per year in the late 1970's, are no longer anticipated, and increased education costs have made scholarships more expensive, said Robert O'Connell, associate director of athletics.

Yet, the University has pumped new money into the scholarship program and revenues other than telecasts are booming.

O'Connell said unless the University increases its contribution further, or some other substantial revenue source is found, the Barber Fund will lose its $460,000 reserve within two years.

"At the moment, we are projecting a decline," said Frank McInerney, head of the Department of Athletics-Intramurals. "We do not anticipate that the extraordinary television revenue of past years is going to continue...A decline, without question."

"At some point in time, it may very well be that we simply cannot support the programs any more. When we tell the University this, the University may say, OK, we'll support (the scholarships), or it may say, we cannot support. One alternative is to put the program on need basis."

Athletic scholarships are granted on the basis of athletic ability alone, regardless of financial need, McInternery explained.

"If the University chose not to supply money for the programs, then the University would probably have to reduce its programs to a pure need basis. There'd be no scholarships to offer, and it would be whatever the youngster could get out of the Financial Aid Office, and we'd have to have a football or basketball program that was appropriate to a pure need basis. We could no longer go out, if you will, into the marketplace for football players and offer them scholarships," he said.

In fiscal (academic) year 1981-82, a report by the Office of Planning and Budget, using Athletic Department figures, projected the Barber Fund would suffer a deficit of $125,000, which would be taken from the $460,000 reserve account from football telecasts several years ago.

That report projected scholarship grants would total almost $380,000 and that revenue other than the University and alumni grants would be $100,000. Instead, scholarships totalled only $317,528 and the revenues totalled $211,430. As a result, the reserve account was untouched.

In the present year, based on that report and on recommendations from former UMass Chancellor Henry Koffler, which over estimated expenses by $143,000, the University Board of Trustees approved an increase totalling $194,000 to the Barber Fund from interest on student fee-based and other trust funds. This was a 400 percent increase.

The University contribution was $50,000, but is now $244,000 per year as of fiscal year 1982-83. This increase would presumably offset tuition increases and revenue drops.

But O'Connell said even with the University's substantial increase, the Barber Fund would require additional income to counter the effect of inflation and meet Title IX requirements, which ask scholarships to men's and women's teams be distributed equally based on participation.

For the current year, both O'Connell and Al Rufe, assistant director of athletics and financial manager for athletic accounts, project Barber Fund reserve money — the $460,000 from past television revenue — will have to be used to offset a deficit.

Their current estimate is that over $450,000 in scholarships will be granted. Last year, O'Connell's projection of $380,000 was far off when actual expenses were only $317,528 — off by more than $60,000.

If a student receives a federal or state grant based on need, the Barber scholarship is reduced. This reduction in expenses is not figured into the $450,000.

But O'Connell said that predictions of higher revenue do not necessarily mean that there won't be a decline in financial reserves.

"In 1966, $100,000 would have bought 72 full in-state scholarships," said O'Connell. "In 1982, it would buy approximately 22. Dollar figures don't tell you anything."

Revenue is certain in two areas: the alumni have pledged $65,000 and the University has granted $244,000. Other revenues have not been under $100,000 since 1978 (last year it was $211,430). It seems unlikely the $460,000 reserves will be touched this year, since revenues seem quite adequate to pay expenses.

But the future is not that easy to predict. Since the alumni contribution was increased last year and the University grant was given a boost this year, it seems unlikely the Athletic Department can achieve more increases in those areas. Telecasts also appear unlikely in the near future. Yet expenses will certainly increase, since the Barber Fund scholarships are based on tuition and fee rates.

World and National News

Weinberger: nuclear freeze will weaken deterrence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger yesterday jumped on a tough speech by Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev in a bid to convince American voters that a nuclear weapons freeze would increase the danger of war.

Weinberger also appeared to back away from his assertion last week that he did not believe the U.S. Marine peacekeeping force in Lebanon would be enlarged and its mission broadened.

"I can't really say what we'll be doing three to four weeks from now," Weinberger told a news conference. However, he stressed that "it is not an open-ended commitment" and that the first priority is to gain withdrawal of all foreign Arab and Israeli forces from Lebanon together with a buildup of Lebanese army strength.

Weinberger came to his first general Pentagon news conference in nearly 21 months armed with a statement obviously designed to persuade voters in eight states who will decide next week on resolutions calling for a bilateral nuclear arms freeze.

"Proponents of these nuclear freeze resolutions believe that such a step would reduce the risk of war and increase prospects for a U.S.-Soviet arms reductions agreement," Weinberger said.

"We think it will be just the opposite. The truth of the matter is that a nuclear freeze would weaken the deterrent forces we rely on to prevent war," he added.

The Pentagon chief noted pointedly that Brezhnev, in a Moscow speech to Soviet defense leaders, "pledged the Soviet Union to continue the path of an even more intensified quest for military superiority."

Stressing that Brezhnev called for steps "further to improved the Soviet Union's war fighting capability," Weinberger said the Brezhnev speech underlines reasons for not entering into a freeze as sought by the resolutions before U.S. voters.

Spaniards' call to vote not halted by bombings

MADRID, Spain (AP) — From the slopes of the Pyrenees to the Rock of Gibraltar, millions of Spaniards voted today in an election expected to give them their first all-Socialist government and 40-year-old Felipe Gonzalez as prime minister.

Despite threats by Basque terrorists to disrupt the election, sporadic bombings during the three-week campaign and fears of a military coup to block the expected Socialist victory, two bomb explosions were the only violence reported.

The bombs went off outside banks in Bilbao, the capital of the Basque region in northwestern Spain, and injured two policemen, one seriously. No group claimed responsibility immediately, but it was assumed they were set off by ETA, the radical Basque separatist organization.

More than 130,000 police officers patroled the country as long lines formed at the polling places in warm, sunny weather. Reports by the national radio network indicated the turnout was much higher than in the two other general elections held since the death of dictator Francisco Franco in 1975.

There were 8,150 candidates for 350 seats in the lower house of the Cortes, the Spanish parliament, and 208 seats in the Senate. The seats are allocated on the basis of the parties' total votes in each election district, and enough returns to permit projections of the outcome were expected early Friday.

The final pre-election opinion polls, published last week, indicated that the Socialists would win between 193 and 217 seats in the lower house.

EPA finalizes approval of cut in gasoline lead

NEW YORK (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency announced final approval of new rules limiting the amount of lead in gasoline, a move the agency's director said would raise gasoline prices slightly but "protect the health and welfare of all Americans."

The regulations were written after a study indicated that thousands of pre-school children had excessive levels of lead in their blood.

Small refiners, who said they faced going out of business, vowed to fight the rules in court. And one environmental group said it was disappointed that the EPA standards will not lead to a ban on leaded gasoline.

EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch said the regulations, which take effect Nov. 1, would reduce the level of lead in gasoline 34 percent by 1990 compared to the projected level under present standards.

The rules would raise the price of leaded gasoline about half a cent per gallon and cost the industry $100 million a year over an eight-year period, Mrs. Gorsuch said at a news conference.

L.L. Hankla, attorney for the Small Refiners Task Force, said in an interview that the rules could raise gasoline prices by 3 to 5 cents per gallon. He said the task force would file suit Friday to prevent the rules from going into effect.

Environmentalists were outraged last year when the Reagan administration put lead rules on a regulatory "hit list" after small refiners argued that tougher restrictions would put many of them out of business. Lead boosts the octane level of gasoline inexpensively.

Religious, political leaders state referenda positions

BOSTON — Massachusetts religious leaders united against restoration of the death penalty yesterday, citing the recent rash of crimes involving poisoned medicines as evidence that executions can lead to copycat killings.

Capital punishment "may in fact be counter-productive, inciting violence as we now see in the copycat crimes inovving the tampering with over-the-counter medicines," said Bishop John B. Coburn of the Episcopal Diocese of Massachusetts.

A proposed constitutional amendment allowing restoration of the death penalty is one of five questions on the ballot.

A group seeking passage of a proposed law giving voters control of radioactive wastes, and one battling against repeal of the state's new returnable bottle law, also were making appeals.

The question proposing a statewide vote before a radioactive waste dump or nuclear plant could be built "is not just a hazardous waste issue but a people's rights issues as well," said U.S. Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass.

He spoke at a statehouse news conference sponsored by the Massachusetts Nuclear Referendum Campaign, the groups responsible for getting the proposed law on the ballot.

Markey said there are "technical problems" with ensuring that radioactive wastes are disposed of safely, and the review contemplated under the proposed law, first by the Legislature and then by the electorate, "will assure the wastes are disposed of in the safest manner possible."

Six treated for gas inhalation near New Hampshire AFB

NEWINGTON, N.H. — Dozens of civilians, including school children and construction workers, were overcome yesterday when riot control gas being used in an Air Force drill blew from an air base into the neighboring community.

Six people were treated and released from Portsmouth Hospital and many others were administered oxygen where they were striken, authorities said.

"It looked like everyone had a massive cold attack, all hacking and coughing," said David Torni, who was paving a shopping mall parking lot less than a mile from the base.

Disarmament group protests missile tests on Cape Cod

BOURNE — Advocates of a nuclear weapons freeze have called a Veterans Day demonstration to protest the testing of an MX missile system at Otis Air Force Base. But the company who did the testing says it's finished and won't be coming back.

Action for Nuclear Disarmament: Cape Cod, a group pressing for an end to the arms race says, AVCO Systems Divison has been testing a motor for the MX missile system at the Cape Cod base for the past three months.

The group also claimed that AVCO is testing "earth penetrator technology" for the Defense Nuclear Agency in an attempt to develop a nuclear weapon that would explode below ground, destroying enemy missile silos. The group claims this technology could be used as a "first strike" weapon.

Lame excuse

As most readers may have noticed by now, much of today's Collegian is comprised of ficticious news and information designed to offer humor to our readers. Each spring, we produce a similar issue on April Fools' Day and felt such an edition was needed in the fall. Halloween seems like the appropriate time for such antics.

For our readers who rely on the regular news we offer daily, we have included this eight-page section of real news, arts and sports. For our readers who do not appreciate the humor, the outer section can be discarded and a smaller, more serious edition will remain. For those who appreciate the joke, enjoy and have a safe and happy Halloween weekend.

Candidates connect opponents to Kennedy and his policies

WASHINGTON — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy may be having an easy time seeking re-election in his native Massachusetts, but he is getting it hot and heavy in Utah. And in Texas. Not to mention Virginia, Wyoming and Tennessee.

In Senate races throughout the country, Republican candidates are trying to link their Democratic opponents unfavorably to Kennedy, who is a potential 1984 presidential contender and has been traveling beyond his home territory this year to help fellow Democrats.

In Virginia, for example, Republican Rep. Paul Trible, campaigning for an open Senate seat, says his opponent, Lt. Gov. Richard J. Davis, "would align himself with the Kennedys" if elected.

Rep. Robin Beard, R-Tenn., tells voters that Democratic Sen. James Sasser, whom he is trying to unseat, voted "right down the line" with Kennedy and other Senate liberals on foreign aid.

State news executives reject Anti-Kennedy ads

BOSTON — A right-wing group wants to publish pre-election newpaper ads featuring derogatory cartoons about Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, but several Massachusetts news executives said yesterday they rejected the ads.

Campaign aides for Kennedy's Republican opponent, Ray Shamie, disavowed any connection to the ads and said Shamie was urging newspapers not to run them.

The cartoons, prepared by Citizens Organized to Replace Kennedy, depict scenes such as a Kennedy-figure yelling for "Help" during the 1969 Chappaquiddick incident, and the Democrat romping nude on a Florida beach last spring.

CORK said its ad would run in as many as 10 newspapers, but a spot check of several papers yesterday afternoon found none that would run the material.

Donald Micozzi, general manager of the Standard-Times of New Bedford, said his newspaper had rejected the ad. "We have our own standards of excellence in advertising," he said, and the ad did not meet the standards.

Bruce Smith, executive editor of The Enterprise newspaper of Brockton, said "the advertisement was rejected...because the ad was not acceptable." Edward St. John, publisher of the Fall River Herald, said his newspaper was not given a complete advertisement, but he said he probably would turn it down based on what he saw.

CORK director Paul Brown said the advertisements, drawn from a 38-page comic book, were designed to "put Kennedy in a true light, rather than a negative light. We have not created anything untrue. We have just put the facts in a unique form."

Movements being made for concourse vendors

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) last night passed three motions concerning vendors in the building for the rest of the semester.

In a traditional move, the board voted to terminate the approval process for new vendor certification applications for the fall 1982, on Nov. 10. This date is the deadline for all people interested in obtaining a certified license to sell goods in the Campus Center for the remainder of the semester.

Ron Keefe, BOG chairman, said the cut-off day is an annual mid-November occurence designed to prevent over-cramming of vendors who want to sell during the Christmas rush, and to guarantee the vendors already certified a fair chance to sell their goods as they have been doing since the beginning of the semester.

In anticipation of the inevitable end-of-the-semester Christmas rush for gifts, the BOG voted to add up to six additional table spaces in several areas of the Student Union Building. Keefe said the move will provide the Campus Center with more vendors and more goods, and also allow Recognized Student Organizations to have more table space. The location of the spaces will be as follows: two in front of the Student Union Ballroom; and up to three additional tables in the Student Union lobby.

The board also passed a motion that reaffirms the board's policy that no vendor be approved for selling from table spaces in the Campus Center unless he or she has obtained a state sales-tax number. Keefe said the fastest method possible for acquiring these number is through drop-in application to the Bureau of Corporations and Taxation in Boston.

On other issues, Keefe said Acting Vice-Chancellor for Finance and Administration John L. DeNyse has organized a committee to discuss the Textbook Annex and the financial situation of the Campus Center beginning next week. Members of the committee include DeNyse, Keefe, Raymond Bender, assistant to DeNyse, and Graig Freedman, finance coordinator for the BOG. The committee will discuss the issue at length, as well as bringing in a variety of other people involved to receive their comments.

Professors react with uncertainty to 'unified brain theory' presentation

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Two professors from the psychology department of the University of Massachusetts said they could neither confirm nor deny the validity of a brain theory presentation given earlier this week by Kenneth Collins of Chicopee.

Collins, who staged a "sit-in protest of the scientific community" in the Campus Center earlier this month, began his lecture before several UMass professors Tuesday evenings in Tobin Hall. Although he was allowed three hours for the lecture, Collins said he covered about half his presentation in the four and a half hours he spoke, and would attempt to finish at a later date.

Collins said his theory and the "information calculus" system of mathematics he derived to describe it, "for the first time ever, rigorously unites the functioning of all of the brain's major subsystems."

Although his protest ended when University professors agreed to atend his lecture, Collins said he neither spoke with professors after the presentation nor knew which ones attended.

Thomas Grinley, president of the Council of Undergraduate Psychology, who was credited by Collins for assembling the audience, said he knew of only two professors who were present, although he "talked with a lot of people who attended" and heard "mixed reactions."

Professors Paul Herron and Jerrold Meyer, who both said they left early in the presentation, declined to comment on their views concerning the validity of Collins' theory, other than to say they could neither reject nor support it.

"I think the point is that it doesn't matter what any particular layperson or scientist thinks about the theory or any other theory," Meyer said, explaining Collins should have his paper published and judge its validity by "whether it causes more research."

Collins, who studied electrical engineering at the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md. after receiving a general studies degree from Springfield College, said his theory is based upon a topographically (non-linear) ordered number system which is integral to the brain's functioning.

"Doing science without a mathematical function foundation," Collins said of the majority of psychoanalysts who he said study the brain in non-unified and non-numerical terms, "is like trying to dismantle an automobile without tools."

Holistic medicine attacks problems at physical, mental, spiritual levels, claims Institute for Healing Arts

By JEFF POTTER
Collegian Correspondent

What we hear and eat may effect our physiological balance, emotional state or our well-being, said Jonathan S. Klate, president of the New England Institute for the Healing Arts and Sciences, Inc.

The institute, located at 17 Kellogg St. in Amherst offers courses on alternative health therapy topic such as: holistic nutrition, massage therapy, and dream interpretations and their relation to the healing process.

"If the problem is there on a physical level, it's there on a mental level, and it's there on a spiritual level," Klate said.

Holistic medicine explores all the facts of someone's environment to see what may cause an illness, he said.

The institute, established last January, "is finding the most rounded, highly-skilled clinicians, scientists and artists in many fields" to find the many influences on health and the healing process, Klate said.

Holistic medicine utilizes therapies such as massage and herbal therapies, to help people's problems that conventional medicine may overlook, he said.

"With all the wonders of modern medicine, there are a great many illnesses that don't seem to be on the threshold of being resolved," Klate said.

Conventional medicine is equally important in finding solutions, he said, but it is not finding the answers to some problems.

"There are a lot of people around who aren't getting well," Klate said.

It has only become clear in the last few years that conventional medicine cannot meet the needs of some people, he said. Conventional medicine is "failing to meet some needs at all," he said.

"The holistic concept doesn't draw as clear distinctions between the different dimensions of the human being as does conventional medicine," he said.

Klate said there may be many aspects of a person's life that may cause a specific illness, yet it may only surface a a headache, sleeplessness, or another problem.

Conventional medicine believes there is one causative agent to any healthy problem, where holistic theory feels that a person's environment is just as important to health as any one causative agent, Klate said.

"Holistic medicine is beginning to shed a lot of light on the fact that nutrition plays a much more pervasive part in holistic well-being than orthodox medicine, until very recently, was able to recognize," Klate said.

Anything that is found in the environment may affect our health in an adverse or beneficial way, he said.

It is for this reason that the institute came into being and offers programs on the methods of holistic medicine in its fall courses.

The courses are oversubscribed and the institute had to look elsewhere for classroom space to accommodate those enrolled, he said. Each non-credit course costs $150.

It is the hope of the institute to be a "multiple-year graduate school," providing complete training in the holistic application of natural therapeutics, Klate said.

The New England Institute for the Healing Arts and Sciences does not dismiss the ideas and methods of conventional medicine as ineffective, Klate said. The institute believes that conventional medicine will eventually be part of the holistic method, he said.

Campus tree planting part of beauty project

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Trees are being planted around the Campus Pond in an effort to beautify the campus as part of the Campus Landscape Improvement Project.

Jack Littlefield, director of the Facilities Planning Office, said the trees, which arrived Monday, should all be planted in the ground in front of the Library Tower by the middle of next week.

The beautification project started a few years age using funds issued by the Alumni association and is now nearing its conclusion.

"Graduate students in the department of Landscape Architect and Regional Planning designed the walks and grounds around the pond," he said.

The campus pond improvement project is one of many planned beautification projects designed to make the campus more appealing to visitors, he said. The grounds in front of the Curry Hicks Cage are the next area of the campus that will be worked on.

The campus is placing emphasis on making the campus prettier place to study as well as live. Eventually, Littlefield said, most areas of the campus should be improved if the University continues its plans.

To All On-Campus Groups:

Because of the Collegian's dependence on advertising revenue, we are forced to make this announcement. Starting Monday, Nov. 15, 1982, we will not accept any advertising for events that will be held at and/or produce revenue for businesses with delinquent accounts at the Collegian. It is your responsibility to check with the advertising department at the Collegian.

Windle Davis of Human Sexual Response, now known as Wild Kingdom.

Hey gang, whadda'ya know — it's Halloween again! And there's no better way to top off a night of massive trick or treat action than with some ghoulish rock and roll, right? So here's what's happening:

At the Rusty Nail in Sunderland: Friday night, the Neighborhoods will be performing — so what else is new? Saturday night, it's the New Race, who used to be the old Race. Sunday night is a biggie — the former members of Human Sexual Response have put together a new band called Wild Kingdom. Sound funky or what? The opening act is none other than the Scientific Americans, a personal fave rave, and a band that should probably be headlining. Skip that stupid dorm party and check this out!

At the Iron Horse in Northampton: if you've got tickets for Peggy Seeger's show on Sunday night, good for you, because they're all sold out.

Outer limits: Todd"the runt" Rundgren along with his sometime side kicks Utopia will be performing Friday night at the Agora Ballroom in West Hartford. Coming to the Agora: Men at Work on November 2, Adam and the Ants on the 13th.

At the Blue Wall: it's going to be tough to make some fun at the Wall this weekend, it's closed Friday, Saturday, and Sunday night.

About P.D.Q. Bach, I guess we really blew it didn't we? The show was not last night, as you probably know by now, but this Sunday night at the FAC. To the masses who stood out in the freezing cold waiting for the doors to open — we're sorrrry!

Arts Council gives awards for logo designs

A first prize of $250 was recently awarded to University of Massachusetts junior Paul Jamtgaard for his winning design in the Art Council's logo contest.

Other winners included Sheli Thompson, whose design placed second, and honorable mention winners Dan Bucko, Jennifer Griggs, and Robert Kirk.

The contest, which was open to all University students, featured over 100 entries. According to contest guidelines, logos were expected to "symbolize the council as an agency promoting excellence, scope, and cultural diversity in the arts on campus." Winning designs will be displayed in front of Room 125 of Herter Hall beginning Monday.

The UMass Arts Council is an organization comprised of students, faculty, and professional staff. The council supports the arts and cultural activities produced by University organizations such as the Third World Theater Series as well as supporting the five art galleries on campus. It is funded by an $8 student fee.

Steve Finley, the Council's Information Coordinator, said the Council is considering the sponsorship of a "banner festival" to coincide with the opening of basketball season. All the banners will hang in Curry Hicks Cage during basketball season.

Fraternity to hold party for local children

The Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity of the University of Massachusetts will hold a Halloween party this afternoon at 4 for Amherst school children. Admission is 50¢, which includes the party and a "haunted house" tour of the fraternity. Proceeds will go to UNICEF.

Women's health issues workshop scheduled

A women's health issues workshop will be held from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. on Monday in the Dukes Room of the Student Union Building. Leslie Chambers, a graduate student in Community Health education, will conduct the workshop.

The workshop, sponsored by the Health Aide Program, will cover the prevention of diseases women should be concerned about, a breast self-examination, and attitudes and beliefs about women's health.

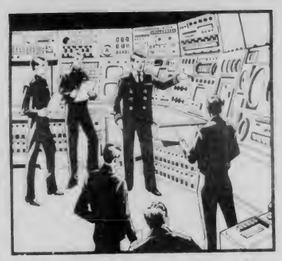
Before We Put You In Charge Of The World's Most Sophisticated Nuclear Equipment,

We Put You Through The World's Most Sophisticated Nuclear Training.



It takes more than 16 months of intensive training to become a fully qualified officer in the Nuclear Navy. You begin with four months of leadership training. Then as a Navy officer you get a full year of graduate-level training unavailable anywhere else at any price.

Navy training is based on more than 1900 reactor-years of experience. Right now the Navy operates over half the nuclear reactors in America. And the Navy's nuclear equipment is the most sophisticated in the world. That's why your Navy training is and must be the most sophisticated in the world.

As an officer in the Nuclear Navy, you have decision-making authority immediately. You get important management responsibility fast. Because in the Navy, as your knowledge grows, so does your responsibility.

Your training and experience place you among the country's most qualified professionals. (No surprise that most of the men who operate the reactors in private industry started in the Nuclear Navy.)

It takes more time and more effort to become an officer in the Nuclear Navy. But the rewards are greater, too.

The rewards can begin as early as your junior year in college. Qualify, and the Navy will pay you approximately $1000/month while you finish school.

After four years, with regular promotions and salary increases, you can be earning as much as $37,400. That's on top of a benefits package that includes medical and dental care, and 30 days' vacation earned every year. More responsibility, more money, more future. So, if you're majoring in math, engineering or the physical sciences, and you want to know more about a future in nuclear power, fill in the coupon.

Today's Nuclear Navy is an opportunity like no other in the world.

It would be so easy to sit down and write a story about how the Minuteman football team has done an el-foldo job so far this year. With a 2-5 record leveled heavily on their shoulders, it would also be very easy for the football palyers to actually start believing that they are not a good football team.

Sure it's easy. Anyone that goes to UMass knows how easy it is. The talk of the football team's struggling start resounds from the top of Sylvan Hill to the pyramids of Southwest and everywhere in between.

The celebrated senior year of Garry Pearson, the all-everything back for UMass the past two years, has been a disaster so far. Not for Pearson mind you, but even when a back is picking up another 100 yard game, it all goes for not when his team loses.

Quit on the team? Sure, why not? After all, students aren't allowed to go in and party the way they used to. No partying and no winning team in the same year? Well then, we'll just take our cheers, hollers and general support and go home. We're not playing anymore.

Reading this line of thought kinda sorta makes you realize how little logic applies here.

The football team is a representative body of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst campus. They are the best football players that UMass has and when they take the field against an opponent, they are the Massachusetts Minutemen, not Pearson or Gordon or Lopes.

Unfortunately, what the bottom line often comes down to in sports is that if the team wins, then we win. But, if the team should lose, then THEY lost. Everyone wants a piece of a winner, but a loser might just as well have leprosy.

Things, however, do not have to be that way. When 1:30 p.m. arrives on watches, clocks and certain engineering students calculators on Saturday afternoon, Alumni Stadium can be packed and hollering and screaming and supporting and, above all, fun.

Fun, that the key word: F-U-N. Say it. It doesn't hurt. Yes, you too can have fun.

Fun is watching Dwayne Lopes move in for another one of his bone crunching hits. You can hear the sound all up at the very top of the stadium.

Fun is jumping up and watching Pearson knife his way through his blockers en route to another big gainer.

Fun is joking to your friends about the way a certain player just got his supporter (also known as jock) faked off him during the previous play.

Fun is just being an active sports fan who had a chance to go out and see his or her team play and did.

And your fun can be translated into the extra lift that the Minutemen have been lacking in their last couple of games. The extra lift can be translated into a win. And, a win can be translated into more fun for you, the fan. (And I never even read Catch 22.)

The momentum towards a winning season must start tomorrow. It can't wait until someone does their laundry and decides to go next week (the procrastinators) or until some studying is done for an accounting exam that will be held next Thursday (the bookworms. And who studies on a Saturday anyway? Commie!)

The campus must get together as a group and support these guys. They're not looking for you to practice with them, eat with them, or help them study for the aforementioned accounting exam. All they need is two hours of support. And for that support they will return fun.

Fun, fun, fun. Winning is fun. The Minutemen haven't been able to have much fun without the UMass fans scaring opposing teams with their cheers.

So, come on down. Go to the package store and party before the game if you want to. Study before the game if you want to. Do your laundry before the game if you want to. Just come down and support our team, the UMass team.

And, when you come, bring a thousand or so of your friends with you.

Come in costume. Have fun. Happy Halloween.

How did you like the mask?

UConn Huskies trek into Amherst

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

Well, putting reality aside and abandoning any form of practicality, the University of Massachusetts football team still has an outside shot at the co-championship of the Yankee Conference.

For the record, it should be known that any team in the conference can finish the conference schedule 3-2 and tie with two or three other teams for the title with no clear cut representative of the league for the national playoffs.

If that happens the selection of a conference representative could turn into a political struggle because the national representative will be chosen by the athletic directors of the schools not involved.

Realistically, however, as far as UMass is concerned, any post season aspirations the Minutemen might have possessed were rudely put to rest via a 42-6 steamrolling the Minutemen suffered at the hands of Boston University last week.

But, after playing five of their first seven games away from home, Umass head coach Bob Pickett is hopeful that friendlier surrounding will impel the Minutemen to a strong finish, starting when the Minutemen hosts the University of Connecticut Saturday at Alumni Stadium.

"We have four more games at home," said Pickett. "I hope we can perform well and salvage the rest of the season so the seniors on the team will be able to look back on their last year with some amount of pride."

Pickett uses an interesting analogy to emphasize the importance of fan support. "Fans are much like voters in an election. They feel that their individual contribution won't make a difference but, of course, they're wrong," said Pickett. "What the effect will be remains to be seen."

While some Minutemen followers are down on the team after their 2-5 start, Pickett believes the people who really care about the team and the university will show up for Saturday's clash with UConn.

"I think a football fan is someone who goes to a football game because he likes football and enjoys watching good football," said the fifth-year head coach. "People who care about the team and have pride in their university are the real fans. People who show up just because the weather is nice, well, we call them fair weather fans."

The Minutemen's most vicious opponent this season has been injuries. While Pickett doesn't want to use injury problems as an excuse for the team's poor performance thus far this year, he feels injuries have taken their toll on his squad.

"We've had injuries every week and it's the same people every week: reinjuries. In football, it takes time for people to heal, and there just isn't enough time," said Pickett.

Defensive ends Joe Graham and Todd Comeau, who have both been injured in each of the last three games will be back in the line-up again tomorrow, hoping to control Huskie's star running back Joe Markus.

The Huskies come to Alumni Stadium with hopes of establishing themselves in the Yankee Conference race and the Minutemen will be doing everything within their collective power to make life miserable for the Huskies. With the thoughts of postseason play all but eased from the minds of the Minutemen, it appears the Minutemen will be playing on shear guts.

"It's tough when you set your mind to achieve something and the possiblity that you can obtain that goal ends early. Sometimes it is difficult to get people motivated," said Pickett. "But football is a game you play only once a week and that should be enough to get people motivated to give their best performance.

Kickoff is at 1:30 p.m.

Spikers set to see who will be queens of Queens

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It's Halloween weekend and the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team wil not be out for sweets. They will be out to create all sorts of mischief as they travel to the Queens College tournament this weekend.

Massachusetts, after impressive showings the past two weekends at the University of Delaware and the University of Maryland, seeks to add some wins to their ledger. UMass will in six team pool that includes the University of Connecticut (a division I school), Queens College, Central Conn., Leamean, and CW Post.

"We really look to turn things around this weekend," said heach coach Elaine Sortino. "We hope to pick up some wins to add to the win column. We're due."

After impressive performances against top notch competition in Delaware and Maryland, the UMass spikers toppled cross-town rival Smith in four games, last Wednesday night.

"We played really well," said Sortino. "I even gave them a day off yesterday."

The Minutewomen open the tourney against UConn and there is no love lost between these two arch-rivals. The other big game for UMass will be against C.W. Post, the top ranked team in New England (division II), who are 26-1.

"The spikers are all healthy now and that will be a big plus for the Minutewomen. Sortino will use both of her setters, Patty Grant and Karen Gottesman as the situations dictate. Mary Ellen Normen, Leslie Smith, and Ann Ringrose are ready to come off the bench to give UMass the depth they need.

With a good showing here this weekend, UMass will be in a good position to be invited to the Massachusetts state championships slated for November 6, at Smith.

So, Massachusetts (16-22) hopes to deal out a lot of tricks this weekend and gather in many treats, in the form of some victories.

Netwomen to hit some balls at New Englands

By BOUNCING BALLOONS
Collegian Supporter

Boy, wait until UMass field hockey coach Pam Hixon finds out what UMass athletic director Frank McInerney has done to the field hockey program.

While Hixon was away at Brown University trying in vain to find a phone with which to call in her team's score (they probably lost but who knows?) McInerney was secretly changing the format of her program.

"The problem," the Mac was explaining at a press conference last night, "is that, since we don't have ice hockey anymore we can't call ourselves a complete program. There's just nothing for the male hockey players to do around here on a varsity level."

Until now, that is. Starting next week, field hockey at UMass is a co-ed sport.

That's right, sports fans, co-ed. Now isn't that a kick in the pants. (Or is it skirt?)

Males will be given every opportunity to join what has been a totally female dominated sport. There will, of course, be some drawbacks.

Since not all schools are adopting the same measures as McInerney (most of the big schools get to have a hockey team) the males will be forced to wear skirts, just like the females, blouses, just like the females, and shower, just like the females.

"We'll be looking for mostly feminine looking guys at first," McInerney said. "That way, no one will catch on unless any hanky panky starts going on, but we've taken care of that too."

In order to keep order among the teammates, any males that make the field hockey team will be spayed in order to eliminate any urge which might arise, either on the field or in the showers.

"That's the price they'll have to pay for being varsity athletes," said McInerney. "Besides, any guy who really wants to play on a women's team when they could try out for a guy's one should be neutered."

Hixon could not be reached for a comment since she was en route from the Brown game while all these shananigans were going on but it is believed that she will be all pissed to hell.

Tryouts will be held at the NOPE fields Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

Regionals come to UM for ultimate frisbee

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will once again host a major ultimate frisbee championship this weekend when the Zoo Disc team hosts the New England Regionals at the Southwest playing fields beginning on Saturday at 10 a.m.

The competition will feature the top 16 teams from the New England area and bodies as well as discs will be flying since the top four teams from this tournament advance to the Northeast Regionals and have a shot at the nationals.

Locally, the Zoo Disc team is currently riding a seven game winning streak, including the capturing of their third consecutive Western New England title this past weekend.

The Western New England trophy was snatched out of the open hands of the Dukes, a club team from Connecticut, thanks to some clutch come-from-behind play by UMass.

Down 7-2 at the half, the UMass contingent came back to pull off an amazing 15-14 victory.

Chances for a Zoo Disc victory at the regionals tomorrow may rest with nature. Several key players on the UMass team have been plagued by injuries for most of the season and for a total team effort to be put out they must be healthy.

These key injuries belong to Tim Riviere, a starter and field leader for UMass, and John Knisely, a sometimes starter, both of whom have separated shoulders.

Jerome Seeger, the top Zoo Disc performer, has also been slowed by injury and may not be playing completely up to par.

UMass has been led much of this fall season by a group of five freshmen, who have played above and beyond what anyone had expected of them. These five are Mark Weinstein, David Mandelbaum, George Cooke, Greg Novick and Mike Nevins.

During last year's play, the Zoo Disc team was able to advance to the Northeast Regionals before succumbing in the quarterfinals.

Tournament play will go for much of the day on Saturday and will resume on Sunday when playoffs take place from the various pool of teams.

The final will be held on Sunday beginning at 2 p.m.

New bus stops in wrong place says informant

By I. C. PROBLEMS
Collegian Staff

An inside source from the Physical Plant revealed today that the new bus stops built recently in front of Hasbrouck and Graduate Research Center are in the wrong places.

"We knew the one near Grad Research was a bit off, but it seems both of them got a tad misplaced," said an official who asked not to be identified.

"This time the Plant didn't have an awful lot to do with a mix-up on campus, but we probably should have said something when we realized what was going on," he said.

The stop near Hasbrouck interferes with the buildings underground drainage system, and the one near Grad Research is "way the hell in the middle of nowhere," the informant said.

"There are plans for a shelter to go about two or three yards from one end of the new stop, but I don't know if we can change the plans," the informant said, adding that it would look "a little strange."

When the company that built the stops was contacted about the faulty workmanship, the planning division blamed it on the workmen, and the workmen blamed it on planning.

"I guess we got our wires crossed," said a company official. "We don't mind changing the sites if the University of Massachusetts asks us to do it."

"We don't work for free, of course," he added.

Boring talk set for no reason; so don't go

Howard Clown, author of the book "486 Things To Do With A University of Massachusetts Diploma," will speak at 6 p.m. Monday in 205 Herter Hall. Clown's book has been acclaimed as being the shortest piece of prose in modern history.

Don't show up to the speech if you really don't want to because no more than ten people have ever come to something advertised in a newsline anyway, and we don't want to set a precedent.

Kennedy quits

NEW BEDFORD (E.T.) — U.S. Senator Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said yesterday he was "sick and tired of getting used and abused by Shamie supporters and Conservative Organized to Blam Kennedy (C.O.B.K.) members.

Kennedy announced he was dropping out of his senatorial race against Republican Ray Shamie in order to "pursue a lifelong dream of growing tofu and getting closer to the communal spirit of oneness that resides in all of us.

"Rather than self-actualizing my dreams of being president, I intend to internalize my anguish and work for world peace and cheaper tofu."

I'll Kill You touching

I Think I'll Kill You
Directed by Lance Slaughter
Hampster 4 Theatres

By ARTHUR DUDE
Collegian Staff

Lance Slaughter's new film is one of the better pictures to hit the area in some time. I Think I'll Kill You deals with many important and universal issues: murder, death, hatred, sexual exploitation and mindless violence.

Oh sure, it's easy for someone to sit down and rag on an excessively violent and gory film, but it takes a really intelligent person to actually understand and appreciate the cleverness of such a film. The issues presented are ones which are on everyone's minds, and Slaughter understands this and is brave enough to tap into these concerns. A less risky director, like the ones who directed Ordinary People or Kramer vs. Kramer, wouldn't dare confront the horror that Slaughter is able to express.

Take the clever opening sequence for example, in which Mr. Willie (our "hero") drags a snowblower across two prepubescent girls' faces; most directors would have shot that in a mid to long shot, but Lance Slaughter is not afraid to hold a closeup (in slow motion nonetheless). A very clever scene.

Slaughter doesn't neglect aesthetics or social comment. He shoots with a jerky hand-held camera, which is a nice change of pace form the smooth, fluid shots one finds in almost every Hollywood film. Also, many shots are a little out of focus, which is probably symbolic of something. The film's quick cutting creates some confusion and this is probably symbolic also.

The film continues with Mr. Willie slashing and dispatching just about everyone he comes into contact with; his mother, his neighbor, the postman; plus full scale visits to a day care center, an orphanage and a convent. It is during this last scene that one of the film's most clever jokes lies. Mr. Willie forces one nun to repeatedly stab another, or he will kill her. The joke is that after she complies he kills her anyway.

Slaughter concludes the film with an excellent and original bit of irony. After Dr. Spottiswoode (Donald Pleasance) and Detective Faison (Joe Spinnell) capture Mr. Willie, they set him on fire and push him from the top of the orphanage. Slaughter cuts to a shot of the ground where the killer should logically be lying. But he's not there; he's gone, like he never even died. This clever twist is a perfect capper for this intriguing and clever film.

Lance Slaughter is no stranger to the motion picture field. His first film, Mommy's Dead, showed his cleverness and ability to convey visual horror through graphic imagery. Prior to this, he worked as editor and second unit director on Brain Basher. Slaughter personally conceived and filmed the now famous rake scene from that clever movie.

I Think I'll Kill You is very much worth seeing. If not just for the pleasure of watching graphic mass murder, than for the other clever aspects of the film; the acting, the cinematography and the ultimate theme: After all the death and carnage, is Mr. Willie really happy? "No man is an Island!" Think about it.

The only frame from I Think I'll Kill You that we were allowed to print.

An evocative Hamlet

HAMLET (Nonesuch Press)
By William Shakespeare
90 pages, $1.95

By S. M. ELITERATE
Collusion Staff

This dude, Willie Shakes...something or other, has proven to be a wicked good playwright and this new one he's just done-up, Hamlet, is right up there with the other biggies he's put out like A Midsummer's Wet Dream, The Taming of the Hamster, and All's Well That Ends Up in the Sack. And boy, can this guy ever tell a story. I mean, like, I know exactly where he's coming from.

William Shakespeare, author of Hamlet.

Anyhow, Hamlet is not about baby hams or anything like that. It's all about this wicked smart cat named Hamlet, you know, and like he's home for spring break from the U of Wittenberg; you know, that college out in Norway where they have those excellent keg parties? So anyway, this hoser Hamlet comes home to Denmark, right, and finds out that the turkey that's ruling now, like, killed Hamlet's Old Man, and this, like, totally blows him away! And to screw things up even more, Hamlet finds out that his Mom is, like, a total slut! She's been, like, doing it with, like, every dude in the magic kingdom. Well, Hamlet gets mega pissed-off at all this, but, like, he doesn't know what to do, you know? He gets, like, wicked spaced-out and stuff so that everyone around him thinks he's gone totally nutso, right? So, like, the ruler of the kingdom tries to have Hamlet put away, but Hamlet shows them all by putting on this pisser-excellent sword fight at the end. It's so excellent, you know, he like slashes up everyone like they did in Friday 13th pt. III. Wicked cool mega-maulin!

The play's story, like I was saying, is like wicked riveting. I got totally into it and stuff. The only thing wrong with it is that Willie, like, uses all these words like "dost" and "thy" and "hath" that are totally stupid. Like, who are you trying to kid, Willie? Clean-up your act and talk American, comprendez-vous big guy?

All in all, you got a neat little play here Willie, but let me tell you something. You've got to put in a sex scene or two if anyone's going to snag it up in the Price Chopper check-out, you know what I mean? Have Hamlet do-up Ophelia or something, OK, just to spice things up a bit. Now get outta here you bum, I love ya!

Winnebagos by Dandy Gordon

Robert DeNiro has been signed to play the title character in The Vic Morrow Story, to be directed by Martin Scorsese. DeNiro has agreed to have his head surgically removed for scenes in the latter part of the film. Meanwhile, Morrow himself, who is still on contract with Universal, will play a corporate head in Obscene Profits. Universal will also lend the actor to Warner Brothers for a lead part in The Arms of Willie McCoy.

Michael Cimino (The Deerhunter, Heaven's Gate) will direct The Plainsmen for Paramount. Centering around a sharecropper during the time of the Spanish-American War, it will star Christopher Walken. The film is budgeted at 4 billion dollars.

Former porn star Harry Reems has left the X world for good, he professes. The actor has upcoming parts in two new Hollywood films. First he plays a tennis line judge in Randal Kleiser's In and Out, In and Out. Then he will go on to play a hopeless gambler destined for failure in Blowing a Load.

Jack Nicholson has been signed to play a housewife in Curse of the Muted Lamb. Nothing else is known about the film at presstime.

Orson Welles and Marlon Brandon will play the title characters in Otto Preminger's Two Very Fat Men. Brando will be paid five million dollars a day and 50 percent of the profits for his participation in the film. Luciano Pavarotti is recording the soundtrack.

Local actor Paul (The Bag) Belval has just completed work on A Winner Never Quits and will begin shooting the sequal, A Quitter Never Wins, early next month. Belval was unavailable for comment.

MGM has acquired the rights to Air Supply's brilliant "I'm all out of love" and is turning it into a major motion picture. The megabudgeted film will feature an all-star cast, including Paul Newman, Peter O'Toole, Jane Fonda, Barbara Streisand and Sir Laurence Olivier. Director Stanley Kubrick is purportedly so committed to the project that he has refused to receive a salary. Not coincidentally, Gary Kurtz and Dino DiLaurentis are also working on projected adaptations of the song.

Following the success of the recent My Dinner with Andre, Burt Reynolds will write and produce My Dinner with Burt, in which he will also star. Said Reynolds, "The original was an interesting concept, but all that philosophy mumbo jumbo went right over my head." Burt's version will feature a conversation (with co-star Paul Dooley) about fast cars, fast women and beer drinking. Reynolds has also written a car chase into the film.

Hal Needham will direct Clint Eastwood's new vehicle, titled Better Dead than Red.

Local Best Bet: Lance Slaughter's touching I Think I'll Kill You will play through December at the Hampster 4 Theatres and The Very Pleasant St. Theatre has Ingmar Bergman's classic, Is That You, Coffin?

Burt is Burt in My Dinner with Burt.

TRAILERS Trivia: Who was the second unit gaffer on Abel Gance's 1917 film, The Balladeer of Diable? (Hint: it wasn't Victor Sternhagen.) Answer to last week's question: Annie Hall had 2,114 frames of footage in it, including closing credits.

Dead Wire by Phil Houseplante

Sounds, songs, tunes. You dudes all know what I'm talking about. Music. That's right, music. And the 'ole asparagus valley is the place to be when you're cruising for those heavy monster sounds. This week has some pretty decent offerings.

Tonight, the Blue Wall will host the wailing vibes of the Newark, N.J. based Don't Mind the Maggots, a tribute to the Blushing Brides. It's gonna be excellent to hear Stones tunes re-hashed a second time. The Atlantics will open.

Then tomorrow night will be comedy night at the Blue Wall. Comedian Ray Shamie will emcee the laugh fest.

The Chainsaw Boys will dismember a live cow on stage at the Crusty Nail Saturday night. Former back-up musicians for Barry Manilow, the Boys have decided to clean up their act and play it straight. The Atlantics will open.

For those of you who can make it out of town this weekend, Don Claw will present an evening with Max Creek tomorrow night at Boston Garden. Tickets for this baby are sure to go fast so gets your early. At $17.50 and $15.00, they're a guaranteed steal. The Atlantics will open.

While we're on the subject of the Dead, Jerry Garcia will be playing a solo acoustic gig at the Lonely Duck in Crab Apple Junction, Idaho tonight. Then he's off to Nanook's Place in Anchorage, Alaska tomorrow and on Sunday he'll meet up with Bobby and the boys for a double electric set at the Fuzzy Skipper off Exit 19 in Jersey.

The Chi Omega sorority tonight will sponsor a punk night with guests Black Flag and SS Decontrol. House president Muffy Margarine said, "like, last year's Hawaiian night was totally excellent and we all like the Go-Go's so we thought, like, a punky night'll be so cool!"

Joe "I'm an artist so anything I do is cool" Jackson will bring his irrepresible brand of insult rock to the New Haven Civic Center Sunday. No bottles. No cans. No clapping. The Atlantics will open.

UM football team beams to victory

By LT. SAAVIK
Collegian Spaceshot

For Saturday's game with the University of Connecticut, coach Nose Pickett is going all out. The Minutemen will be out there and ready to do battle thanks to the latest medical and technological advances from the 23rd century.

Using the medical wizardry of Dr. McCoy and the brains of Mr. Spock (he's really not dead dead), Pickett and his Minutemen will be prepared.

McCoy, the new team trainer, will give the defensive line a lift and with advanced pain killers and artificial joints, there is nothing UConn can do to keep Dan Brennan or Ed Kern out of the action.

McCoy has also put in a new knee for quarterback Barrett McGrath and strengthened his arm up with plenty of vitamin shots.

But, McCoy balked at the chance to join Spock on the Minuteman coaching staff. McCoy refused to take over Jim Simeone's job of keeping stats.

"Dammit, Pickett, I'm a doctor not a statistician," replied McCoy.

"Agreed. The doctor would have been very unefficient," noted Spock.

But the secret weapon will be the use of the transporter. With effective use of Spock's baby, Scotty (who will be running it — they haven't had time to teach Pickett yet) will transport Minuteman defenders to the exact spot to stop the play. This will revolutionize the defense.

The offense will benefit, too. If McGrath's pass happens to fall short, Scotty will be right there to beam in Gary Freker or Bob Simeone. Scotty will also be transporting the Huskie defenders out of the way in case of a close game.

"Aye, I'll put those braggards on Leeles 124," said Scotty.

"It should offset the problems we are having with injuries," said Pickett from the bridge of the Enterprise. "You can never be too prepared for UConn.

Admiral James T. Kirk, a UMass alumni football fan who has been disappointed with the course of the season offered Pickett the use of the starship Wednesday. When asked about changing history, Kirk replied that he didn't care if they cancelled T. J. Hooker because he wants to see UMass football in that time slot. "Promise," said Kirk.

Kirk was also gracious enough to offer the use of the bridge and Mr. Spock's station to the UMass coaching staff. No longer will Pickett's staff have to deal with faulty headsets or the noise in the stands. Communicators will be supplied and the coaching staff will have an unobstructed view from the Enterprise bridge.

The only problem may be the lack of chairs on the bridge due to the recent attack by Khan (who happens to be a UConn fan).

So, Minuteman fans, it should be an interesting day as the crew of the Enterprise attempts to help UMass football "Live long and prosper."

The sad news of Horace Neysmith's rare disease was just released. It appears that Neysmith occasionally shrinks to midget size at the very instant when he should be getting a rebound.

It's a new set of balls for field hockey team

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team will travel to New Haven, Connecticut this weekend to participate in the New England Championships at Yale University.

The netwomen will bring a record of 3-7, and a fifth place finish in the Massachusetts state championships into the 12 team tournament, and are hoping for a fifth or sixth place finish overall.

The top schools in the tournament are Yale, Harvard, Boston University, Dartmouth and Brown. UMass will be in the middle somewhere along with the University of Vermont, the University of New Hampshire, the University of Rhode Island, Northeastern, the University of Maine, and Springfield College.

UMass will be using the same lineup as they did in the states. There will be three singles tournaments with the first and second singles players playing in the first group or Flight A, the third and fourth singles playing in Flight B, and the fifth and sixth singles players in Flight C. The doubles will also have three tournaments or flights with number one doubles in A, two in B, and three in C.

The scoring will be one point for advancing each round in the main tournament, and one half point for each victory in a special consolation tournament for the first round losers. There will be no extra points for winning a tournament, and the total amount of points accumulated will win the championship.

Commenting on the season so far, UMass coach John Beal said, "The team did not do as well as I expected, but I do think that they have the ability to play better. Hopefully we will have a good spring season."

Beal feels that Ariel Fowler, the current number two singles player and a number two doubles player earlier in the season, has been the most consistent player on the team throughout the year, and is the team leader. He is also very optimistic of several new players on the team.

"People like Diana Biagioli, Chris Frazier and Laura Kaufmann all will develop into fine players. It turns out that we have a very young team with six freshmen on the squad, and Ariel is the only senior. This will give us more hope for the future," said Beal.

New system for lab fees

By TIM MacPHEE
Collegian Staff

Strong penalties, including the withholding of registration packets and possible administrative withdrawl, will be meted out to University of Massachusetts students with unpaid lab fee bills, under a new collection system. The new system, according to officials, is designed to simplify the collection and distribution process.

Lab fees, generally required for bulk purchases of materials needed for a class, had previously been paid upon issuance of a fee card handed out in class.

"Professors generally didn't like the responsibility of giving out the cards," said Mitch Gaslin, chairperson of the Undergraduate Senate Committee on rents and fees.

"The students didn't like it, and it was also an inconvenience to the Bursar's office due to lost cards," he said.

The new procedure is designed to make the system easier for everyone by eliminating the cards and adding lab fees to a student's account.

"We have tried to streamline what should be a simple procedure," said Joyce Abel, director of the Academic Affairs budget.

"Under the new system, bill-paying and classroom time don't interfere," she said. "There is less for the student to worry about."

The new system provides an account for each student. The student will be able to identify outstanding balances because they will appear on his bill.

"The basic concept is a billing-received system. If a student gets a bill, he knows how much he or she owes for what," said Bursar Robert Mishol.

"We have high hopes it will work. It seems the most effective way to solve the collection problem," Abel said.

District outreach stressed by Ryan

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

If Tom Simons had done everything he had promised to do in office, his opponent says the current district attorney for Hampshire and Franklin counties would be running unopposed.

Democrat W. Michael Ryan, Simons' opponent, said he is running for the position because of the inefficiency that has characterized the district attorney's office under Simons.

Ryan said he believes community outreach is one of the more important elements in making the office more efficient, and that he is the one who can do this.

"The DA is their (the community's) lawyer. He's the one they should talk to," Ryan said.

Ryan's position on community education is that meetings and seminars on various issues can actually simplify the attorney's job in "preventing law violations by education the public to their responsibilities under the law."

Ryan has listed a number of ideas for making the district

DA Simons says voters satisfied

By DAVID ELLIOT

Tom Simons says he's running on his record.

Although the District Attorney for Franklin and Hampshire Counties has come under sharp attack from his democratic opponent W. Michael Ryan for allegedly mismanaging his office and sporting a dismal trial record, the 40-year old Montague Republican says voters are satisfied with his performance during his four-year term.

"I think the choice for voters is between a District Attorney who has a very strong record of prosecuting criminal cases quickly, aggressively, fairly and successfully, versus my opponent who has had no prosecutorial experience and whose campaign has generally consisted of a barrage of criticism aimed at me," Simons said.

Two accomplishments of which Simons said he is particularly proud are his office's expedient prosecution of criminals and an increased concern for victims of sexual abuse.

Noting a successful conviction rate of 91 percent, he

Unity at black homecoming

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

To demonstrate unity among Third World students on campus, about 60 students participated yesterday in the Black Homecoming Parade at the University of Massachusetts.

Chanting "MAKE NOISE, BE SEEN. Black people let me hear you scream," students walked from the Amherst Common through the UMass campus to the New Africa House in the Central Residential Area. The parade was the first event of the Black Homecoming Week Celebration '82.

"We want to commemorate what all black students have done before us," said Ken Johnston, the Third World coordinator for the campus radio station WMUA. "We're the majority, not the minority. Third World people make up the majority of the world."

Dee Dee Robinson, the acting president of Afrik-Am, a UMass organization for black students, said, "When we celebrate Black Homecoming, we're expressing our culture and our cultural ways. We express it in a different manner which the University doesn't express."

Diane Higginbottom, also a member of Afrik-Am said, "I'm black and Black Homecoming means something to me. It means unity and strength."

Deirdre Bushel, a member of the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Blacks and other minority students (CCEBMS) said the rain stopped many people from coming out and participating in the parade. But those who did come out "kept going." "We felt it was something we had to do," she said.

"We didn't have as many people as we expected," said Joanne Nelson, also a member of CCEBMS. "Still, strength doesn't necessarily come in numbers."

Following the parade, those who participated gathered in the basement of the New Africa House for the presentation of a banner. The banner was given by Martin Luther King Cultural Center in Orcahrd Hill. The banner was an exact replica of the one stolen from the house two years ago.

"The banner is a way to recognize the house. People can look at it and be comfortable. It's good for the spirit of the black people on campus," said Brynne Clark, who presented the banner.

"We are going to fly this banner with all kinds of pride," said Professor Ernest Allen, acting chairman of the UMass W.E.B. Dubois Afro-American studies department, who accepted the banner on the part of the New Africa House.

Worcester paper endorses Shamie

BOSTON (AP) — Republican Ray Shamie picked up a major newspaper endorsement yesterday while Democrat Edward M. Kennedy continued his last-minute campaigning in the U.S. Senate race.

Shamie, buoyed by an unusually friendly reception Saturday outside the Boston College-Penn State football game, received the endorsement of The Sunday Telegram of Worcester. The newspaper said Kennedy had become "very much the politician out of step."

"Something has happened in Washington, something that is important to Massachusetts," the editorial said. "Both the administration and the Congress are more conservative than their predecessors. There's a sea of change in American political thinking. Ray Shamie's views have been consistent with that trend. Senator Kennedy's are not."

Shamie, who has badly trailed Kennedy in the polls, also brought his campaign to Salem yesterday for the annual Halloween celebration in the city of the witches.

He passed out cardboard Shamie masks to the children and urged their parents to think about Kennedy's record on tax increases and government spending.

Meanwhile, Kennedy attended a Democratic meeting in Weston and planned appearances at two Boston campaign rallies.

The 20-year Senate veteran received some campaign help over the weekend from former U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young, now the mayor of Atlanta. Young stressed the need for a good turnout tomorrow to help Democratic candidates, and said Kennedy was setting a good example by continuing to work hard even though "most people think that he has it made."

Democrats Michael Dukakis, who is running for governor, and Rep. Barney Frank, who is running for reelection to Congress, were both out doing last-minute campaigning yesterday.

Dukakis, Sears still campaigning

BOSTON (AP) — Democrat Michael Dukakis campaigned with some of his party's congressional candidates yesterday while Republican John Sears urged voters not to "turn the clock back" four years as the campaign for governor neared an end.

Dukakis appeared with U.S. Rep. Nicholas Mavroules in Lynn's 6th congressional district, then journeyed to his home town of Brookline to aid U.S. Rep. Barney Frank in Frank's tough race against Republican Margaret Heckler in the 4th district.

At both stops, Dukakis preached the need for a big turnout tomorrow and warned that his front-runner status meant nothing if his supporters stayed home on election day.

"We need everybody out to the polls," he told voters as they entered a Brookline pharmacy to buy their Sunday newspapers. "We can't take this election for granted. I made the mistake four years ago and have learned a painful lesson."

Dukakis spent most of his time in Brookline steering people over to Frank. "I want you voting for this guy too," he continually told passersby before departing for appearances in Marshfield, Plymouth and Brockton.

Meanwhile, Sears began a statewide campaign tour at a breakfast rally with 200 supporters in East Boston.

"Last night most of us turned the clock back and I don't want to see the voters of Massachusetts do the same thing Tuesday by bringing back 'The Duke,'" Sears said, drawing a roar of laughter. "We're going to turn that clock forward."

Israelis feared killings

LEBANON — The commander of Israeli forces in Lebanon said yesterday that every Israeli connected with the anti-guerilla operation which led to the Beirut massacre feared "somewhere in his mind" that the Lebanese Christian militiamen might slaughter Palestinians.

Maj. Gen. Amir Drory's testimony before the commission investigating the massacre appeared to contradict testimony of Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, who told the commission last week that "it never entered the mind" of any of the planners that a massacre of civilians would ensue during military operations in two west Beirut camps.

Sharon also said he did not want Israeli troops to enter the camps because of casualties they might sustain, and that he did not get any hint of a massacre until his chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan, phoned him the night of Sept. 17, a day after the Christians entered the camps.

Drory, however, said he would have preferred Israeli forces to do the mopping up, or have the Lebanese army do it because he doubted the Christian militiamen had "the fighting capability to do the job." Drory said the Lebanese army, under orders from Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan, refused Israel's repeated appeals to take on the task.

In public testimony before the three-man judicial commission, Drory said Israel finally authorized and helped plan the entry of the militiamen into the Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps after sternly warning the Christians to operate only against Palestinian guerrillas and not to harm innocent people. He said he told Eytan the morning of Sept. 17 the Christians "may have overdone it." Sharon testified that Eytan phoned him with that news at 9 p.m. that night.

Trick in treat found by two

A 12-year-old girl found a pin in a chocolate bar and another younster's trick-or-treat loot contained razor blades but neither child was hurt as parents around the state carefully screened fruit and candy this Halloween.

"We told the children you're not going out trick or treating this year, we'll have a party at home," said Joanne Largess, whose daughter found the one inch pin in Hershey's chocolate bar. "But it didn't turn out too well."

The candy came in a package of 30 bought at the Iandoli Supermarket in Auburn, police said. Police Sgt. Tom Mancuso said he notified store Manager James Kozlowski and that brand of candy was taken from the shelves of all Iandoli stores in the Auburn area as a precaution.

The pin was discovered Saturday while the children were preparing little bags of candy for their guests, Mrs. Largesse said yesterday.

"My 12-year-old came running and she said 'Mummy, I found a pin in a candy bar.' She had taken one bite... I was shocked. I thank God that she didn't get hurt," said Mrs. Largesse.

"This looked like it was embedded right into the candy," she said, adding that the box of 30 bars was sealed.

No one knows how the pin got in the candy, Mancuso said. Several other bars from the package were eaten and apparently nothing was wrong with them. The uneaten bars were turned over to police as part of the investigation.

The family went ahead with the party yesterday night, Mrs. Largesse said, but served homemade cupcakes

On Friday, two candy bars containing razor blades given to a Pittsfield tick-or-treater were discovered by the child's parents, police said.

World's Fair ends in bang

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — The World's Fair ended its six-month run in a flurry of fireworks yesterday as officials proclaimed the $115 million extravaganza a success and promoters said it would pay all its bills.

The fair, with energy as its theme, attracted scores of exhibits and drew millions of people to this Appalachian city.

The exposition reached its attendance goal of 11 million "visits" on Saturday. Exposition President S.H. "Bo" Roberts Jr. said that represented about 10.2 million paid admissions because each day's count of "turnstile clicks" included about 4,300 employees, performers and non-paying guests.

Represented were the United States and 15 foreign countries, plus the 10 nations of the European Common Market, six states and more than 60 corporations and organizations.

The most popular exhibits were those of China, Peru, Egypt, Australia, Japan, South Korea and Saudi Arabia, which emphasized culture rather than energy.

China's pavilion was the biggest draw. People waited in line for hours each day to see bricks from the Great Wall and thousands of pieces of Oriental art, most of which were for sale.

It was China's first appearance at a world's fair since the St. Louis exposition of 1904, and the communist nation showed it had learned a few lessons in capitalism.

Lu Fenchun, China's commissioner general, said the exhibit sold about 80 percent of its contents to visitors for about $5.6 million.

Visitors often complained about long lines and the Appalachian summer heat. But tourist housing was the only major problem. Thousands of people sought refunds for expensive lodgings they booked — and paid for in advance — at shoddy pre-fabricated motels.

Civic leaders who began organizing the fair in 1975 envisioned it as a way of revitalizing a dying downtown, and they built the fair on a 72-acre dilapidated railroad yard between the business district and the 30,000-student University of Tennessee campus.

When the Southeast's first world's fair opened May 1 in this city of 183,000 people, few outside Knoxville thought it could be a success.

Tent towns protest policies

Makeshift settlements known as "Reagan Ranches" went up in 12 cities over the weekend as community, labor and anti-nuclear activists marked their opposition to Reagan administration policies with soup lines, songs and games.

In Minnesota, two demonstrators decked out in rags and survival gear went to a small town not far from Minneapolis-St. Paul and asked residents to take them in, saying they wanted to show it would be futile to try to evacuate people in the event of a nuclear war.

"Reagan Ranches," tent cities designed to bring back memories of the "Hoovervilles" of the Depression, were set up Saturday in Los Angeles; Bridgeport, Conn.; Des Moines, Iowa; Albuquerque, N.M.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Sioux Falls, S.D.; Austin, Texas; Dallas; Raleigh, N.C.; Miami; and Jacksonville, Fla.; and on Friday in St. Paul, Minn.

Ghost scares night shift

THOMASVILLE, N.C. — A furniture factory abolished its night shift after production slipped 30 percent and a dozen workers quit, claiming they had seen a ghost.

Night workers at San-Mor Inc. have reported seeing a ghost they've nicknamed "Lucas" — for Lucifer — since San-Mor took over the cinderblock building 10 years ago.

"When the first few people quit, we wouldn't admit we had a problem," said Victor Couch, one of the owners. "We didn't want to scare away all our employees. But we knew they were telling the truth because we had seen him, too."

The 6-foot-tall figure, which appears only at night, dresses in a long-sleeved, checked work shirt and khaki pants, workers say.

It looks like a man aged about 50, but Couch said "his features are sort of blurred."

"I guess I've seen him 50 times," Couch said. "He has never spoken to anybody and he has never hurt anybody."

Workers have heard large objects fall, only to find nothing amiss when they investigated, Couch said. At other times, employees would find their tools moved or stacks of lumber shuffled around.

Although it is unnerving, Couch says he doesn't want Lucas to leave.

"He's the best watchdog I've ever had," he said. "He doesn't have to carry a gun to scare somebody off."

Book on drunk driving

MARSHFIELD, Mass. — Competition among states for the toughest new law against drunken driving can be "bad news" for the sober motorist as well as the intoxicated one, defense attorney F. Lee Bailey says in a handbook of legal advice for motorists.

Bailey, who was acquitted of a drunken driving charge earlier this year in San Francisco, said there is "a new atmosphere now, an electricity in the air of traffic regulation.

"... The cops have decided to set some fierce public examples of their new hard line, probably to scare drivers into going easy on the booze."

In his book "How To Protect Yourself Against Cops In California And Other Strange Places," the attorney said a recent wave of new laws has led to problems for innocent motorists who don't know how to exercise their legal rights in a police station.

'Horsing around' in future after dedication of arena

By BECKY THATCHER
Collegian Correspondent

The Robert P. Lawrence Indoor Riding Arena, dedicated Friday by University of Massachusetts and state officials, is the result of increasingly important donations from the private sector, according to the chairman of the Equine Center Council, Donald A. Upton.

In his introductory speech, Upton stressed the significance of a structure built entirely without state funding.

UMass President David C. Knapp agreed, and said, "Private sector giving is going to be an important part of the future of the university."

The arena, located at Tilson Farm at UMass, was first proposed 16 years age to the state by Director of the Equine Studies Program, Dr. Anthony Borton. In 1978, Sarah Carlson Geike, who then served as Director of Riding, began the Equine Center Council, a group of private individuals dedicated to the task of raising the funds for an indoor arena.

The group, chaired first by Mrs. Winthrop S. Dakin, raised the $140,000 needed to build the arena in three years. The bulk of the money was donated by a 1922 graduate of Massachusetts Agricultural College, as UMass was called then, Dr. Robert P. Lawrence.

Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, presented Upton with a citation from the state House of Representatives to the Equine Center Council, "in recognition of the Council's vision and perseverance in the creation of the riding arena."

John F. O'Connel Jr., executive vice president of the University of Massachusetts Foundation, Inc., presented the keys to the arena to Chancellor Joseph Duffey. Eight students from the riding program, each sporting an alphabetical letter, rode into the arena and spelled out T-H-A-N-K-Y-O-U.

Duffey made the comment during his speech that the arena is part of giving students a well-rounded education. Until now, students involved in the riding program have been dependent on weather and other circumstances to train and work with the horses. The new arena guarantees year-round education for these students, as well as possible implementation of related courses in the future. The chancellor added that students should understand nature as well as technology and the humanities.

Candidate says a Socialist vote is 'effective protest'

By KAREN POLLENS
Collegian Correspondent

Don Gurewitz is a fulltime machinist and member of the United Electrical Workers Union, and is running for the office of Governor of Massachusetts.

At his Campus Center appearance Saturday, Gurewitz acknowledged he has little chance of becoming the next governor of Massachusetts. But he said he believes that a vote for him is an effective protest against what the other candidates have offered as solutions to the economic distress of working people.

Gurewitz is a member of the Socialist Workers Party.

"Between the Republican Reagan administration and the Democratic King administration, working people in Massachusetts are experiencing the most difficult times in decades," said Gurewitz.

Both Sears' and Dukakis' programs reflect "a lasting respect for corporations' profit margins," Gurewitz said.

"I'm a machinist," Gurewitz said. All the other candidates on the ballot are lawyers or businessmen, or lawyers for businessmen.

Gurewitz described the situation of some of the people who work with him at the General Electric plant in Lynn. "They can't afford to buy houses and they can't send their kids to college. In addition they are dealing with all kinds of cutbacks," he said.

In contrast to workers in non-union plants, or the unemployed, however, Gurewitz said, "These people are well off. For those earning the lower salaries or not working at all, things are intolerable."

"And we think they're going to ger worse unless people like us get a voice in government, and that's not going to happen through the Democratic or Republican parties," he said.

Concerning higher education, Gurewitz said students should have more money to pay for school.

"They should receive a stipend large enough to allow them to dedicate themselves to their studies without having to work, because it is to society's advantage to have people that are educated."

The U.S. is the only major industrial country in the world with no labor representation in government, he said.

Gurewitz said for a labor party to be effective it would have to consist of a coalition with other non-union groups who also feel their interests are not being represented. These groups could include women's groups and minority organizations.

Gurewitz spent most of his time at UMass Saturday showing slides of his trip to Nicaragua.

"Our relations with Nicaragua, are vitally important, to Massachusetts and every other state. The past has proven that if the U.S. initiates another Viet Nam in Latin America, beside it every other issue will pale," Gurewitz said.

College students aid police patrols

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Correspondent

The Amherst Police Department's Community Service Officer (CSO) program provides downtown Amherst with extra protection while giving students of law enforcement some valuable experience.

Community Service Officers are unarmed special police officers assigned to patrol the center of town, report any problems to the police station, and make themselves available for general public assistance.

The officers have the power of arrest, but it is restricted by departmental policy.

"The general rule is that CSO's will no make arrests," Amherst Police Lieutenant David Jankowski said yesterday. "They can make arrests when the lives or safety of the public are in immediate danger, but when there is no deadly force involved."

"They've been a very effective force in the police department," Jankowski added.

The program was initiated by a Federal grant of $30,000 in 1974. These funds were used for recruiting, selection, and a three-week training of candidates, Jankowski said. After that, the town picked up the expense, and has funded the program ever since.

The program's budget is $33,000 a year.

The officers are college students, who must be enrolled in a law enforcement related college curriculum. An exception to this rule is Robert A. Thrasher, 22, a Community Service Officer who recently received his bachelor's degree in criminal justice from Northeastern University. Thrasher worked for his associate degree at Greenfield Community College, and has worked in the program for almost two years.

Thrasher said he enjoys his position, and is pleased with the expereince he is getting, "Career-wise, its done me a lot of good," he said. "My age is a big help. I can say to someone, 'Look, I'm the same age as you are. I know where you're at, so please cool it.'

Thrasher is also a Hampshire College security officer, and said he is planning to do graduate work at the University of Massachusetts, and work for either the Smith College or UMass police departments.

SGA Hotline is open and working

By ANNE MCCRORY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) Hotline is waiting to hear problems, complaints and criticisms relating to the university.

"We want to make (the university) a better place to live," said Sylvia Smith, an SGA senator and hotline coordinator. "(Its purpose is) to let students have input on what's going on around campus," she said.

The hotline is staffed by SGA senators. When a call is received, a form is filled out stating the problem. Hotline operators answer simple questions themselves, while complex problems are referred to the appropriate SGA committee or the Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy (SCERA.)

"The program was successful last year in that it solved all the problems (people call in)," said Smith.

One example of the hotline's work concerns a complaint received about needed dorm repairs. The complaint was referred to the Area Management Coordinator, who resolved the problem.

A caller may choose whether or not to leave his name. If he wishes, he is promised a response within a week. After this time, if the problem has not been solved, the SGA begins its own investigation.

The SGA hotline first opened last April and operated for the remainder of the spring semester. It began this semester on Oct. 25, and will operate for the rest of the school year.

The hotline is open to receive calls Mon. - Thurs. 10-7 and Fri. 10-5 at 545-0343.

Weekender meal plan provides "something different"

By BILL THOMAS
Collegian Staff

The Department of Food Services has collaborated with the Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration (HRTA) department to initiate a new food service known as "The Weekender."

Steak, chicken, or pasta are served on an alternating basis, although Weekender Coordinator Don McGann said eventually he would like to expand the service to include other menu items.

Every other Sunday night in the Worcester and Hampshire dining commons students on the 14 and 19 meal plans can purchase a meal of steak for an additional $2 or pasta for $1 extra.

"I'm very enthusiastic about it. We have fresh-baked apple pie, brownie a la mode, spumoni with claret sauce and rum cake, that sort of thing. We're looking to provide something a little different from the D.C. that the students like," McGann said.

The Weekender was instituted this semester in order to reduce the length of lines in the dining commons on Sunday nights, McGann said. He said The Weekender was originated "to take about 500 people out of the Franklin and Berkshire lines on Sunday night."

In a survey taken by Food Services last spring, students indicated "they'd be willing to pay a little additional if we'd offer an alternative," McGann said.

We tried to get away from the D.C. type atmosphere as much as we could. We did this by putting tablecloths out, flowers on the table, having aprons and hats with The Weekender logo on it and a bread table where the students could serve themselves," McGann said.

"I've left the running of the operation in the hands of the student managers so far and to this point they're doing a very good job of it," McGann said.

About 35 HRTA students work an average of eight hours a week and switch jobs in order to get a balanced experience in restaurant operation. There is only one professional cook in each building.

McGann said the service has been effective in cutting down Sunday night lines at the Berkshire Dining Commons, with 454 students patronizing The Weekender at Hampshire Dining Commons last week. "Within a few weeks I feel that we'll probably meet our goal (of 500 customers," McGann said.

Sporting Co-op gets active promoting student business

By VICKI A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Correspondent

New advertising ideas and attractive displays all lend themselves to a new image, as the UMass Sporting Goods Co-op changes it name to "Let's Get Physical — Sporting Goods for Less," and embarks on a new year.

The old name, UMass Sporting Goods Co-op, "just doesn't cut it" in trying to promote business, says Susan Kindlund, the student manager.

"We needed something more exciting," she said.

Kindlund said she feels their success so far is due to the students participating in the stores management this year.

Kindlund, a fashion merchandising major, along with three marketing students and one accounting student are running the sports co-op this year in exchange for 3 credits per semester. There are also two work-study students filling cashier jobs in the store.

Kindlund says the marketing students have done much to upgrade sales through advertising and attractive displays.

"Our purpose," says Kindlund, "is to provide low cost sporting equipment to the UMass students."

Although at this time, the store is running with only a partial inventory, there are running shoes, turf shoes, athletic socks, and other sporting equipment for sale at just above wholesale prices.

The sports co-op competes directly with the University Store and other stores in the Amherst area. Kindlund said there is serious competition between the co-op and the University Store, but she does not think the competition is a threat to the existence of the co-op.

The co-op has the advantage of selling sporting items at a low cost. They also resole shoes and restring raquets.

"We also have the largest selection of frisbees in Amherst," says Kindland.

The co-op is open Monday through Friday from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Responsibility & the Student Senate

It is necessary at this time to make a few comments on the recent Undergraduate Student Senate endorsement of incumbent State Senator John Olver over James Tripp in the upcoming election. I argue not on the grounds that it may be inappropriate for a supposedly non-partisan body to endorse a partisan candidate. Perhaps, if it was truly representative of its constituency it should. Instead, my argument lies with the processes by which such an endorsement was given, and the subsequent lack of decency in not giving Mr. Tripp an apology for mis-statements that were made.

Timmi W. Rudolph

On October 20, the leadership of the Student Senate introduced a measure to endorse Mr. Olver. Rather than allow the senators to check out the respective candidates, rather than allow the senators to return to their constituencies and obtain some feedback, rather than allow the senators to find out the facts, the President and the Senate leadership wanted an immediate vote. In the ensuing debate the senate was misinformed and Mr. Tripp was falsely accused of not speaking to the students on campus. I saw Mr. Tripp speak on campus with John Sears, and it was a blatant act to sway the vote of a senate through such a tactic of falsehoods.

No matter the ultimate bearing of the misinformation, a slight had been made. Misinformation, on its face and by its nature, can hurt. Even if mistakenly dispersed, even with no intended malice, misinformation hurts the responsible decision of the senate, hurts the little integrity that the SGA holds onto, and hurts the person that the information is directed at.

In light of this, I feel it completely irresponsible for the Student Senate not to have offered an apology to Mr. Tripp last Wednesday. Such an apology should be acclaimation, not denied by heated debate where further falsehoods were used.

At this point it must be made clear that the SGA in its present form is less than a responsible body, it would be a fallacy to think otherwise. To attain the stature and esteem such a representative body should warrant some changes must be made. The Senate must have a realisistic outlook and work within the constraints of the system. Work with to accomplish, not against to disrupt. The SGA must regain its integrity and rise from the political depths to which it has sunk. The Senate must be made accountable for its mistakes. The Senators must be made accountable to their constituencies, to be otherwise would be folly in an organization based on democratic principles. Reform is long overdue.

It is believed on campus and throughout the local area that the Student Senate is an irresponsible body. In its actions the Senate has done little to prove otherwise. If the Senate does not improve on its policies and methods at arriving at those policies, then perhaps it is better that the Student Senate be considered a less than responsible and more than ineffectual institution.

Cast a vote for needed change

Election Day is upon us once again and this election, coming as it does midway through President Ronald Reagan's four-year term is particularly important. It will serve as an indicator to the President (and everyone else) as to whether or not we, the public, are satisfied with the direction he is leading the country.

Consequently, the Republican campaign motto is "Stay the Course". As voters, we need to review the "Course" of the last two years and determine if we want more of the same for the next two years.

Foreign policy, military spending, social spending cuts, and the environment are just a few of the pertinent policies that should be scrutinized. Let us examine them all, starting with the economy.

At its most basic level, the issue is simple and can be broken down into two options: one being less inflation and fewer people employed, or higher employment at the cost of more inflation. Whatever your preference, Reagan's continued promise that prosperity is just around the corner continues to ring false.

The big knock on former President Jimmy Carter was that his foreign policy was weak and indecisive. Does our present foreign policy vacillate any less; is it any more effective? No. The continuing Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, the crisis in Poland, the debacle in Lebanon, the Falkland's War, the pipeline fiasco, secretary of State Alexander Haig's resignation, and the arms race tell us.

Reagan and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, with the essential support of a Republican Senate and a weak Democratic House of Representatives, have enacted the largest peacetime defense buildup in American history. They have reignited the arms race with the Soviet Union. The money channeled into the Pentagon has weakened the economy and increased the budget deficit. Does America need this?

As a result of the increased defense spending, social security, job programs, and financial aid to college students have all been undermined. Is that what America wants?

A long range concern often ignored in the short run, the environment, has been taking its lumps from the Reagan Administration. Reagan has purposely appointed anti-environmentalists to be the guardians of our environment. James Watt, head of the Environmental Protection Agency, is the prime example of this. Watt, a firm believer that Jesus Christ's Second Coming is less than a century away, is more interested in helping the oil companies get what they want than in preserving nature for future generations.

Unfortunately, the damage the short-sighted Watt is wreaking upon the environment will have far-ranging permanent effects. Can America afford to have two decades of an improving environment reversed by such a thoughtless policy?

If you can answer these questions in a positive manner, stay the course and vote Republican. If not, vote for people opposed to these policies, be them Democrats, Independents, or even Republicans. But whatever your vote, be sure to cast it.

Letters

Harvard band's anties unfair

Editors note: this letter was also sent to Derek Bok, the President of Harvard University; and the band directors for Harvard University and the University of Massachusetts

To the Editor:

Even though a month has passed since the Massachusetts vs. Harvard football game, the bitterness of that day still lingers.

Two football teams fought their best and Harvard was victorious. Fine. What was astounding however, was the colossal show of what I can only view as extremely bad manners by the Harvard band.

I suppose we could look at the Harvard band's anties during the UMass's halftime show as "cute" or "spirited" or "clever". But in pondering the total impression of the Harvard Band's activities and one specific verbally vulgar ditty on Sept. 25, it appears that "cleverness" is to be the supreme virtue...even at the cost of common courtesy!

We have always considered Harvard to be among the most prestigious schools in the nation. Your band's distracting display at halftime shook our belief; your band's abominable display at game's end destroyed our belief.

In the last few minutes of the game the UMass band duly announced their intention to perform for those who wished to remain. After they marched onto the field and assumed a position of attention, your Harvard band adamantly continued to play one selection after another (perhaps five or more), all the while ignoring the hundreds of musical guests on the field and the many hundreds of guests waiting for the UMass band to perform.

To me the Harvard band director demonstrated a degree of ignorance, a lack of consideration, and perhaps jealousy of the guests. After many minutes of polite waiting by the UMass band, the crowd in the stands aptly expressed their sentiments with the chant of "No class Harvard".

The one benefit I can see from this incident is that it gave an excellent opportunity for the UMass band to exemplify a high measure of patience and dignity in a forced and unpleasant situation. Compliments to Mr. George Parks, the UMass band director, for exercising good judgement and control.

If this letter conveys only one thing: may it be that healthy competition between schools is great; but please let us always value courtesy and consideration toward one another.

UPC policy benefits students

To the Editor:

I would like to take the time to clarify Mr. Altneu's misconceptions concerning UPC's complimentary ticket policy. Mr. Altneu stated that the University and its students have priority. The reason Mr. Altneu only receives one ticket instead of two is so that a student may purchase one. I fail to see the rational behind the Index having two photographers at every concert. UPC has decreased the number of complimentary tickets so that paying students are allowed more seats.

A gentle Yentl

YENTL
October 28
Theatre 14, Smith College

By ELLEN GOULD
Collegian Correspondant

Yentl, now in production at Smith College, is the story of a Jewish girl growing up in Poland in 1873. It was adapted for the stage by Leah Napolin and Isaac Bashevis Singer from Mr. Singer's short story, Yentl the Yeshiva Boy.

As a young girl, Yentl (Victoria Stern) persuades her father to teach her to read the Torah and the other religious teachings of the Jewish faith, forbidden to women at that time. After her father dies, Yentl makes up her mind to go to a Yeshiva (place of study for the boys) disguised as a man. On her way she is befriended by Avigdor (Arnold Zar Kessler) and they become fast friends during the course of the play. Yentl takes her friendship with Avigdor so seriously that she decides to marry Hadass (Dee Pelletier), the woman Avigdor is in love with; she plans on leaving Hadass soon so that she will be free to marry Avigdor. After numerous close calls, Yentl becomes so fearful of being discovered that she leaves the Yeshiva and divorces Hadass. The couple lives happily ever after with lots of children and Yentl lives on masquerading as a man.

The play would be better suited to a film or television performance than to the stage. The action jumps from scene to scene, connected by short interludes that seem to serve little more purpose than to keep the audience occupied during the long and noisy set changes. The lighting is rather dull and unimaginative, and doubly annoying when the actors couldn't find what little light there was on stage.

The three main characters, Yentl, Avigdor, and Hadass are portrayed nicely by their respective actors, but the roles could have been played much more effectively with better direction. The staging was very much akin to the techniques used in musical comedy; unfortunately, this is not a musical. When all else fails, it can't even rely on big production numbers to save it.

Yentl is an interesting ethnic lesson for people unfamiliar with Jewish culture. An accompanying exhibit about Jewish women and customs in Poland and surrounding Europe is set up in the lobby, providing a good dramatic background for the play. There are three more performances this weekend, November 4, 5, and 6, at 8:00 PM in Theatre 14, in the Theatre complex at Smith College.

Internationally-acclaimed composer and performer Donald Knaack will present a solo percussion concert at 8 p.m. on Tuesday November 2 in Bezanson Recital Hall at the FAC. Knaack's compositions bring together a variety of media forms including live and pre-recorded music, projection, film, dance and sculpture. Tuesday evening's concert will feature a performance of Knaack's 1982 composition "Inside the Plastic Lotus," written for performer, tape, projection, and film. The themes of the work center around the years Knaack spent in Los Angeles. The evening's program will also feature his "...for John Cage" for vibraphone, as well as his "Dance Music I and II for solo percussion and film.

Boston based comedian Chance Langton will be appearing at the Blue Wall's Comedy Night at 8 p.m. on November 2.

Sly Stallone's Blood flows

FIRST BLOOD
Directed by Ted Kotcheff
Hampshire 4 Theaters

By TOM FAISON
Collegian Staff

Ted Kotcheff's new film First Blood isn't exactly The Best Years of Our Lives for the "me" decade, but neither is it the foul piece of trash that many critics claim it to be.

The plot, although shockingly simple, serves as a satisfactory vehicle to present some excellent stuntwork while simultaneously capturing the cinematic beauty of our nation's Pacific Northwest.

As the film opens, we find our "hero" John Rambo (Stallone — one of the most explosive forces in Hollywood today) wandering through rural Washington State in search of an old war buddy. Actually, his friend has since been stricken with Agent Orange induced cancer thus leaving Stallone as the lone survivor of the old team.

Enter Blue Neck sheriff Brian Dennehy and his local deputy goon squad. Not realizing that Rambo is an ex Green Beret and Congressional Medal of Honor recipient, they arrest him for vagrancy and quickly proceed to beat him in their best mongoloid style.

Before long, Rambo goes beserk and trashes twenty cops, a police station and two police cars in his haste to make it to the woods. Miraculously no one gets killed (or gets a shot off edgewise) and the movie is off and running. Here the trusty "killing machine" cliche finally surfaces and Sly, the one man Army, promptly dispatches (he only maims) a squad of cops, a company of National Guardsmen, a helicopter, a truck, two police cars and finally the entire town of Joy, Washington.

Scriptwise, Stallone has less to say than the mad killer of The Halloween epics, but relies on Richard Crenna (in a supporting role as Sly's old Green Beret Commander) to provide the film with its badly needed conscience. Crenna is good here and he is provided with the film's best lines, especially when he sarcastically cuts up Dennehy's slob sheriff and Bill McKinney's hapless National Guard Commander.

Suspense-wise, the film is first rate. Starting with the initial confrontation between Stallone and Dennehy it takes off in a rocket pace and doesn't stop for a break. In fact a group of law students who were watching the film with me complained of their inability to go to the bathroom for fear of "missin' sometin' good."

Fatal Slide worth ride

By PETER BENTTINEN
Collegian Correspondent

Well what do you know, rock from Canada that's not heavy metal. How such a really good band got stuck in Canada is anyone's guess. I'm not picking on Canada, it's just that the country is not particularly famous for producing good rock bands. This group isn't quite so heavy as Rush or Triumph. Fatal Slide is a four man band with a real tight sound, akin to no one in particular.

"Five Year Plan" leads off the show. It is a quick song that gives us an idea how the next five years are supposed to happen. Must be a very fast five years. The title song follows with a keyboard intro. It's a compact song that flies along in a regular rock song flow. There's a nice break in the middle using the keyboards included. "Social Service" runs along with the Lena Lovich type sound. Quick beat, quick phrasing, good tune. A first-class bass and drum combo starts off the next composition with guitar and keyboards coming in a little later, along with some horns.

"U What You Want" opens side 2 by continuing the superb frame of arrangement on side 1. There is a different singer on this one. "You Don't Know" starts out with insistent guitar keyboard chording that stays there throughout. "Slippin So Tight" has a fine synthesized beginning that flows through the tune, with the bass guitar commanding respect, and the listener's notice. "Gone Too Far" quickens the pace, repeating the title of the song, perhaps a little too often though. The final song, "Forget," also connects all the instruments together in a quality of repose.

The songs on this album don't jump at you the way songs on their last album, Stranger Silence did. Although the record is still excellent. Any Reds album is worth picking up.

The Preservation Hall Jazz Band will perform at 8 p.m., Thursday in the Fine Arts Center.

attorneys office run more efficiently, including a case flow management system and the use of student interns as aides.

"Interns would be useful in making the office more open and accessible," he said. Ryan added that students in the office could also free professional staff for meetings with the community.

"Everyone has an opinion. (For example) people have a lot of questions about the environment. There are a lot of environmentalists living here because they like the clean air and rich soil, and want to know how to protect what they have," he said .

Ryan's policy statement on open meeting laws also includes an education program to "explain nuances of current laws to the various public boards... and to inform them of recent statutes, older statutes of which they may be unaware and their responsibilities under each."

His statement on open meeting laws said, "A well-informed public can better assert its rights and shoulder its responsibilities."

Crimes of violence against the elderly and aggravated rape are two areas Ryan said he would personally prosecute.

"(As district attorney) I would pick and choose those cases I would like to draw public attention to," he said.

Ryan added that when the head of the office handles a case, pulic interest is focused on those issues.

said, "I frankly don't know of another office which prosecutes cases as fast as we do."

The former four-term state representative has been criticized for not having female prosecutors on his staff to handle rape cases. The Oct. 20 edition of the Valley Advocate said that while campaigning in 1978, Simons promised to hire women prosecutors.

Simons denied making the statement.

"No, I didn't say that. I said I would encourage the hiring of women in the District Attorney's office," Simons said.

"A very substantial part of the work in our office deals with sexual assault cases. We prioritize these cases and try to prosecute them quicker," Simons said. "One of the real strengths of the office is concern for victims. These people are terribly traumatized by the crime. They may need psychological counseling and physical treatment."

Simons outlined four changes which he would like to initiate in his office.

First, he would like to enlarge the Victim-Witness Assistance Program, to provide counseling for victims of property theft. Currently, the program counsels victims of sexual abuse only.

"One of the facets of this would be the concept of restitution for the victims," Simons said.

Secondly, Simons would like to involve prosecutors in minor criminal cases, such as automobile theft and larceny, at an earlier stage to facilitate successful prosecution. Currently, the office works with state and local police only on more serious offenses.

Third, Simons would like to step up prosecution of criminals with lengthy records.

Two more wins for playoff bound booters

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

"We maintained our composure and played a much better game today," said UMass women's soccer coach Kalekeni Banda about his team's 2-0 victory over an 8th ranked George Mason University yesterday.

The women played a rough, aggressive game under rainy skies as they ended their regular season play and began looking forward to the NCAA playoffs.

UMass had some close scoring opportunities but it seemed a George Mason defender was always there to block the ball. The two goals that were scored, however, were well deserved.

With three minutes left in the first half, forward Debbie Harackiewicz scored on a corner kick. The George Mason goalie, Linda Hilberath, caught the ball as it sailed into the net.

A minute later, senior Natalie Prosser and Stacey Flionis combined to score a beautiful goal. Rushing down the right side of the field, Flionis kept the ball long enough to lead Hilberath out of the net while Prosser got in front all alone. Flionis passed to Prosser who caught the ball before it went by her, and slipped it into the net before Hilberath could get back.

"They played pressure soccer," assistant coach James Williams said. "They're playing together very well. I think we're in better shape than any team we've played."

UMass goalie Tammie Easton played a good game in the nets and the women's defense kept George Mason shots on goal down to two.

The women played a more relaxed game on Saturday against the University of New Hampshire as compared to the high pressure game against George Mason. The team beat UNH 3-0.

Eight and a half minutes into the game, Christine Taggart calmly put the ball into the net to start the scoring. Taggart ran up to the goalie and after missing once, turned around and, took a casual boot into the net. She was assisted by Prosser.

The second goal was scored on a breakaway when Jamie Watson rushed down the field and passed to Flionis who ran in on the goalie, Missy Thayer, and popped the ball in.

A lot of bodies were flying through the air during the first half. UMass never stopped hustling and, at the same time, played a relaxed and unhurried game.

The third goal came with eight minutes remaining in the first period. Sharon Dagget passed the ball to Watson who ran up and shot the ball to the left of Thayer. She dived to block the ball but it hit the post just beyond her reach and bounced in behind her.

The second half was mostly spent in the New Hampshire end and UMass was in control. The team was unselfish in their passing game and had many potential scoring chances.

On Saturday, the UMass women start the first round of the NCAA tournament. The game will be at home since they are one of the top eight teams in the nation. The team they will play is undetermined right now but it will probably be a team from New York, according to Williams.

"We have the possibility of going all the way but it's real wide open," Williams said. "Anyone can win on any given day and we'll do everything we can."

Field hockey team prevails

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team extended its record to 13-2-1 this Saturday, when the Minutewomen defeated the University of Rhode Island 1-0.

Coming onto the field after last Thursday's 8-1 white washing of Brown University, the Minutewomen were feeling good, and looking forward to playing a strong, dominating game.

The stickers outnumbered URI in all of the statistics columns for the first half, yet they were unable to find the net. The stickers' forward line had numerous opportunities, 14 corners and 11 shots on goal, and time and time again they were turned back by the URI defense.

The ball spent most of the first half in the URI end of the field, and UMass goalie Patty Shea needed only two saves to keep the board clean at the half.

Midway throught the second half, UMass' Judy Morgan, back from an injury, scored what would be the only tally of the game.

On a free hit going into the circle, Morgan nailed the ball past the URI goalie.

Statistics for the second half were a little less impressive: four shots and four corners for the Minutewomen. Shea did not have to make a save in the half.

Tuesday, UMass meets with Boston University on the upper NOPE field at 2:30 p.m. Saturday, the stickers will be traveling to the University of Connecticut where they will be facing the number two ranked team in the nation, the UConn Huskies. The Minutewomen are currently ranked tenth in the nation.

UM puts a collar on Huskies

Pearson top dog of the day

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

As a coach of a football team that has lost its last two games by a combined total of 54 points while losing four starters from a defensive unit that was already depleted by injuries, you can't help but decide to make some changes.

At Alumni Stadium Saturday it was some of the new mixed with a lot of the old, and it all added up to a 30-14 Yankee Conference victory for the Minutemen over the University of Connecticut Huskies before 9,932 spectators.

The mix was the makeshift defensive line up UMass head coach Bob Pickett and UMass defensive coach Jimmy Reid configured up this week, which included moving fullback Tom Murray to nose guard and offensive guard Jerry Gordon to defensive tackle.

The old was the same old Garry "I like playing UConn" Pearson performance as the senior tailback ran for over 200 yards against UConn for the second time in three years, scored all four UMass touchdowns, and set a UMass single game record for most rushing attempts with 38 carries.

"I don't want to go back home losing to UConn," reasoned the Bristol, Connecticut native who ran for 215 yards Saturday, and has had the three best days of his career against UConn. "It's definitely the home state thing. I don't like to lose to UConn."

The first touchdown came after Tom Murray nailed UConn quarterback Larry Corn and Glenn Holden recovered the fumble on the 12 yard line. Three plays later, Pearson high stepped it over from three yeards out to give the Minutemen an early 6-0 lead.

The Minutemen turned another UConn turnover (they would have nine on the day) into six more points when cornerback Chris Wood, starting in place of an injured Dwayne Lopes who suffered a knee injury this week in practice, picked off a Corn pass and returned the ball to the Connecticut 14 yard line.

It took Pearson and fullback Dene Drougas seven plays before Pearson went over on a straight dive and the Minutemen were rolling. Freshman quarterback Jim Simeone, in the first start of his career, hit Ron Mangarelli for the two point conversion and UMass held a 14-0 lead.

Garry Pearson delivers the evil eye to UConn's John Dorsey as he picks up some of his 215 yards Saturday.

Simeone was only 1 for 11 on the day but showed signs of being the UMass quarterback of the future, displaying a strong throwing arm to go along with his 6'2" 225 pound frame.

"He wasn't fantastic but he got the job done," said Pickett. "He's young and very talented and he will be a good football player for us."

Simeone engineered another UMass scoring drive the first series of the second quarter. With Drougas supplying the big run with a 20 yard burst up the middle, the Minutemen marched 68 yards on 12 plays with Pearson taking it over from the three yard line for the score and the Minutemen held a comfortable 21-0 lead.

Pearson and the Minutemen went into the lockerroom at half time with 78 yards on 24 carries. A quick change into his O.J. Simpson costume and Pearson came out as the "Juice" for the second half. Pearson then proceeded to amass 137 yards on only 14 carries, including a 60 yard burst down the right sideline that ended with Pearson getting pushed out of bounds at the one-inch line. Two plays later Pearson finished the drive on a sweep for his fourth touchdown of the day and the Minutemen held a 27-7 advantage.

A 23 yard Bob Ross field goal and a Connecticut touchdown pass rounded out the scoring in a game that saw the UMass defense give up 341 total yards but come up with the big defensive play when they had to.

"You win with defense," said Pickett. "We made the changes during the week. The coaches and the players involved all agreed that we do what was best for the team."

Jimmy Reid's defensive unit came away with six interceptions on the day, including two each by Grady Fuller and Wood, and also recovered three Husky fumbles. The fact that the Huskies have turned the ball over 27 times in the last four games would lead one to question the ability of the UConn offense rather than praise the Minuteman defense.

"In fairness to everyone involved," said Pickett, "It was more likely a combination of both."

Whatever the reason, the Minutemen walked away from Alumni Stadium Saturday with a Yankee Conference victory. That is all that matters.

Men's soccer falters at Boston College, 1-0

By GUS MARTINS
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team absorbed a disappointing 1-0 loss at the hands of Boston College last Friday night at Chestnut Hill.

UMass coach Jeff Gettler was somber in explaining the defeat but said the game was not well played.

"It was not a very good college soccer game, but Boston College did some things well," said Gettler. "They marked very tight and they were big and strong and they threw people in and out of the game. It helped to wear us down."

While the booters didn't play inspiring ball, according to Gettler, ironically they were still in the game until the end.

"We didn't get a good performance from our midfield, and our forwards had trouble controlling the ball at the beginning, but we were still in the game until it was over," Gettler said.

The game's only goal came midway through the first half on a controversial call. It occurred after UMass defender Lenny Margolis made a nice defensive maneuver and shielded the ball against a B.C. player.

The ball went out of bounds on the play and the booters were anticipating a corner kick or throw-in. Instead a direct kick was awarded because of an obstruction call against Margolis and it caught the kickers by surprise.

Gettler said the team was confused at the call and several of his players were caught arguing. "Basically we were confused and unfortunately the whole team fell asleep on the play," Gettler said.

With approximately 16 minutes left, the booters sent sweeper back Margolis to the offense in a last-ditch attempt to beef up the attack and get the equalizer.

Although it never came Gettler had high praise for Margolis' efforts on defense. The coach also praised Brian McHugh, whose scoring attempt late in the game just missed tying things up for the booters.

Gettler was also pleased with backup keeper Timmy Searls, who played most of the way until he got injured. He was replaced by Jeff Smith who came on and played well.

The booters next game is Wednesday against Springfield College at 2:30 p.m. at Boyden Field.

Volleyball team takes second at Queens tourney

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

FLUSHING, NY — It all began to click this weekend for the Univeristy of Massachusetts women's volleyball team as they won five of the seven matches they played en route to a powerful second place finish in the Queens College tournament last weekend.

It was UMass' best finish ever in a tournament and both of the Minutewomen losses came to highly touted C.W. Post, who are currently ranked number 1 in New England (division II).

With the strong showing, UMass is in a good position to be invited to the Massachusetts state championships Saturday at Smith College.

"I was very pleased with the play of the team," said head coach Elaine Sortine. "They played very well and steady. We made some big plays out there."

Massachusetts rolled through the first four matches they had. They toppled UConn 15-11, 15-10 in an emotional game, beat Queens College 15-11, 15-9, stopped Central Connecticut 15-7, 15-11 and wiped out division I New York University 15-3, 15-1.

UMass did very well against C.W. Post in their final pool match losing 11-15, 16-14, 10-15. UM was one of the very few teams that took a game from CW.

Against St. John Fisher in the semi-finals, UMass pulled out every thing they had to win 18-16, 16-14. St John featured two division II All-Americans and a 6'5" player. In an "incredible match," UMass was forced to come from behind in both games and Karen Gettesman played a big role in that.

St. John had UMass down 8-1 in the first game and 6-0 in the second, but Gettesman served the Minutewomen back into the game and with a total team effort, UM advanced to the finals and another crack at C.W. Post.

In the finals, fatigue finally caught up with the Minutewomen and UMass fell in two games, 11-15, 8-15. UMass missed a few serves and couldn't block and that was a key factor in the loss.

But despite faltering in the finals, all the Minutewomen played well this weekend. Patti Philbin was named to the all-tournament team. Sally Mahar played well and Sue Mudry played "super". Patty Grant was fantastic as setter keeping the Minutewomen in action on offense.

UMass hits the road for their next match, against Southern Connecticut on Wednesday night.

A pre-election special by the Massachusetts Daily Collegian

The Issues

Question 1: State aid

Pro

Currently, the Massachusetts State Constitution prohibits state aid to students attending parochial and private schools. In direct conflict of this is the United States Constitution which permits certain aid to students who attend such schools.

The problems with this contradiction of sorts, in the end, drags down the overall quality of education and discriminates against those parents who choose to send their children to private schools.

The quality of education suffers because of this discriminatory attitude on the part of the state constitution. Public schools are not always the best in all areas. If any student is deprived the right to pursue the best educational path because of lack of state aid, is this not discriminatory?

Equal educational benefits on the state level should not be considered a privilege. It should be recognized as a right of any student regardless of his or her educational choice.

Con

In these times of fiscal crisis on the state level, it is senseless for the Commonwealth to be spending money on non-public projects. Public education and its future quality are being threatened from all sides. The quality of public education is already under fire in the face of federal and state fiscal austerity. A 'no' vote on this question will ensure public money will continue to be exclusively spent on public projects.

If funds for private-projects were to be approved, this lost money would have to be raised through increased taxation or decreased municipal services. Among these services effected would be public schools. Public education, open to all by law, cannot afford to be adversely hurt by state subsidization of private education or institutions.

Massachusetts has always been a leader in quality education. A no vote on this amendment will ensure this remains a legacy for our children.

Question 2: Death Penalty

Pro

As it stands today, there are many inadequacies in the state criminal justice system. We must regain the confidence of the people. They must be confident that serious crimes will be punished and that the people and the victims of crimes will have justice act in their favor for a change.

The death penalty is the proper and the only tool through which this justice can be effective.

Capital punishment is effective. The proof is in the declining crime rate of the 37 states now providing capital punishment. It will save lives. It will prevent convicted murderers from murdering again.

The sanctity of human life is best preserved by clear punishment for those who destroy it.

Restoration of the death penalty will protect us who believe in this sancitity of life. It will produce justice, sow relief and create unity.

Our state has the responsibility to protect life and express moral outrage at such atrocities as murder.

Con

The death penalty is not a deterrent. In fact, it does exactly the opposite. Studies have shown that executions cause the murder rate to rise. When the state feels it has the authority to terminate the life of a single person, it cheapens the lives of all humanity.

The homicide rate in the 1960's, a period that averaged 24 executions per year, was only 70 percent of the rate in the 1930's, when there was an average of 150 executions a year, according to Uniform Crime Reports and National Prisoner Statistics.

The death penalty also endangers the lives of the innocent. Innocent people have been executed before and surely that will happen again as long as innocent people are sent to prison for murder.

We are not dealing with a new idea. Crime in the streets will not be affected by the death penalty. It would be far more beneficial for death penalty proponents and opponents to instead study the root causes of crime.

Question 3: Waste siting

Pro

Negotiations are currently taking place between eleven states which may eventually decide that Massachusetts is the best site for a low-level radioactive waste dump. This dump would receive all waste emanating from these states; more that half of all waste now generated in America.

In other states, dump sites such as the one mentioned for possible location in Massachusetts have leaked materials off-site, threatening public safety, health and costing millions in tax dollars for clean-up.

A 'yes' vote on this question guarantees the rights of citizens to make the final decision on any and all proposals for new low-level radioactive dumps.

Passage of this question will prevent out-of-state waste from coming into Massachusetts without the approval of Massachusetts citizens. It will also require all new facilities to meet strict safety, economic and environmental standards. Passage will also mean any new proposals for new nuclear power plants will require the approval of the Massachusetts electorate.

Con

A 'no' vote on Question 3 will ensure that home rule in Massachusetts will be protected. If not defeated, the referendum threatens to subvert the political process at the most important level of government, that of local autonomy.

Over 400 users of radioactive materials currently reside in Massachusetts. If the question is passed, many would be forced to leave, fearful of public intervention in private enterprise. Because of this unemployment will rise and prices in health care and other consumer-related goods will rise. Also, the state tax base as a whole is bound to shrink with the fleeing of these businesses, causing lost revenue and decreased services on the state level.

Currently, Massachusetts is part of an eleven-state consortium attempting to negotiate a solution to the problem of nuclear waste disposal. Voting no will ensure our state will not be isolated, alone to deal with a potentially large scale economic problem.

Question 4: The Bottle Bill

Pro

By voting 'yes' on Question 4, for the Bottle Bill, an 80 percent cut in beer and soda container litter can be achieved. This would translate into a 40 percent reduction in overall litter. In every state where there has been a bottle bill, litter reduction has been the result.

Jobs will also be created because the containers need to be cleaned, handled and recycled. Every state that has passed a bottle bill has had an increase in jobs. Michigan, for example, had 4646 jobs as a result of their bottle bill. Jobs in the bottling industry nationwide declined 47 percent between 1950 and 1976. The

In states that have the bottle bill in some form, support for it has been very strong. Oregon residents supported their bottle bill by 91 percent. In 1978, a referendum to overturn the bottle bill in Maine was stopped 84 to 16 percent.

The Bottle Bill also saves energy by providing incentive to switch to refillable containers. The manufacturing of aluminum requires enormous amounts of energy, which returnables would cut down on.

Con

Only four short years ago, the voters of Massachusetts said "no" to a bottle bill for this state. Yet this signal goes unrecognized and once again the electorate is being asked to choose refundable deposits on beverage containers. Passage of the Bottle Bill will creat a myriad of problems, problems which Massachusetts realistically doesn't need at this time.

A no vote will mean a rejection of the Bottle Bill passed by the Legislature. A yes vote will mean;

— scraping of all present town and private recycling projects

— a further overburdening of the states already low water supply, a supply which cannot afford to be threatened.

— kill local bottle-separation projects

— cost the already beleagured Massachusetts consumer millions of dollars in increased beverage prices.

Finally a no vote on this question is a yes vote for an industry-funded litter program which will give money to communities for clean-up and recycling projects.

Question 5: Nuclear Freeze

Pro

The nuclear freeze is perhaps the most important issue facing voters in many years.

It is a grass roots movement formed by people who consider their own well-being to be more important than the expensive arms build-up.

According to Pentagon statistics, the United States has 9,000 nuclear weapons compared to the 7,000 of the Soviet Union. The smallest of the weapons is the equivalent of three of the bombs dropped on Hiroshima in World War II. Even this smallest bomb would kill 300,000 people.

The freeze is to be mutually verifiable with both sides allowing for on site inspection.

The money that goes to defense for the arms race could be used for education, creating jobs and even building up conventional armed forces.

If the arms race is allowed to continue at it's current pace, nuclear holocaust will become increasingly inevitable.

Con

The voters of Massachusetts, by saying "no" to Question 5 on the ballot will be saying yes to a safe future for this own children. A no vote will mean a rejection of the idea of a mutual and verifiable freeze between the Soviet Union and the U.S.

Like any noble cause, the freeze movement, on the surface, is a simple answer to a very complex issue.

Firstly, verifiability would be next to impossible in regards to Soviet weapon-levels. Past agreements with the U.S.S.R have shown the Soviets are less than honest in their dealings with the United States.

A freeze at this time would lock the U.S. into a position of weakness.

All will agree the idea of any nuclear war is impossible for any rational human being to envision. By saying "no" to Question 5 the voters of Massachusetts will make the possibility of this holocaust even more remote.

Question 6: Jobs for peace

Pro

A yes vote on Question 6 will mean a vote for more jobs, a healthier economy and a more prosperous society.

Currently, the level at which the U.S. is spending money on military hardware and other defense-related programs is unacceptable. It is unacceptable because this massive spending naturally leads to substantial cuts in any and all federally-funded social programs.

Out of every dollar in federal income tax revenue, 61 percent is used for military-related spending. Only 18 percent will fund human service programs.

It is true defense spending does produce jobs. But the number of these jobs is much lower, dollar for dollar, than most public and private sectors of economy. This inefficiency in the distribution of federal revenues causes unemployment and, ironically, a drop in the level of services for those unlucky enough to lose their jobs.

Vote "yes" on Question 6 — it is a vote for a prosperous future.

Con

A "no" vote on Question 6 will ensure the U.S. a position of power and therefore safety in the coming years.

Currently the U.S. is undergoing a massive military buildup in the hope that it may be able to counter a similar one by the Soviet Union. If the money which is so desperately needed for this rearmament of the American military is taken away and applied to any other area, the security of the U.S. will be undermined.

The money being spent on defense is necessary to ensure the U.S. will have an effective deterrent against growing Russian worldwide adventurism.

Those who support this question claim that the money is desperately needed to create jobs and fund social programs. Defense-spending by the U.S. creates millions of jobs in defense-related industries. As a state Massachusetts is heavily dependent on military-related companies as a source of jobs and state tax revenue. Passage of this measure could result in even more severe unemployment and a cut in state funded social programs.

The Candidates

District Attorney

W. Michael Ryan

W. Michael Ryan, the Democratic candidate for District Attorney, is running because he has said he feels the office can operate more efficiently and that it can be more effective by educating the community on legal issues.

Ryan, who graduated from the University of Massachusetts as an undergraduate and attended Western New England Law School, has spent the past six years in private practice in Northampton. His business is primarily criminal and civil cases, as he "likes to do trial work." Ryan has said that as district attorney, he would personally prosecute cases like aggravated rape and crimes of violence against the elderly.

"(As district attorney) I could pick and choose those cases I would like to draw public attention to. My feelings on both (rape and violence) are similar. They are crimes of the strong against the weaker. What we have to do in law enforcement is to use society's strengths to protect its members," Ryan said.

Thomas Simons

Tom Simons, the Republican incumbent in the race for Franklin-Hampshire County Distriot Attorney, is a resident of Montague, Massachusetts. The 40-year-old lawyer was a four-term representative in the Massaohusetts legislature.

On an issue-oriented level, Simons feels his experience in prosecuting cases far outweighs that of his opponent.

"I think the ohoice for voters," Simons said," is between a district attorney who has a very strong record of prosecuting criminal cases quickly, aggressively, fairly and successfully, versus my opponent who has no prosecutorial experience and whose campaign has generally consisted of a barrage of critioism aimed at me."

District Attorney Simons feels he has been partioularly succeesful in his office's expedient prosecution of criminals, noting a succesful conviction rate of 91 percent. Simons also feels he would be able to expand existing programs

State Senator

John W. Olver

John W. Olver, D-Amherst, a 10-year inoumbent of the Massachusetts Senate, is seeking reelection tomorrow.

Olver received his Bachelor of Science degree in chemistry from the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y., his Masters in chemistry from Tufts University in Medford and his doctorate in chemistry from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge.

Olver was a professor of chemistry at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst until his election to the Massachusetts House of Representatives in November, 1968, where he served four years before gaining election to the senate.

Legislation Olver has filed in his current term to aid higher education inoludes a bill to provide student scholarships through a tax on cigarettes and a bill to establish a two-way interactive telecommunications network to connect both public and private colleges and businesses in the Commonwealth.

Jim Tripp

Jim Tripp, the Republican challenger for the state senate seat held by Sen. John w. Olver, graduated from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst in 1970 with a degree in sociology.

Tripp entered the travel business after graduation and now operates his own agency in Northampton.

Tripp, who has never run for public office said he has neither sought nor received an endorsement by any group.

If elected, he said he would seek appointment to the Senate committees on rules, ways and means, taxation, education, mental health, and social welfare.

Tripp said the primary issue motivating him to seek election is his perception of corruption in the State House and its leadership. He advocated the designation of the lieutenant governor as senate president, whioh he said he would give statewide constituency to leadership affecting statewide issues.

Candidates for state offices

Attorney General

Francis X. Bellotti

Democrat Francis X. Bellotti is the inoumbent Attorney General. He has stated that his "prime concern" is prosecution and eliminating government corruption. He has co-chaired with the United States Attorney on a oommittee coordinating federal, state and local investigative activities. He has said he offers voters uninterrupted leadership and protection from governmental corruption. He has already served under two administrations.

Michael Reilly

Michael Reilly, the Libertarian candidate, has been a partner in the firm of Troy, Tommasino, Anderson & Reilly, P.C. since June 1981. He has an active practice, including both civil and criminal trials. He graduated from Boston College in 1976 magna cum laude, and from Boston College Law School, magna cum laude, in 1979.

Richard L. Wainwright

Republican Richard L. Wainwright, 50, has been a practicing attorney with his family's law firm since 1963, with the exception of 1972-73 when he served as mayor of Brookton. He attended Brookton Public Schools, then continued on to St. Mark's School in Southboro, Yale University and Boston University.

Secretary of State

Michael J. Connolly

Inoumbent Michael Joseph Connolly, 35, is the Democratic candidate for Secretary of State. He has been a teacher, a legislative aide, state representative and secretary of state since 1979. He is a member of the Massachusetts Bar Association. Connolly was born in West Roxbury and eduoated at Boston Latin School. He received a B.A. in political science from the College of Holy Cross in 1969 and in the same year, received a J.D. from the New England School of Law.

Jody DeRoma Dow

Jody DeRoma Dow is running against Connolly representing the Republican party. DeRoma, from Brookline, has served as Legislative Chair of the Massachusetts Federation of Republican Women. She feels that existing laws, such as those concerning campaign finance laws, are too discretionary.

Robin D. Zazula

Libertarian Robin D. Zazula, of Medford, is the Libertarian candidate for attorney general. On the issue of campaign finance laws, Zazula has stressed the need for mixed public and private finanoing and the resulting lessening of influence by special interest groups or financially powerful contributors.

State Treasurer

Robert Q. Crane

Robert Q. Crane, of Wellesley, is running for reelection to the post of state treasurer. A Boston College graduate, Crane served in the state Legislature and was chairman of the state Democratic Committee. Crane has campaigned on his record as auditor, particularly noting the "Linked Depost" system whioh he recently initiated. Under this system, state banks oan bid for treasury accounts if they agree to provide loans for students, small businesses, housing and other areas.

Mary J. LeClair

Mary J. LeClair of Mashpee is the Republican candidate for state treasurer. She has previously served as Barnstable County treasurer and Chair of the Barnstable County Retirement Board. LeClair has said she supports investment of state money into private enterprises as a way to stimulate the state economy.

Freda Lee Nason

Freda Lee Nason, of Cambridge, is seeking election to the post of state treasurer. A Libertarian, Nason holds a Master's degree in architecture from the Massachusetts Institute of Teohnology and is currently employed in the construction industry. A member of Citizens for Limited Taxation, she was a strong supporter of Proposition 2½.

State Auditor

John J. Finnegan

John J. Finnegan, 44, is seeking reelection as state auditor, a position he has held since 1981 when he was elected to fill an unexpired term. Prior to serving as auditor, Finnegan, a Democrat served 14 years in the state House of Representatives, six years as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. During the campaign, Finnegan, a graduate of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, has made an issue of corruption and has offered reforms of state financial practices.

Michael S. Robertson

Michael S. Robertson, of Berkley, is running for auditor as the candidate of the Republican party. He has previously served on the Board of Selectmen in Berkley and is currently treasurer of the town of Falmouth, Maine. During the campaign, Robertson has said he will target fraud and corruption in the state and waste by state agencies.

Donald E. Washburn

Donald E. Washburn, the Libertarian Candidate for state auditor, is a resident of North Adams and an English professor at North Adams State College. As a Libertarian, Washburn has stressed the free market aspects of business and government in his campaign.

Voting Information

Requirements: Open to all Amherst residents registered to vote on or before October 5.

Polling hours: 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Precinct 1: Residents of Puffton Village, North Village, Gilreath Manor, Presidential Apartments, Riverglade Park, Brandywine and Townhouse vote at the North Congregational Church on North Pleasant Street opposite Meadow Road.

Precinct 2: Residents of East Amherst inoluding Butterfield Dormitory, Village Park, Crestview and University Apartments vote at the North Fire Station on the corner of East Pleasant Street and Tilson Farm Road.

Precinct 3: Residents of all dorms in Northeast, Sylvan, Orchard Hill and Central Residential Areas (except Butterfield) oan vote at the Lutheran Church on Pleasant Street near the Meadow Parks School.

Precincts 4 and 5: Residents of the Southwest Residential Area, fraternity row, Amherst College, Crown Point Apartments and most of the oenter of town vote in the Bangs Community Center off Kellog Avenue, near the Amherst Post Office.

Princinct 6: Residents of Echo Hill, Rolling Green, Colonial Village, Swiss Village, and University Park, vote in the Fort River School on Southeast Street.

Precinct 7: Residents of Brittany Manor, Southwood, Jeffrey and Riverglade Apartments vote at the Crocker Farms School on West Street.

If you are physically disabled, rides or assistance in getting to the polls is available by calling the Amherst Senior Surrey at 253-9351.

This special pre-election insert has been provided by the Collegian as a public service to our readers. We have attempted to present as much information as possible about the issues, candidates and the voting process. Due to availability of information, space and time constraints, we have been unable to present all candidates for public office, but included as many as we could who appear on the ballot.

The Candidates

Four running for governor

Michael S. Dukakis

Michael S. Dukakis, Democratic gubernatorial candidate, won the race with Governor Edward J. King in the October primary, giving him the chance to take back the governorship which he earned in 1975 and lost in 1979. Dukakis, 49, is a resident of Brookline. Before serving as governor, he served in the state legislature from 1963 to 1970.

Running with Dukakis on the Democratic ticket is John Kerry, candidate for Lieutenant Governor. Kerry, 39, of Newton, is a lawyer and small businessman. He has served as first assistant district attorney in Middlesex County and is an activist for Democratic Party candidates and issues.

The campaign efforts of Dukakis have been steering clear of his record as governor, with the exception of the corruption issue — a definitive factor in Bay State politics. Dukakis has pledged to combat corruption in state and local government, specifically in the mismanaged MBTA. He claims he demonstrated he's capable of doing this since he held the seat in the Corner Office from 1975 through 1979.

Dukakis has voiced a commitment to public higher education in the state. He has said an increase in state funding for student financial aid is necessary to leave education accessable to all and to redefine liberal arts to include new technologies. Dukakis last week rejected the idea of a five percent cigarette sales tax that would raise $28 million for financial aid to students.

Kerry has stressed the importance of increasing aid to students in order to bring state support up to the national average of 50 percent.

On the question of the reinstatement of the death penalty in Massachusetts, Dukakis has, after a long period of silence, spoken his opposition to it.

Frank Rich

Rebecca Shipman

Rebecca Shannon Shipman, Libertarian candidate for governor, is the chairperson of the Massasoit Community College Department of Human Services.

Shipman holds a masters degree in counseling from West Virginia University and is enrolled in a doctoral program in education at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Shipman said a Libertarian administration would reduce government expenditures by instituting tuition tax credits and privatizing public tranist services.

"This would reduce the requirement for public school subsidies and mass transit subsidies, which currently absorb most of the budget in most cities and towns," Shipman said.

"We would also enhance local revenues by transferring motor vehicle registries into local jurisdictions," she said.

Shipman said a Libertarian administration will seek ways to make human service expenditures unnecessar/.

"Many people have been regulated into poverty through licensing laws, so-called protective labor legislation and other government mandated restrictions on human initiative," Shipman said.

Pollution, according to Shipman, was caused by government mismanagement of resources and refusal to respect and enforce property rights.

"We would seek to privatize property where feasible in order to eliminate government bumbling," Shipman said.

Shipman is affiliated with the Association of Libertarian Feminests and the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML).

John W. Sears

Republican candidate for governor, John W. Sears, 52, a resident of Beacon Hill, has held a long list of public positions.

Sears served in the House from 1965 through 1967 and ran unsuccessfully for Mayor of Boston in 1967 and for Secretary of State in 1968. In 1979, Sears won a seat on the Boston City Council and served one two-year term. He has also served as chairman of the Metropolitan District Commission and as the appointed sheriff of Suffolk County.

On the ticket with Sears is Leon J. Lombardi, Republican nominee for Lieutenant Governor.

Sears has vcioed his support for the philosophy of New Federalism — shifting the responsibility from the federal to the state government in providing a "social safety net" for all citizens. Accordingly, Sears has called for the use of the state sales tax to increase state aid to education.

Lombardi, shares every other candidate's commitment to public higher education. The health of Massachusetts, Lombardi has said, depends on students getting an affordable education and has proposed an increase in scholarship assistance to offset federal cuts.

Unlike Dukakis, Sears is supportive of the reinstatement of the death penalty. Sears advocates the use of the death penalty in extreme cases — when a conviction has been the result of an especially shocking crime.

Sears and Lombardi are closer to Dukakis and Kerry on the issue of investment of industry and business in Massachusetts. Both nominees have echoed the Democrats' desire to encourage investment in the state's economy through incentives provided by the state. This includes an increase in state assistance to small businesses through tax relief and short-term loans.

Frank Rich

Frank Rich, the 56-year-old independent gubernatorial candidate from Saugus, was treasurer of Gov. Edward King's 1978 campaign. He split from King in 1980 because he felt the Governor's views were not conservative enough.

Rich, an ex-paratrooper who holds a degree in economics from Brown University and now runs a construction company, won a spot on the ballot by collecting more than 47,000 signatures of support.

"I want to be governor out of self-defense; there isn't anyone else out there with the talent I have,' Rich said.

"There should be representation of all Massachusetts. But it's really unnecessary for a student to be on the Board of Regents," Rich said. "To be honest with you, students have no right in decision making."

Rich feels declining minority enrollment in Massachusetts colleges is not a problem.

"Let me tell you what I feel about minorities, there is no such thing," Rich said.

Rich has come out in support of nuclear energy in the past, but says he is now reevaluating his position.

He is against increasing financial aid to students.

"At this present time in the economic climate, absolutely not," Rich said.

Rich is running as an independent candidate because he is "tired of waiting for a system run by party politics and party politicians to change."

"Liberals must stop their promiscuous spending and conservatives must stop their promiscuous cutting of vital programs," Rich said.

Editor's note: A photo of candidate Rebecca Shipman was not available as of press time.

Kennedy, Shamie in Senate race

Edward M. Kennedy

After serving in the Senate for the last two decades, Senator Edward M. Kennedy is seeking reelection to that body.

Kennedy's brother John was elected President in 1960. Senator Kennedy attended Harvard and later attended the University of Virginia law school. Kennedy is currently the ranking Democrat on the Labor and Human Resources Committee.

In 1980, Kennedy was a candidate for the Presidential nomination of the Democratic Party. In the end he lost that race to then President Jimmy Carter.

Kennedy, a liberal Democrat, has a history of speaking out on a variety of social issues. Kennedy was the sponsor of a bill advocating socialized medicine a few years ago.

The Senator has said he is opposed to many of President Ronald Reagan's economic programs, including a tax cut which he claims favors the wealthy, tax credits for parents of students attending private schools and the proposed constitutional amendment for a balanced budget.

Kennedy is in favor of forced busing to achieve desegregation, and government wage and price controls.

Ray Shamie

Ray Shamie's story is of the Horatio Alger type, the poor boy rising to success.

Shamie was born in Brooklyn, N.Y., one of three children. When he was 16, in the depths of the depression, his father, a truck driver, was killed in an accident. Shamie went to engineering school part-time while he worked for a manufacturer of steam locomotive accessories. Within four years, Shamie had worked his way up to assistant plant manager in the company.

After serving in the Air Force in World War II, Shamie founded Metal Bellows Corp. in Sharon, a company

In an interview earlier this month, Shamie said it is important for universities in Massahousetts to graduate students in the high technology fields because that is where the economic demand is in the state. specializing in innovative welding techniques. The $35 million company employs nearly 500 people.

The United States Senatorial race is Shamie's first attempt at politics.

Shamie, a conservative Republican, has come out in favor of President Reagan's tax cut, his tuition tax credit for parents of students attending private schools and the proposed constitutional amendment for a balanced budget.

BLACKS IN THE ELECTORAL PROCESS

Perspective on State Elections

The Off Year Election

By Keith W. Johnson

This Tuesday November 2nd is election day. It will prove to be a very important election because of the fact that this an an off-year election. Usually the off-year election doesn'tget that much fanfair because the president is not being elected. But many federal, state and local elections are being contested.

This will prove an important election for President Reagan and his Repulican Administration. The Democrats after losing much influence in the last elections are challenging the Republicans at a time when the economy is very weak and unemployment is at its highest rate since the depression. It proves to be a major test of whether the people have faith in Reaganomics.

There are many gubernitorial campaigns that are being held across the country. Many Democratic candidates such as Mario Cuomo of New York, Tom Bradley of California, and Mike Dukakis of Massachusetts seem to be holding fairly good leads against their Republican opponents. The Republican candidates are having a hard time trying to sell Reagonomics to their states. If many Democrats win their elections it will be difficult for Reagan to push his new federalism program. Democratic governors would not be in favor of taking over programs that would be cut by the federal government.

What is also at stake is the House of Representatives where Democrats lost numerous seats in the last election. In this election the Democrats hope to regain 30 or more seats in the House. The Republicans hope to keep that mark down to at least 20 seats knowing that the ailing economy will definitly lead to an increase in Democratic victories this year.

President Reagan has travelled the country campaigning for Republican candidates. Even Vice-President George Bush and former President Gerald Ford have used their influence by appearing at particular Republican political rallies and dinners across the country. But in some areas the President ws not welcomed. The stigma of a bad economy is with him and some candidates do not want to be associated with it.

There are numerous other referendums that are being decided this year. In Alaska there is a bill that will decide whether to move the capital from Juneau to Anchorage. There is a referendum in Washington, D.C. on whether or not to make the District of Columbia the 51st state. Here in Massachusetts there is the bottle bill and the death penalty. The nuclear freeze referendum is on the ballot of many states and it will be their first chance to speak on one of the most critical issues of our time.

Whether it is the govenor, congressman, or referendum this will prove to be a very interesting off-year election. But hopefully the hard times will bring more voters to the polls than in the last election when there was a poor voter turnout. Please vote.

Issues of the 1982 Elections

NUMMO deals with the 1982 elections in this issue because many important questions will be decided upon the electoral process tomorrow. Usually the state elections do not attract as much attention as the national elections; however, they represent an important opportunity to eliminate the Congressional backing that supports President Reagan and his policies. As can easily be seen, the Democratic Party has attempted to present its candidates as the alternative to Reagn's policies even though many Democrats supported Reagan only a few months ago. Other questions to be resolved in the elections at hand are, locally, presented in the Referenda, and nationally, in the question of how Black candidates for state offices and for Congress are going to fare in their electoral races across the nation.

Much has been said about the curious lack of interest that young people and typical college students have about elections. The disinterest of Umass students in tomorrow's elections in Massachusetts could result in a direct cost to them in terms of their educations, their employment careers, their environment and the survival of the human race as a whole. For Black and other racially and nationally oppressed people the right to vote was guaranteed only recently and continues to be threatened , for example, Reagan's effort last spring to take the teeth out of the Voting Rights Act. Therefore, it is with great hope, pride and concern that NUMMO paints the electoral picture today, with the purpose of involving the reader in the political process, only part of which is represented by the elections of our representatives and civil servants.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE REFERENDUM QUESTIONS

The referendum questions for this year provide the opportunity to decide policy on a number of important issues. The nuclear freeze referendum expresses at least one of two sentiments for the voter, 1) the belief that the U.S. has already stockpiled enough weaponry for national defense while the build-up towards military superiorty is a threat to the survival of the human race and 2) the arms build-up is carried-out at the expense of social programs such as education, health care and welfare.

Another important referendum question is that which would make the Death Penalty an ammendment to the Constitution of Massachusetts. It has been noted that the Death Penalty is a distinctly political issue since its effectiveness as a deterrent to crime is highly doubtful; it has also been shown that more racially and nationally oppressed people have been executed than others, and no wealthy person has ever been executed as punishment. The Death Penalty provides no solution to the problem of crime and it exacts a very high price in human life and human values.

The Last Wave From Port Chicago Part III

by Peter Vogel
c 1982 Peter Vogel, Reprinted by permission of the Black Scholar Spring 1982 issue

Editorial on The Significance Of The Port Chicago Disaster:

NUMMO completes its series "The Last Wave From Port Chicago", as reported by Peter Vogel in the Black Scholar, in this week's edition. We would like to thank all those who have followed the investigative report from its beginning. We hope that it has convinced the uncertain of the need for accountability of the authorities as regards the public safety from nuclear power and with regard to the best interests of the American people.

One purpose of the Black Scholar's report was to call for a full and conclusive investigation into the incident, since the cause of the Port Chicago explosion of 1944 was never officially determined. The fact that the cause of the mysterious explosion now appears to have been a nuclear one certainly makes the racist treatment of the case of the Black "mutineers" during the inquest which followed the disaster all the more significant. The case became one of a sensationalized controversy. The "mutineers" were convicted and handed down severe sentences. The incident itself was not heard of for all these years. Yet, now there is a widespread feeling that the future of the human race, in its entirety, is being threatened by a nuclear madness.

This concern was first deflected during the Port Chicago controversy. Of course, it is in the best interests of all to make sure that the public is not diverted by something such as racism again.

The call for a nuclear weapons freeze will be put forth on many state elections this year, including Massachusetts. Hopefully, the reader will understand the importance of supporting this call when he or she votes tomorrow.

Therefore, two good reasons exist to put a stop to the nuclear weapons build-up, to protect all of humanity from nuclear destruction tomorrow, and to increase funding for vital social services today.

Editor's Note: The Port Chicago explosion occurred on July 17, 1944, thirteen months before the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombings took place. The evidence presented in the previous portions of Peter Vogel's investigative article on the incident is of great substance and depth, so much so that it can not easily be ignored.

The essence of the material compiled by Mr. Vogel shows that the U.S. Military could have produced an atomic bomb as early as February of 1944, and that all that has been observed and reported about the actual Port Chicago explosion indicates that it must have been an atomic one.

Vogel's article cites official U.S. documents stating that the technology needed to produce this sort of bomb was available at the time of the Port Chicago incident. Many of the documents detailing the technological specifications remain Classified "Top Secret" information, although their availability could hardly pose a threat to national security thirty eight years later since the technology is probably obsolete.

The force of the Port Chicago explosion spontaneously exploded the ship, the E.A. Bryan, in its entirity, leaving only minute fragments behind. The two most important observations reported about the nature of the explosion are 1) the widely reported brilliant white flash associated strictly with nuclear bombs; and 2) the "smoke ring" or condensation cloud, approximately three miles in diameter, which typically accompanies a nuclear bomb.

In the aftermath of the explosion several all-Black regiments in the segregated naval base on the Sacremento River in northern California carried out a work stoppage in response to the problems of their work conditions and the fact that no explanation was provided for the explosion. The cause of the explosion was never officially determined. The work stoppage resulted in the court martialing of fifty Black ammunitions loaders on the charge of mutiny. Many were later sentenced to jail. The court martial gained greater attention than the investigation. It concluded that the grievances were not valid and that it was probably the fault of the Black ammunitions loaders that was responsible for the explosion since they were described as being incompetant by their immediate supervisors.

The Los Alamos Records

Approximately one year ago I was told by a confidential source that a substantial body of records which intimately linked the Los Alamos Laboratories (The Manhatten Project) with the Port Chicago explosion existed among the archives of the Los Alamos National Laboratory. Those records were declassified at my request by the Laboratory Classification Office. They consist of some 400-600 pages of reports and memoranda which report the various parameters and artifacts of the explosion. The most substantial of these records are memoranda prepared by United States Naval Captain William J. Parsons which were transmitted to United States Rear Admiral W.R. Purnell, who was a member of the Atomic Bomb Military Policy Committee and Captain Parsons' superior officer.

Parsons was the ordnance expert who had designed the U-235 gun weapon; he was the bombing officer aboard the B-29, the Enola Gay, which dropped the U-235 weapon over Hiroshima; and, in 1946, he was Chairman of the Joint Crossroads Committee which planned the Bikini tests and he was Deputy Task Force Commander for Technical Direction of the Bikini tests.

As a young Captain of the United States Navy, Parsons, with a little help from his friends, designed, caused to be constructed, and tested the worlds first atomic bomb. The large credit and many accolades laid upon the Novel prize-winning physicists who developed and tested the Pu-239 implosion weapon successfully at Trinity Site one year after the Port Chicago explosion, have obscured and nearly effaced the extraordinary achievement of William J. Parsons who designed the ordnance for the first atomic bomb and who brought that bomb to a battle-ready status.

Immediately following the disaster at Port Chicago, Captain Parsons was elevated to the rank of Commodore, USN, and after the bombing of Hiroshima, he was elevated to the rank of Rear Admiral, USN.

Parsons had come to the Los Alamos Laboratories in June, 1943, six months after the initiation of the project at that site. He was a graduate of the United States Naval Academy at Annopolis. Upon his arrival at the Laboratories he was named Deputy Director of the Laboratories under J. Robert Oppenheimer and Division Leader for the Ordnance Engineering Division (E Division) when that Division was established in June, 1943. The Ordnance Division was responsible for the development, design and construction of the U-235 gun bomb.

Prior to the establishment of the Joint Crossroads Committee in 1946, the predecessor organization was the ad hoc subcommittee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the "LeMay Subcommittee." Parsons was a member of the LeMay Subcommittee and, at the time of his appointment to that subcommittee, he was Assistant Chief of Naval operations for Special Weapons. Admiral Parsons died of a heart attack in 1952.

The records at Los Alamos relating to the Port Chicago explosion reveal very clearly that up to the time of that explosion, a surface delivery of the atomic bomb to a harbor facility was the principal focus of all damage prediction studies. W.G. Penney's "Hydrodynamic Theory of Surface Explosions" was developed at the experimental explosion pond at Los Alamos - the Anchor Ranch area - and the amplitudes of surface waves generated by the Port Chicago explosion are in very good agreement with those predicted by Penney's theory. "Effects of the Tidal Wave in the Port Chicago Explosion," of Parsons' July 31st memorandum to Purnell, "Port Chicago Disaster: Third Preliminary Report," was prepared by Maurice Shapiro and is a comparison of the Port Chicago tidal wave action with the predictions of Penney's hydro-dynamic theory of surface explosions.

The question arises, if the Port Chicago explosion was an ordinary, conventional explosion why would such extensive documentation and analysis of it be found at an atomic weapons laboratory?

Post-Radiation Effects

Morbidity statistics compiled by the State of California show a pronounced increase in the statistical incidence of characteristic post-fallout exposure illnesses in the Port Chicago area, and downwind, commencing in 1969 and 1970 - which corresponds with the generally acknowledged period intervening between radioactive fallout exposure and manifest morbidity. (A recent acknowledgement of the unusual cancer rate in Contra Costa County was cited in the New York Times, March 28, 1982, page 15.)

Illustrated by Mitra Samimi

The presence of industrial sources of carcinogenic pollutants in the area, and the effects of cigarette smoking on the population, can not easily be separated from the possible effects of fallout exposure. However, a surface detonation of a nuclear device in the circumstances which obtained at Port Chicago is conducive to high levels of local radioactive fallout since radioactive weapon debris and fission byproducts will coalesce with salt particles present in the brackish Suisun Bay waters which were vaporized, and raised in the mushroom cloud. When the salt and radioactive-material laden water cools and condenses, it rapidly precipitates. According to coded pilot-balloon data supplied from the archives of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, at the time of the explosion, the wind at 15,000 feet was blowing: direction - 08 (16 point S), velocity - 16 (M.P.S.); the ceiling was measured 11,000 feet, broken.

The 'Mutiny'

There were over a thousand surviving personnel at the Port Chicago facility after the 1944 disaster. They were mostly black enlisted men, and those survivors were protected from the effects of initial radiation by virtue of being 1.5 miles from the explosion in the base barracks and administration area. In Parsons' "Third Preliminary Report" to Admiral Purnell, Parsons sates that the surviving military personnel "rallied quickly" to render aid to the injured and to secure the base. The psychological and morale effects of such a large explosion were of interest to the military who desired to know whether surviving troops would continue to fight, or lay down their arms in surrender.

Although the surviving black men at Port Chicago rallied quickly to aid their fallen brothers, they subsequently refused, en masse, to again approach the task of loading ammunition aboard ships.

Conclusion

The evidence and discussion presented in this article strongly indicate that a nuclear fission device was intentionally detonated at Port Chicago in 1944. My research revealed that the U.S. had sufficient purified U-235 to produce such a device, and the technical design details were specified as early as February, 1944. Thus, it was possible to actually build a U-235 gun bomb in early 1944, contrary to previously accepted accounts.

The physical characteristic of the explosion at Port Chicago - the white flash, the Wilson condensation cloud ("smoke ring"), the extraordinary explosive force of the blast as indicated by the crater it created, and the seismographic record showing a single micro-second detonation - all bear the

by Antar Mberi

The African National Congress (ANC) has issued an appeal for worldwide "vigorous action" to save the lives of three of its members on death row in South Africa.

Thelle Simon Mogoerane, 23, Jerry Semano Mosololi, 25, and Mareus Thabo Motaung, 27, were condemned to death by the Pretoria Supreme Court last August 6. Members of UmKonto we Sizwe, the military wing of ANC, they are known as the Moroka Three.

Mogoerane is the second child in a family of six, who left South Africa following the Soweto student uprisings of June 16, 1976. Mosololi, who in 1976 was a form three student at Orlando North Secondary School, is the sixth child in a family of eight. He, too, left South Africa following the Soweto crisis. So did Motaung, who is from a family of eleven, and was then a student at Diepkloof Secondary School.

The ANC appeal states that the Moroka Three "have not appealed to the Highest Court against the sentences, but instead have petitioned the South African President for clemency and are presently sitting in the death row awaiting his decision."

Grave Concern

"The ANC," the appeal continues, "is gravely concerned that unless urgent actions and measures are taken, the State President will confirm the sentences and the regime will proceed with their immediate execution."

The ANC urges the following actions:

"To write letters of protest to the South African President and Prime Minister, Union Building, Pretoria, South Africa;

"To urge all governments to condemn these sentences and to demand their immediate release;

"To exert pressure on the racist regime to accord Prisoner-of-War status to the captured Freedom Fighters as provided for by the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the additional Protocol of 1977;

"To undertake all possible actions with the objective of saving the lives of these three young patriots of our country;

"To make the racist regime feel the indignation of the international community at these murderous actions by intensifying the campaign for mandatory and comprehensive sanctions."

In the U.S., the ANC is making a special appeal for such protests because of the Reagan Administration's increasing support to South Africa's racist-fascist government, in violation of agreed-upon sanctions. This places a special responsibility and challenge before all anti-Reaganomic and peace forces, to stay the hand of U.S. imperialism's support of the apartheid regime.

The appeal points out that the campaign to save the lives of three other ANC youth members, Bobby Tsotsobe, Johannes Shabangu and David Moise, was a success. Worldwide public intervention resulted in their death sentences being commuted to life imprisonment.

The ANC notes its "deep gratitude to all men and women, youth and students, and many others who contributed, in many and varied ways" to that campaign, and urged that the same can and must be done for the Moroka Three.

Let's all participate; write that letter and mail it now!

Political Gains and Losses of Black Candidates

By Keith W. Johnson

Clark and Bradley

There are two political campaigns, that, if successful, can prove to be major gains for black people in the political arena. One is the campaign for U.S. Congressional Representative of the 2nd District, which is Mississippi. The other is the campaign for govenor of the state of California.

In Mississippi, State Representative Robert G. Clark is facing former circuit judge and attorney Webb Franklin. What is noteworthy about this campaign is that Clark, a black Democrat, if he wins, will be the first black congressman from Mississippi since the Reconstruction. In California, a victory by Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley over State Attorney General George Deukmejian would lead to the first elected black govenor in U.S. history.

In both campaigns the key issue, as it is all over the country, is the state of the economy. In California, Bradley would be faced with a depleted state treasury, and the question of whether or not to raise taxes, if he is elected. In Clark's district, farm clousures that have been caused by an ailing farm industry must be contended with. Every candidate must also deal with the high unemployment rate which has effected the entire country.

Robert Clark is a former school teacher who in 1967 became the first black elected to the Mississippi State Legislature. At first he was met with great opposition. State representatives would not show him due respect when he took the floor of the State House. But they soon came to respect Clark and now he is the Chairman of the Education Committee. The govenor of Mississippi, William Winter is one of the strongest supporters of Clark's campaign which is a valuable asset to him.

Bradley, like Clark, also wanted to be a school teacher but instead he became a Los Angeles police officer. The son of a sharecropper, Bradley soon rose to become a lieutenant in the police department. His two years on the police force thrust him into community activities and then politics. In 1969 he ran for mayor of Los Angeles but lost to Sam Yorty after Yorty ran a racist campaign. In 1973 Bradley ran again but this time the racist tactics did not work and Bradley became mayor.

Bradley has shown his effectiveness in running the city of Los Angeles and has recently been noted for organizing the financial backing of the 1984 Olympics that are scheduled for Los Angles. The people have shown their faith in him by re-electing him as mayor. He has a big advantage in the campaign for governor because he is the mayor of California's largest city.

Both Bradley and Clark have experienced racist controversy during their campaigns. Clark's opponent first ran an advertising campaign entitled "He's one of us" which many believed had racist connotations. Later he had a television commerical beind a confederate monument while he talked about keeping southern traditions. Webb Franklin is also noted as the judge that sentenced ex-Tchula Mayor Carthan to three years in prison in a very controversial case of assaulting an officer. During the case Franklin was known to use irregularities during the trial.

Bradley's opponent had to fire his campaign manager because of a statement make to the press saying that if there was a 5 percent margin between the candidates at election time Bradley would lose because of a silent racist vote.

Yet in both campaigns Bradley and Clark are in the lead. In California, Bradley has had the lead by a large margin through the entire campaign. In Mississippi, Clark is leading because he is carrying a stronger white vote than his opponent is.

Although both of these candidates have the lead in their campaigns much of the press still shows some doubt over whether they will win because the candidates are black. But that remains to be seen, and it will be very soon.

Gibson And Carthan

Recently two black political officials who are already in office have found themsleves in heavy political battles. In Newark, New Jersey, Mayor Kenneth A. Gibson, along with two other men, faced 141 charges of conspiracy and political misconduct. In Tchula, Mississippi, ex-Mayor Eddie Carthan is facing a murder charge.

Mayor Gibson and City Councilman Earl Harris were charged with creating a no show job for former City Councilman Michael E. Bontempo and defrauding the city of $115,000 in payroll salary.

The case came up after vandals damaged an aqueduct which brings water to Newark from the Pequannock Watershed. Records show that Mr. Bonetempo was head of security at the watershed. But instead Mr. Bontempo who is 81-years-old and in failing health was living in Florida.

On October 21 a jury decided that Mayor Gibson and Mr. Harris were not guilty of all but two of the charges. They were not able to come to a verdict on the remaining charges. No evidence was found that either the mayor or Mr. Harris actually knew Mr. Bontempo had a no show job. Mr. Bontempo will not come to court until January because of his health.

In the Eddie Carthan case, the ex-Mayor of Tchula, Mississippi is charged with ordering the murder of Roosevelt Granderson. Granderson was a Tchula alderman and a longtime political foe of Carthan.

Granderson was murdered during the robberty of his convenience store. Two men were charged with the robbery and were convicted. One man stated that he was pressurred by officials to implicate Carthan in ordering the murder of Granderson. But he refused saying that he did not know Carthan. Another did implicate Carthan in return for reduced charges.

Eddie Carthan was elected mayor in 1977. Before he was elected, the Tchula area was a place where many houses did not have electricity or running water. The area is surrounded by white-owned farmland where many black people are used as cheap labor. But Eddie Carthan changed things by bringing in federal and private financial aid. He helped to bring in basic health care, better transportation services and improved the industrialization of the area.

But Carthan ran into serious problems with the City Council who appointed a retired white cop as chief of police without the approval of Carthan. The Mayor had six auxiliary policemen remove the chief from City Hall when he interfered with the Mayor's duties. The six officers and the Mayor were charged with assaulting an officer. When the case went to trial there were many irregularities conducted by Judge Webb Franklin who is running against Black State Representative Robert Clark for Congress this year. During the trial the judge would not allow an explanation of the Mayor's duties saying it was irrelevant. He also pressured the jury into a quick verdict and said that a guilty verdict would result in a small fine. When the guilty verdict came in Carthan and the other six men were given three years in prison. The group has now been named the Tchula Seven by their supporters.

The murder case started October 19 and many prominent people have begun to support Carthan. There was a rally recently in Jackson, Mississippi where Dick Gregory, Reverand Joseph Lowry of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Reverand Mickey McGuire of the Black United Front and Milton Tutwiler, Mississippi Representative to the National Conference of Black Mayors attended. Carthan even has the support of Roosevelt Granderson's brother and daughter who do not believe that he had anything to do with the crime.

There were also rallies in major cities across the country in front of Federal buildings and post offices. This story has not made the major press as an important one but many people are determined not to let the case be ignored. Many believe that if the establishement can get away with this one they can do it again somewhere else in the country.

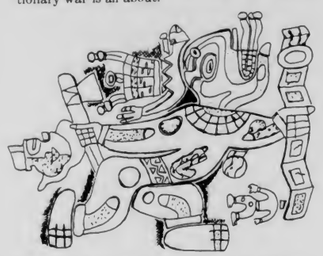
The Guatemalan Reality: Interview with Rigoberta Menchu

Rigoberta Menchu is a 23-year old Indian woman from the town of Quiche, Guatemala. A peasant and a Christian leader, Rigoberta was an early member of the Committee for Peasant Unity (CUC), and a founder of the Revolutionary Christians Vicente Menchu, a radical grassroots Christian group named after her father who was burned alive during an occupation of the Spanish Embassy on January 31, 1980. Rigoberta's younger brother was kidnapped by the Army and murdered in 1979; her mother met a similar fate in late 1980. As a revolutionary Christian she is a member of the January 31 Popular Front (FP-31) and most recently was named a member of the Guatemalan Comittee for National Unity (CGUP).

What is the Situation in Guatemala Today?

Guatemala is in a state of war. The people have been left with no alternative but to fight. For years the ruling classes and the Army have controlled all the land and wealth. In the last few years a group of generals has taken over the best lands which our people had for many years. When we began to protest and to demand our rights we were met with repression. We have faced repression for centuries, but during the last few years it has become institutionalized. The military and the rich have been unwilling to share their power and wealth, and can now only rule through repression.

In Guatemala there is no space for open grassroots organizations to make demands. There isn't even any space to make those demands public because the media is closed to us. In the face of repression the people have developed concrete ways of defending themselves; their children and their land. They have been forced to look for different forms of struggle. This is what the popular Revolutionary war is all about.

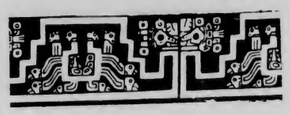


When Did People Become Involved in the Struggle on a Massive Level?

The Panzos massacre was a turning point in terms of people's consciousness. On May 29, 1978 over 100 Kekchi Indians were murdered by the Army when they gathered in the town square of Panzos to protest evictions from their lands. Many other people, particularly in the city, also began to be persecuted. This was the beginning of direct persecution of our people. Then the massacre of 27 peasants in the Spanish Embassy, who were accompanied by our people from other sectors, showed clearly that there was no alternative but war. People began to look for new ways to struggle. They began to search for ways to go beyond the legal structure for basic demands, and to think of overthrowing the old structures which have repressed and oppressed us for centuries. This is the point at which people began to incorporate massively into the struggle.

How are People Organized?

There are many different levels of mass participation. Although the space for open organizing for basic demands is almost closed, there are unions which continue to struggle, although now mostly for the right to jobs, because so many factories are closing. On another level, we have the revolutionary mass organizations, in which activity is directed at wearing down the enemy and forcing it to disperse its forces. On this level people have responded to the repression by going beyond immediate demands to using more violent methods.



Can You Give An Example of Revolutionary Mass Work?

The peasants organized into the Committee for Peasant Unity (CUC) are no longer content with asking landowners for higher and more just wages. A successful strike led by the CUC in February, 1980 mobilized 75,000 agricultural workers and forced the government to give in and raise the minimum wage to $3.20 a day, (up from $1.20). But most of the leaders of the strike were killed soon afterwards, and the landowners refuse to pay the new minimum wage. So now CUC combines basic demands with economic sabotage. For example, machines used to substitute labor are burned, so are the control towers set up in the middle of the plantations to control the workers. But they are not guerrillas, they are revolutionary mass organizations.

People in the villages have organized to defend themselves. For example, they place obstacles on the highways to stop the Army from coming into their villages. There are also people organized directly as support bases for the guerrilla organizations. They are the ones who are definitively waging the revolutionary war because the vanguard could not exist without them. They offer their best sons and daughters as combatants. They feed them with what they can cultivate on their tiny plots of land. These people also provide information on the enemy, organize the population, hide the wounded, etc.

The revolution in Guatemala is being waged in homes and villages not just in the mountains. The people decide when and where the vanguard should move so the population won't be massacred and the Army will not catch it off guard.

Are There Any Liberated Areas?

We don't speak of liberated areas. But in many areas the participation of the organized masses is at a higher level; many villages have local revolutionarypower, where people are organized for self-defense, and all matters, ranging from land disputes, to storing food for war-time, to marriages, are settled. People are being taught Spanish and to read an write.

What Can You Tell Us About the Participation of Women?

At first it was hard because of the high percentage of Indian population in the country. We maintain or culture and our way of life, and most Indian women never learn to speak Spanish. There has been a need for intense political work, first with the men and then with the women to begin to change this situation. At present we could say that a high percentage of women in the countryside are becoming involved in the war, and there are increasing numbers in positions of leadership and responsibility in both the mass organizations and the political-military organization.

How Do You View the Indian Participation in the War?

Guatemala is a multinational country with 22 different Indian ethnic groups, plus the Ladinos (mestizos or Indians who have adopted the dominant Western ways). Capitalism has brought separation in terms of language and culture, as well as extreme discrimination against the Indians. Indians are despised in Guatemala, and in many areas they are treated as beasts. When the revolutionary movement began it had to work intensely to overcome many barriers and the distrust of centuries. It also had to help the different ethnic groups to begin to communicate with each other. Today the Indian people are massively involved because the revolutionary movement speaks directly to them and it has won their hearts. It was not difficult, once the initial distrust began to be overcome, for Indians to understand what the movement was talking about; we live a daily experience of poverty, misery, suffering and rejection. We have come to understand that it is not our destiny to be poor.

We Indians are clear on the fact that we are risking our culture by participating in the war. The Army knows our decision to fight back and this is why the massacres and persecution have been directed with such vengeance against our people. The scorched earth policies initiated by Lucas and continued by the Junta, leave no survivors. Many old people, a central part of our culture, have already fallen. We are also clear that our main demand after the revolution, as Indians, will be the defense of our culture, and the right to develop our culture which is now denied us.

What is a Strategy of Popular Revolutionary War?

It involves mass participation at all levels in the revolutionary struggle. We speak of three levels of concrete participation: the political-military, because the people cannot win without a vanguard; the mass level, in which the people defend themselves and struggle with whatever they can find. There are not enough weapons to arm the entire population, so people use simple traps and home-made weapons to defend themselves from the Army. We also realize that the internal struggle is not enough, that we need international solidarity, and this is the third level of struggle.

Murders Increase in Guatemala

Amnesty International reported Monday that 2,600 Indians and peasants of Guatemala had been massacred since Gen. Efrain Rios Montt took power in March.

It said that military and civil defense units carried out torture, mutilation and mass executions in at least 112 separate actions between March and July this year.

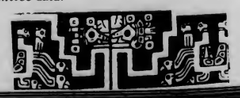
The organization said that on April 5, 100 people were killed in Mangal and 35 in Covadonga and that at a village in Quiche Province soldiers gathered all the inhabitants, raped the women, beheaded the men and battered the children to death.

More Murder in Guatemala

The right-wing, U.S.-supported government in Guatemala gave the army a directive which leveled the Indian settlements of San Jose Las Rosas and Cohometabah recently. Military units entered the villages, shooting peasants and hurling their victims' bodies down ravines and into rivers. Military units also destroyed crops and cattle in the attack. At the same time, the liberation forces have stepped up their defense of the country. Guatemalan patriots inflicted significant casualties on the military in battles in the regions called Quiche and San Jose Poaquil.

In Mexico City, the famous Guatemalan refugee writer and political figure Luis Cardoza Aragon issued a statement this week stressing that his coutry is witnessing a sruggle of civilization against barbarism. Aragon praised the liberation forces' struggle and remarked that for the first time in Guatemalan history, a genuine revolution for people's freedom and happiness is making progress.

In New York, the Committee in Solidarity with the People of Guatemala issued a statement demanding an end to U.S. aid to the Guatemalan regime. The new government, which seized power on March 23 of this year, has murdered 8,000 people so far, the committee said.



Black Perspective on News Events With the Collegian

By Keith W. Johnson

Black Affairs is the department of the Collegian which reports news and provides education and information to, for and about the Third World Community. The section is published every Tuesday and Thursday.

The main goal of the department is to take Third World perspective and work it into the mainstream of the media output. What is most important is that Black Affairs tries to present a different and progressive perspective for not only the Third World community but also the White community.

Black Affairs Editor, Phil Jennings explains the reports that the department produces are "hard news". This is a journalism term that means the news is current and timely. This is in contrast to Nummo News which presents more in-depth news analysis.

Spotlight

Black Affairs currently has a staff of six people. This includes Associate Editor Gus Martins, Jennifer Hardy, Yadira Betances, Rick Williams and Jay Obe. The staff is a mixture of people of various Third World ethnic backgounds. Yet the staff could still use the help and support of more students. Mr. Jennings urges more underclassmen to get involved with Black Affairs. "Alot of brothers and sisters did a lot of struggling before us in order to form these organizations (such as Black Affairs) and made alot of sacrifices because these organizations help the community." he explained.

Black Affairs can provide experience for students in such majors as Journalism, English, Art, and Communication Studies.

Phil Jennings will be on internship next semester with Channel 57 in Springfield which is fortunate for Mr. Jennings and his future. It is, however, unfortunate for Black Affairs because he will have to leave his position as editor. Black Affairs will need people to fill the void after he gone.

For more information contact Phil Jennings or Gus Martins at the Collegian, located in the basement of the Campus Center or call 545.3500.

NUMMO regularly presents information about Third World student Organizations at UMass.

Life In The Fast Lane

By Keith W. Johnson

Last Thursday the Third World Theater Series presented it's second play of the semester entitled: "Life In The Fast Lane." The play was a one man production by Japanese-Hawaiian poet Lane Nishikawa.

The play presented many aspects of the Asian-American experien ce. But using lighting, sound effects, and simple staging, Mr. Nishikawa took the audience from the streets of San Francisco to the beaches of Hawaii. There was also the pain of bigotry and the terror of concentration camps of the 1940's. But what was most evident was the pride of being an Asian-American.

There were some parts of the play that were sad, such as the experience told of Uncle Blacky who was with the 442nd Nisei-Army Unit in Europe during World War II. He saw many of his friends die and brought them home to be buried. After the war he experienced much pain and stress and finally committed suicide at Punchbowl Cemetary where his friends were buried. The experience was very similiar to what some veterans went through after Vietnam.

But there were also satirical scenes that inspired the audience to laugh out loud. Such was the super cool "Black Jap" who was so cool that he committed hari kiri and lived. One could not help but laugh at the ignorance of a Texas bigot as his children went off to college and came to marry Asian-Americans.

There was a good audience in Bowker Auditorium that night and they were very receptive. The crowd consisted of people of all persuations, Black, White, Hispanic and Asian. Many enjoyed the informal talk with Mr. Nishikawa and the producer Eric Hayashi after the show.

Lane Nishikawa was born in Wahiawa, Hawaii and then lived in San Francisco. He studied at San Francisco State and later became a teacher there. In 1972 he started working with the Kearny Street Workshop and also at the Japantown Art and Media Workshop, both in San Francisco. Since 1977, Mr. Nishikawa has worked with the Asian-American Theater Company. The Company presented "Life In The Fast Lane" during it's 1980-81 season. The Sansei Theater Company has taken the play on tour across the country. The Sansei Theater tries to take Asian-American Theater to a broader audience by touring U.S. cities and college campuses.

Lane Nishikawa has had much of his work published in anthologies and magazines such as "Time to Greez", "Incantations from the Third World," and "Azumi". In the future he hopes to turn "Life In The Fast Lane" into a book and a film or video production. They hope to air the film on Public Television. In March the play will be showing off-Broadway in New York.

Mr. Nishikawa is very concerned with having control over his own work. That is one of the ideas of the Sansei Company in that it is owned and controlled by Asian-Americans. In talking to Mr. Nishikawa about theater he said it is rough for any Asian-American who wants to get into theater because there are not many parts available. "Don't expect alot...but give it all you've got" said he.

For the Americas of Today: Nueva Trova

By Nicola Stein

Almost a decade after the revolution in Cuba, many talented individual Cuban singers and songwriters felt the need to link culture and struggle together. They decided it was important to pool their talents as musicians and express their political ideas through the medium of song. It was their goal to sing songs about love - not the old 'love-me-or-I'll-die' serenades, but songs about real love between real people in a real world - and songs that reflected the Cuban revolution and the struggle of Cuban men and women to build their country. They also hoped to bring about about a deeper understanding of their newly formed socialist country.

Under the leadership and guidance of the Union of Young Communists in Cuba, three talented musicians, Pablo Milanes, Silvio Rodriguez and Noel Nicola, founded a song movement in 1972 called, "El Movimiento de la Nueva Trova" (New Troubadours). The Cuban Trova members likened themselves to troubadours - both the late medieval lyric poets of Italy and France and the troubadours of the Oriente province who wandered with guitars from place to place to share their melodies with others. All were pioneers in their music and their ideas, and all brought their songs of love and struggle to the common people.

The song movement grew and attracted many talented aspiring musicians, among them Vicente Feliu, Sara Gonzales and Amaury Perez. The Trova became officially recognized as a nationwide organization. Thus it was possible for a group of three or more persons from any town or pueblo to form their own branch of the Nueva Trova. In this way the Nueva Trova was not only opening its doors to trained professional musicians but it was welcoming all students, military volunteers, workers and amateurs to join.

In its early years the Nueva Trova met up with some resistance from the general public, who considered the music too experimental, too modern- a far cry from the old Cuban folkloric sound.

Actually, the new song movement was an extension of the old music. The lyrics and music became more elaborate, more instruments and musical techniques were used. However many of the rhythms and melodies were taken directly from older Cuban folksongs.

The members of the Trova knew that there were many misconceptions about the movement as it was brand-new and many people had not been exposed to the music enough to fully understand and appreicate it. Their determination to have people understand this new music led them to schedule performances anywhere and everywhere that people could be found. They stood on street corners after dark, traveled to factories and universities, gave special performances in hospitals, and serenaded cane workers on their lunch hour in the broiling hot sun. Their object was twofold: to entertain and to educate.

Thirteen years of concerts and exposure offer proof to its members of the success of the new song movement. Their music has not only become accepted throughout the island, but has become an important part of Cuban culture.

On any given night that a Trova performance might be scheduled in the Pabellon Cuba (an open pavillion in Havana for free concerts) young and old alike drop whatever they're doing, skip dinner, and rush from work to stand outside on the entrance line which is usually two kilometers long. If you happen to be one of those waiting in the monster line, you usually pray that you will make it inside to the stage area. From there you might begin to search for a chair. If it is your lucky night, you might chance upon a vacant seat and grab it while no one is looking. Then in sequence the spotlights go on, the sweat pours down, and the performers enter.

A typical performing group is relatively small, and usually contains no more than a guitarist, pianist, drummer and singer. They always enter together in simple clothes and without make-up, whereupon one person introduces the group and the songs for the evening. One can expect to find a solid two and a half hour program, excluding intermission, filled with emotion as the audience roars with laughter and tears and the group unloads their satire and their songs of love and peace and struggle, each song containing a very important message. Afterwards, it can take as long as an hour for the exuberant mob to head towards the door and eventually out.

What makes this kind of concert so exciting and so captivating? Free of commerical gimmicks and excessive lighting and amplification, the music is a special kind of music. There are songs about Cuba's history, songs about Cuban women and the struggle to overcome machismo, songs about children growing up and songs about love. They are all songs that have grown out of the process of change, and in this way are very meaningful to all the people of Cuba.

Carlos Ruiz de la Tejera, a well-known Cuban performer, told me: "El arte tiene que decir," meaning that art has something to say.

The songs of the Nueva Trova say a great deal.

Brigada Antonio Maceo

BRIEF HISTORY

The first contingent of the Antonio Maceo Brigade traveled to Cuba in December 1977. Composed primarily of Cuban youth residing in the United States and Puerto Rico, the participants were united by their desire to experience present Cuban reality, as well as by their commitment to work for the normalization of relations between the US and Cuba, and to achieve an end to the political violence in the Cuban communities in the US and Puerto Rico. The dialogue between these young Cubans and Cuba contributed to profound changes in the Cuban community abroad.

The Antonio Maceo Brigade was a key participant in the conferences held in Havana in November-December of 1978 between representatives of the Cuban community in the US and Puerto Rico and Cuban government officials. The "Dialogue", as this process of reconciliation is known, provided the opportunity for hundreds of thousands of Cubans to travel to their homeland. It also made possible for Cuban residents to visit their relatives abroad and brought about the release of three thousand political prisoners.

THE FIFTH ANNIVERSARY CONTINGENT

Since the Antonio Maceo Brigades'first contingent in 1977, theBrigade has organized an annual contingent to travel to Cuba. In each trip they work alongside Cuban workers, meet with campesinos and students, attend conferences and travel throughout the country.

The Fifth Contingent from December 1982 to January 1983 is particularly important because it commemorates the Fifth Anniversary of the beginning of the Dialogue.

In light of the increasingly hostile attitude of the US administration towards Cuba and Central America, the Fifth Anniversary Contingent focuses on solidarity with the poeples of Central America and the Caribbean. Therefore, representatives of solidarity organizations with these peoples will be invited to participate this year.

THE CARLOS MUNIZ YOUTH ORGANIZATION

This organization honors Carlos Muniz Varela, a courageous founder and leader of the Antonio Maceo Brigade, who was assassinated in Puerto Rico on April 18, 1979 by exiled Cuban terrorists opposed to the dialogue with Cuba.

The Carlos Muniz Youth is composed of young persons between 15-17 years of age, who travel to Cuba for a month during the summer and while in Cuba, they visit their families and share experiences with young people their age.

MACEITOS

Children between the ages of 10-14 participate in the "Maceitos". Organized also by the Brigade, the Maceitos travel to Cuba where they enjoy a month in summer camps with Cuban children and visit their families.

BARAGUA

Is the Antonio Maceo Brigades' newspapaer, published and distributed nationally to promote the Brigades activities and to furnish the readers with news about the Cuban communities and Cuba.

Jayuya Remembered
October 30th 1950

by Mauricio Hernandez

Throughout four centuries of Spanish colonialism and 84 years under US imperialism, the Puerto Rican people have struggled for their national liberation and independence from foreign domination.

This struggle has taken various forms at different times in Puerto Rican history, which has included armed struggle to international diplomacy. The first struggle against foreign domination were the armed rebellions by the native Taino indians against the Spanish conquistadors. Although the indigenous population of Borinquen (Puerto Rico's original name) were killed after a few years, the Afrikan slaves continued that struggle along with the creoles of Borinquen up until the US's invasion of Puerto Rico under the guise of the Spanish-American War.

Our struggle has many important dates, in our history, one significant date in the late 19th century is September 23, 1868, when the Puerto Rican nation was born. "El Grito de Lares", is known as the first free republic of Puerto Rico, led by the Father of Puerto Rico, Ramon Emeterio Betances, Mariana Bracetti, and Lola Rodriguez de Tio, the author of the Puerto Rican National anthem. The armed insurrection was short-lived but contributed to the end of slavery in Puerto Rico in 1873.

In 1897, 27 years after the Lares rebellion Puerto Rico was granted autonomy within the Spanish empire. In February 1898 the cabinet of the new autonomous Puerto Rican government was appointed; in March general elections were held, and the first and only Prime Minister of the government, Munoz Rivera was elected. Puerto Rico had 16 representatives to the Spanish Parliament; no laws or treaties affecting Puerto Rico could be enacted withouth the Puerto Rican Parliament.

In July 1898, as the revolutionary events in Cuba led by Jose Marti and General Antonio Maceo and in the Philippines led by Aguinaldo were on the verge of defeating the Spanish empire, and winning their independence, the US entered the Spanish-American War and snatched victory from the hands of the native forces. The autonoumous govenment of Puerto Rico was never recognized and under the Tready of Paris, Spain ceded the Philippines, Guam and Puerto Rico to the US. Cuba became a US protectorate, and so started US colonialization in Puerto Rico.

The struggle of the Puerto Rican people for national liberation has continued against US imperialism throughout its 84 years of North American occupation.

This October 30, marked the 32nd anniversary of the 1950 uprising in Jayuya, Puerto Rico which is an important date in our history of struggle for nationl liberation. This rebellion was led by Blanca Canales and Carlos Irizarry and proclaimed Jayuya the first free territory of the Second Republic of Puerto Rico. This Nationalist revolt spread across the island to Utuado, Arecibo, and Naranjito. In Ponce, Mayaguez, Aibonito, Cayey, and Penuelas there were popular uprisings.

All across the island the isurrection raged for six days. The US government called it a Civil War, a feud between warring fractions of Puerto Rican families. The US Air Force bombed Jayuya and US tanks thundered across the valleys and US trained National guardsmen squashed the rebellion.

After the 1950 revolution, the US Congress passed Public Law 600 which initiated the formation of Puerto Rico's present day status of Commonwealth or "Freee Associated State". Basicaly this gave way for a 1952 referrendum which was presented by the US representative to the United Nations to remove Puerto Rico from the UN list's of colonies. By a narrow 22 to 18 vote,the UN General Assembly acceded to the US Puerto Rico was removed from the list of colonial possessions.

The colonial case of Puerto Rico presented to the Secratary General of the UN on August 18, 1971, by the Cuban Ambassador to the UN, has brought international recognition to the present colonial status of Puerto Rico. Through resoluiton 1514 the Decolonization Committee of the UN from 1972 to 1982 have re-confiremed yearly Puerto Ricos' inalianable right to self-determination and has asked that the US government institute a plan to transfer back the powers to the Puerto Rican people.

In this last session of the General Assembly the US blocked a recommedation of the Decolonization Committee to put before the vote in the General Assembly the issue of Puerto Rico's colonial status. Although through economic and political pressures the US succeded in not allowing the vote to go before the General Assembly of the UN they have only delayed an inevitable reality. Puerto Rico gained its National liberation and independence;by any means necessary.

For the hundreds of thousands of Puerto Ricans that have live and died in the struggle for our national liberation, it is our historical responsibility to continue this present day struggle to free Puerto Rico from foreign domination. Only the Puerto Rican people will determine the future of Puerto Rico. But it is the responsibility of all people to recognize Puerto Rico's right to self-determination and to support this struggle in whatever waypossible.

Other evidence includes the unusual cancer rate in Contra Costa County, which could be due to fall-out; the missing records of the contents of two railroad boxcars which could have been used to transport the two components of a nuclear fission device; and the fascination which the Port Chicago disaster held for researchers at Los Alamos, as indicated by the extensive body of data on Port Chicago that was collected at Los Alamos. Finally, if the film footage of the explosion is an actual record of the blast at Port Chicago, then this would be strong evidence that the blast was planned and anticipated.

To conclusively establish the nature of the disaster that occurred at Port Chicago would require access to data and records that are presently unavailable. However, the evidence presented here cannot be dismissed, and it is to be hoped that further investigation will reveal the full truth about an event that was the most awesome and deadly home-front disaster of World War II.

14th Contingent 1982
VENCEREMOS BRIGADE

1. WHAT IS THE VENCEREMOS BRIGADE

The Venceremos Brigade is an educational project unique in the United States. It offers people a chance to experience the Cuban Revolution.

Since 1969, the Brigade has sent close to 5,000 people to Cuba on delegations, special interest tours, travelling educational seminars, and thirteen Venceremos Brigade Contingents, breaking through the U.S. government's blockade and travel ban against Cuba. As a multi-national, multi-racial, anti-imperialist political education project, the Venceremos Brigade carries out a year-round program of activities in the United States at both the national and local levels.

Through the work of Regional Committees based in fourteen cities across the United States, the Venceremos Brigade is active among many sectors of the popular progressive movements. Brigade organizers are mostly young, working people, active in their communities, involved in a variety of struggles – for example, the struggle for decent housing and tenants rights, trade union movements, the fight against inflation and unemployment, for the rights of national minorities, against repressive legislation, for better health care and quality education, against racist violence, for peace and disarmament, for the independence of Puerto Rico, etc., etc.

THE BRIGADE GOES TO CUBA TO SEE THE CUBAN REVOLUTION FIRST-HAND

We have shared the enthusiasm of a society based on equality of black and white, women and men. We have seen a country where no one is hungry or mal-nourished; a society that provides everyone with free quality health care and education at all levels; a system that promotes the most thorough democratic participation of its citizens in shaping their future. We have witnessed the determination of a people who repelled the Bay of Pigs invasion and insured that the Cuban people, and not Washington, will have the final say in Cuban affairs. We have seen a nation which must constantly defend itself—against continuous economic and political attacks and military threats from the U.S.—in order to preserve and build the way of life they have chosen for themselves, including a deep humanitarian commitment to also help other peoples of the world in their struggles against underdevelopment, colonialism, and imperialist aggression.

Returning home, Brigade members, or "brigadistas," have brought back insights for their work here in the United States—insights that come from the personal experience of living and working side by side with Cuban men and women.

Returning brigadistas join in the Venceremos Brigade's commitment to share our experiences with others, as a contribution to dispelling the myths and distortions in this country about the Cuban Revolution.

Thus the trip itself is only a part of what the Brigade is all about. In addition to organizing travel to Cuba, brigadistas are active throughout the year developing and distributing educational materials and audio-visual resources, organizing community forums on Cuban domestic life and international policies, working in coalitions with other groups and individuals in solidarity with Cuba, against U.S. intervention in the Caribbean and Central American region, and around other international and domestic social justice issues. The work of the Venceremos Brigade in all its aspects emphasizes active commitment to the struggle against racism and to the building of unity among progressive sectors.

WE THINK THE CUBAN REVOLUTION HAS SOMETHING IMPORTANT TO SAY TO THE PEOPLE LIVING IN THE UNITED STATES.

2. WHAT DOES THE BRIGADE DO IN CUBA?

The Brigade Contingents to Cuba are not tourist trips. We are invited to live and work alongside Cuban workers, to experience the day-to-day realities of Cuba life. This year the three week program of the Brigade in Cuba will include work in the construction of a new hospital; presentations and conferences on various aspects of Cuban society; visits to schools, factories, clinics and hospitals; music and cultural entertainment; informal visits and discussion; meetings with representatives of other countries and national liberation movements; and much, much more. And, as in past years, the Brigade will be invited to participate with hundreds of thousands of workers in the annual May Day celebrations in Havana's Plaza of the Revolution.

3. ISN'T IT ILLEGAL TO TRAVEL TO CUBA?

New U.S. government regulations seeking to tighten the blockade by limiting travel now restrict the spending of money in Cuba unless authorized by the U.S. Treasury Department. However, travel in and of itself is not illegal, and because brigadistas are guests in Cuba, legal counsel advises us that participation on the Contingent does not violate U.S. law. Nevertheless, the travel of the 14th Contingent to work and visit in Cuba will constitute a clear statement of protest against the Reagan administration's policies of intimidation and harassment against both Cuba and Cuba's friends in the United States. Symbolically, the Venceremos Brigade Contingents defy the U.S. blockade against Cuba, affirming the constitutional rights of the people living here to travel freely and affirming, as well, the right of our peoples to build peaceful and friendly relations with our Caribbean neighbor.

4. THE XIV CONTINGENT.

The 14th Contingent of the Venceremos Brigade will go to Cuba in April of 1983. Upon initial selection as a candidate, or "recruit," for the 14th Contingent, you will be expected to participate in a Preparation Program which begins in January and continues until shortly before the Brigade leaves for Cuba. The preparation for the trip involves regular meetings (about one a week) and will include readings and films, presentations and discussions about Cuba, some Spanish language instruction, physical exercise, and involvement in the ongoing educational and fundraising activities of the Venceremos Brigade.

Selection for the 14th Contingent involves a contribution of from $575 to $675 per person which partially covers the costs of organizing and sending the Brigade to Cuba. While in Cuba, the Cuban Institute for Friendship with the Peoples (ICAP) is your host and provides for all your needs. We ask that individual recruits to the Brigade pay as much of the $575/$675 as possible—but the Brigade in each city will support the collective fundraising efforts of the recruits which are organized to assist those who may not be able to raise the full amount on their own.

5. WHO CAN GO ON THE BRIGADE?

The 14th Contingent will be made up of about 200 people from across the United States. In selecting who will go, the Venceremos Brigade looks for people who are involved in some aspect of the movement of social change, particularly people active in community-based struggles, the anti-racist struggle, the peace and trade union movements. The Brigade also includes people from organizations promoting anti-imperialist and socialist ideas. An important part of our effort is aimed at insuring participation by Black, Puerto Rican, Mexican and Chicano, Native American Indian and Asian-American activists.

In addition to organized, active involvement in some aspect of "the movement," each Brigade applicant must be prepared to make at least one year's commitment to work with the Venceremos Brigade upon return from Cuba, and must be in good physical health, free of legal restrictions, and currently not in military service. All applicants to the Brigade must be U.S. citizens or permanent legal residents, 18 years or older. If you intend to apply for the 14th Contingent and do not have a valid/current passport, you should apply for one immediately so that if you are initially selected you have it in hand once the Preparation Program begins.

To be selected for the 14th Contingent, applicants must live in or very near those cities where there is an established Regional or Liaison Committee of the Venceremos Brigade.

There are committees in: Albuquerque, New Mexico; Austin, Texas; Boston; Chicago; Detroit; Hartford, Connecticut; Los Angeles; Madison, Wisconsin; New York City; Philadelphia; San Francisco/Bay Area; Seattle; Washington, D.C.; and Western Massachusetts.

People interested in the Brigade who live in North or South Carolina, Mississippi, and/or Atlanta, Georgia should contact the National Office.

6. HOW ARE SELECTIONS MADE?

Each applicant fills out an application which is turned in to the Regional or Liaison Committee in your city. On the basis of the application, you may be notified for a short interview. Initial selections recommendations are made by the Regional Committee and reviewed at the national level. Then, after a period of several weeks of participation in the Preparation Program, a final selection is made. This process is completed about a month to six weeks before the Brigade leaves for Cuba.

Once you have been initially selected you will be required to pay a portion of the total $575/$675 contribution in the form of a $100 deposit toward the trip. You should be prepared to bring this $100 with you to the first session of the Preparation Program (for information on refund procedures and other financial policies of the VB, consult your local Regional Committee.)

7. HOW CAN APPLICATIONS BE OBTAINED?

You can get an application through direct contact with the Regional Committee in your area. Or, send the coupon in this brochure to the Regional Committee listed or to the National Office of the Brigade. You should return your completed application to the Regional Committee no later than one week after you receive it.

The final deadline for applications is December 1, 1982. However, you should be sure to check with the Regional Committee in your area as this deadline may vary slightly from city to city.

un murmullo apenas somos.

Aquí estamos una vez mas
aparentemente imperceptibles.
Nos miramos
y nos reconocemos, nos hemos visto a menudo
en ocasiones similares celebrando revoluciones lejanas protestando invasiones y masacres.

Aquí estamos una vez más

AN NOUNCEMENTS

The Third World Women's Task Force is sponsoring a film series this autumn semester, 1982, entitled: Third World Women in Liberation Struggles. In concert with each film presentation, there will also be a faculty member from the five college area to speak, answer questions, fill in gaps, update the film, and help lead a discussion. It is the hope of the Third World Women's Task Force that these presentations will provide a forum of discussion as well as education around topics of concern to the Third World, and specifically to the women of the Third World.

This is a lunchtime film series to be held every-other Thursday at noon until 1 p.m. These presentations are free of charge and open to all.

Due to the nature of the organization, and to the extremely limited budget we are working with, we are asking those groups and individuals like yourselves who share common interests to co-sponosr the series by making a monetary contribution, if possible. Any amount is both welcome and appreciated. We thank you for your interest in our program.

UMass could decide races

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts have a golden opportunity to establish themselves as a political force in Massachusetts. They can do this by voting today.

"By coming out to vote in large numbers, we're making a statement to the politicians that no longer are we going to be perceived as apathetic and unmotivated, but we're going to be participants in the electoral process," said Michael Ferrigno, acting state student organizer for the 28 Massachusetts state colleges and universities.

In the two months since the current school year began, UMass has registered more voters than it ever has in its entire history. Twenty-eight hundred voters were registered on Oct. 5, the day of the nuclear freeze rally, to go along with the 2200 already registered.

But if the registered voters do not come out today, all the efforts will have been for naught, Ferrigno said.

"If we participate in large numbers, we'll be able to demand that our voice be heard in the decision making politics of the state legislature," Ferrigno said.

Ferrigno attributed the recent Student Senate struggle over the endorsement of incumbent Democratic state senator John Olver directly to the unprecedented number of students now registered at UMass. Olver will probably need at least 11,000 votes in order to be re-elected.

"We have the potential of supplying 5,000 of those votes," he said. "We can almost pick our own candidate if we're organized."

"Voting will show students do care about what's going on. Otherwise no one has any way of knowing or caring," said Student Government Association President Jim Murphy.

Ferrigno said he agrees with speculations that many people may turn out to vote due to the controversial referendum questions on this year's ballot. This turnout may offset the lack of interest in the gubernatorial and Senate race which have been perceived to be landslides.

He said he expects the nuclear freeze issue to generate most of the voter interest.

But if the turnout is low, a large UMass turnout will be even more significant, Ferrigno said.

"No matter what they (politicians) think of us on a personal level, on a pragmatic level they'll have to deal with us. That kind of respect is long overdue and coming," he said.

Ferrigno said he is currently in the process of forming a coalition of all the state schools to lobby for student rights and needs.

Only voters registered in Amherst are eligible to vote in Amherst in today's election. Others must vote in the towns in which they are registered.

Precinct one, including residents of Puffton Village, North Village, Gilreath Manor, Presidential, Riverside Park, Brandywine and Townhouse apartment complexes must vote in the North Congregational Church on North Pleasant Street opposite Meadow Road.

East Amherst voters (precinct two) including Fraternity and Sorority Park and residents of Butterfield Dormitory, Village Park, Crestview and University Apartments must go to the North Fire Station on the corner of East Pleasant Street and Tilson Farm Road to vote.

Residents in all dorms in Northeast, Sylvan, Orchard Hill and Central residential areas, excluding Butterfield, (precinct three) can vote at the Lutheran Church on Pleasant Street near the Meadow Parks School.

Halloween not too scary for police, dorm security

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Correspondent

Residence hall staff at the University of Massachusetts and area police said they were treated to relatively few tricks this Halloween weekend and the UMass campus and town were fairly quiet.

Many students went home or to off-campus parties to celebrate Halloween because of the restrictions placed on the dormitories again this year.

Sam Taveras, head of residence in James dormitory in Southwest, said he "enjoyed an exceptionally quiet weekend." He said he was pleased at the fact that the restrictions were less stringent this year and there were still "relatively few incidents."

Bob Campbell, assistant director of Housing Services said, "In the past, there were no provisions for parties at all but this year there were some house parties allowed with guests from on-campus."

Amherst Police reported eight arrests this weekend and eight auto accidents.

"The buses to Brittany Manor were packed. There wasn't even any room to stand," said Wheeler Community Resource Assistant Karen Lutz. "The restrictions got everyone off-campus for parties."

Dave Milstone, head of residence in Lewis dormitory in Northeast, compared the Halloween weekend with a long weekend, saying "a lot of people went away."

Housing Security worked round the clock over the weekend and was evidently quite effective, according to several residence staff members. Students who were admitted to the dorms caused little trouble.

The Halloween policy, which was implemented in 1980 after a raucous UMass Halloween in 1979, has grown more lenient since then, and continues to be successful in deterring problems, said some staff members.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey is shown a poster, fouled with anti-semitic slurs, by Rabbi Saul Perlmutter and Suzanne Siff, president of Hillel, in the Hillel office in the Student Union yesterday.

Duffey blames anti-semitic graffitti on "lunatic fringe"

By MICHAEL FOLEY
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said yesterday recent anti-semitic slurs drawn on Jewish and Israeli posters are the acts of a "radical lunatic fringe."

"The majority of the people are sympathetic," said Duffey when he visited the Hillel office in the Student Union. Hillel is a Jewish student group at the University of Massachusetts.

Duffey stopped by the Hillel office to demonstrate his concern on issues of anti-semitism and racism on campus.

Swastikas and anti-semitic slurs were scrawled on two posters announcing a meeting of the Student Alliance for Israel, a group associated with Hillel, Sept. 23. Since that time several other posters have been found vandalized.

Some Hillel members have also reported receiving threatening phone calls.

"This is not just a case of graffiti," said Duffey. "There is something more ominous and violent."

Duffey said a new "atmosphere" has been established where people feel they can make racist or anti-semitic statements without being criticized.

"somehow people have lost their embarrassment about making racist statements. They can make statements that are really derogatory and not have to worry about criticism." he said. "If people could speak up at the point it would make a lot of difference."

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, advisor to Hillel, said anti-semitism "is not just a Jewish problem — it is a campus problem."

"It is a problem of recognizing people's "dignity," he said.

Duffey said American history has been marked by an underlying tension of hate which has at times been more successfully repressed.

"We should remember that people can feel threatened," he said. Duffey said there will be a faculty seminar Oct. 11 on human relations and the UMass curriculum. A lot can be done with curriculum to deal with these problems, he said.

As an example he cited the study of American history.

"Women can say that history is taught in a way that makes them invisible," he said. He also noted that the role of immigrants in building America is often ignored.

"We need to revise our history in that sense," he said.

Duffey applauded former Chancellor Henry Koffler's Year Toward Civility program and said there will "be other elements" in plans to improve civility on campus.

Israeli commission hears foreign testimony

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Israeli commission investigating the massacre of Palestinians heard testimony yesterday from three foreign medical workers who said the killings may have begun earlier than previously believed.

The two British doctors and an American nurse — on the staff of a hospital at the Sabra refugee camp — said they began treating wounded about eight hours before Israel has said it allowed Christian militiamen to enter the camp.

The witnesses also said they thought the Israelis were in control of the Lebanese militiamen, who slaughtered the Palestinians in the Sabra and Chatilla camps in a rampage in mid-September.

"Israel was in control of what was going on there," said Ellen Siegel, who told the commission the Israelis helped get the foreign hospital workers out of the area after two days.

"There was a certain power that they had there that the others did not," said Ms. Siegel, who is from Washington, D.C. She was mildly reproached by Supreme Court Justice Aharon Barak for speculating rather than sticking to facts. "That is for us to decide," Barak said.

Ms. Siegel, and Dr. Suee Chai Ang and Dr. Paul Morris, both of London, were the first non-Israeli witnesses to appear before the three-man commission in two weeks of hearings on the massacre.

They volunteered in response to the commission's appeal for testimony that could help resolve the questions that Israel has been agonizing over: when and how much did the Israeli army know, and what did it do to stop the killing?

The Red Cross estimates at least 340 Palestinians were murdered in the two camps.

The other commission members are Supreme Court President Yitzhak Kahan and retired Maj. Gen. Yona Efrat. The commission is governed by a strict Israeli law that forbids press commentary on the testimony.

The volunteer staff members of Gaza Hospital in the Sabra camp testified that they began to treat wounded in the morning of Sept. 16, eight hours before Israel says it authorized its Lebanese Chritian allies to begin an anti-guerilla operation in the Palestinian areas.

Saint's Day protest honors dead resisters

WARSAW, Poland (AP) —Polish militants turned All Saints Day into a silent political protest yesterday, unfurling Solidarity banners and putting up new monuments to demonstrators killed by the Communist martial law regime.

Police made no attempt to intervene, but remained on guard in Warsaw and other cities in advance of an eight-hour general strike called by the Solidarity underground for Nov. 10.

Millions of Poles streamed to cemeteries across the nation for the second day yesterday, snarling traffic and carrying armloads of flowers, candles and wreaths to be placed on the graves of loved ones.

In Warsaw, protesters put up red banners marked "Solidarity" at the Powazki Cemetery near a new memorial to Maximilian Kolbe, the priest canonized Oct. 10 as "the protecter of all imprisoned."

They also placed flowers at a nearby unofficial memorial for 4,500 Polish officers executed in the Katyn forest in what is now the Soviet Union

Although responsibility for the deaths of the officers whose mass grave was discovered in 1943 has not been officially fixed, most Poles suspect the Soviets, who at the time of the discovery blamed the Nazis.

The Polish government has refused Solidarity demands to erect a monument at the Katyn memorial, now marked by three rough birch crosses.

Small hand-made placards were placed beneath the birch crosses Sunday reading: "In Memory of People who Died in 1956-1982 for Truth and Freedom."

Mass riots against the Communist regime first erupted in 1956. Since martial law was declared last Dec. 13 at least 15 people have been killed in anti-government protests in Poland.

A memorial honoring the 15 appeared Sunday in a northern suburb of Warsaw at the Brudno Cemetery.

A black banner also appeared on the Katyn grave Sunday,saying "Man, Don't Murder Me." Covering it were badges of Solidarity, the first independent union in the Soviet bloc.The union was outlawed by Parliament Oct. 8.

Catholic worshippers said prayers in Warsaw churches Sunday asking that interned Solidarity leader Lech Walesa be freed.

Reagan blames "'big spenders" for dumping school prayer, O'Neill scoffs at"all-time low"

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ignoring two decades of Supreme Court rulings, President Reagan is blaming Democratic "big spenders" for driving organized prayer out of the public schools.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., says Reagan's last-minute claim represents "an all-time low" in the president's bid to prop up Republican chances in today's elections

Reagan's televised message, broadcast as a paid political advertisement as late as last night, said: "Our way of life is based on some very fundamental values — family, faith, patriotism, hard work and opportunity. But for too long, those values have been eroded, instead of strengthened,by government policies of spend and spend, tax and tax.""The big spenders," he said,"gave us record inflation and high interest rates... made it harder for your family to save for the future... They even drove prayer out of our nation'sclassrooms."

However, it was the Supreme Court — not the Democratic Congresses of the past — that ordered organized prayer out of the public schools.

In an unbroken string of decisions since 1962, the high court has ruled that any official sponsorship of prayer sessions in public schools violates the First Amendment's prohibition of the establishment of an official religion.

The latest ruling by the highcourt came last January when the justices struck down a Louisiana law that allowed voluntary, teacher-organized prayer sessions.

Nuke danger estimates raised

BOSTON — A Massachusetts congressman urged Monday the closing of all U.S. nuclear power plants as soon as alternative power becomes available because a new federal study increases estimates of maximum death and danger from a nuclear accident.

U.S. Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., chairman of the House Interior and Investigations Subcommittee that released the study, said the "worst case" estimates of damage from a nuclear core meltdown show "the more we learn about nuclear power, the more worrisome it becomes."

"The American public has to decide how large a risk it is willing to run to have nuclear power provide for it 3 percent of its energy needs. People who were sold a bill of goods five or 10 years ago on the risks to their children might want to reassess."

There is a 2 percent chance of such an accident occurring before the year 2000 at one of the 91 sites where a nuclear plant is operating or under construction, Markey said.

That estimate was compiled by subcommittee staff researchers based on the NRC data, which found the likelihood of a core meltdown with a large radioactive release is 1 in 100,000 reactor years of operation for each plant, he said.

Profit-sharing contract approved

WESTFIELD, Mass. — Workers at Savage Industries Inc. have approved a one-year contract with the gun-maker that calls for profit-sharing in lieu of raises, according to union officials.

Timothy J. Sullivan, president of Local 1420 of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers said the rank-and-file approved the contract in a 234-12 vote on Sunday, hours before their previous contract expired at midnight.

"It's an entirely new concept for us," Sullivan said yesterday of the package which provides for the 325 workers to share 20 percent of Savage's gross profits before taxes.

"It's different, but the way the economy is now I'll try anything," Sullivan said of the contract, which also boosts sickpay and pension benefits for the workers, who now make an average $8 an hour. "We've got nothing to lose."

Digest

by the Associated Press

"Like every other U.S. gun company, our business is down,very down."

"I've negotiated contracts inthe 60s, 70s and 80s. In the 60s and 70s we would have called this union busting and getting in bed with the company. But I'm a realist and maybe it's time for a new approach in collective bargaining. Maybe we can see what we can do about the foreign competition that's killing us."

State poison statute rejected

BOSTON — A bill toughening the state's poison statute in what a sponsor said was a move aimed at product tampering was rejected yesterday by a legislative committee.

Rep. W. Paul White, House Chairman of the Criminal Justice Committee, said the bill, was rejected because "it could potentially weaken current law because of the vagueness of its language."

White said the committee, although formally recommending the bill's rejection, would consider redrafting it. House Minority Leader William Robinson said he would ask the House on Thursday to return the bill to committee for that purpose.

"Fear has gripped the public, a feat that has spread across the country and has come home to Massachusetts," said Robinson, who supported the bill.

In a memo to the committee, Robinson itemized the recent wave of product tamperings since seven died in the Chicago area from poisoned Extra Strength Tylenol capsules.

"There is no doubt that House Bill 6706 is a reaction to the daily tragedies reported by the media," he said.

$100,000 bail for babysitter

MALDEN, Mass — A 30 year-old live-in babysitter pleaded innocent yesterday to a murder charge in the death of 3-year-old Brandy Mallet, who died last week following what police allege was a fatal beating.

Malden District Judge Anthony Randazzo set bail for Elizabeth Hutchinson at $100,000 and scheduled a probable cause hearing for Nov. 9. Ms. Hutchinson, who lived with the Mallett family in an Everett housing project for a year, originally had been charged with assault with intent to murder.

Brandy Mallett was rushed to Massachusetts General Hospital on Oct. 16 suffering from injuries to her head, kidneys and legs, and she was operated on for a blood clot in her brain. The child died on Friday without regaining consciousness.

Ms. Hutchinson said Brandy was injured when she fell down the stairs.

Meanwhile, officials with the Department of Social Services continued their investigation into the Mallett case, including reports that social workers received reports of alleged child abuse at the Mallett home several weeks before the alleged fatal beating took place.

Neighbors of the Mallett family said Sunday the child's father, Roy C. Mallett Jr., told them a social worker had visited the house several weeks ago, but the children were asleep in bed at the time.

Neighbors also have said that in August they told the manager of the housing project where the Malletts lived that children allegedly were being abused, according to The Boston Globe.

Selectmen discuss capital program

By ANN CARRNS
Collegian Staff

Amherst Acting Town Manager Stanley Ziomek last night presented a 5-year, $8.7 million capital program to the Town Board of Selectmen.

In his outline of the program, Ziomek said the plan will provide funding for maintenance of existing facilities, as well for establishment of new facilities and equipment.

The plan provides $4.5 million for general purposes and school purposes, $3 million for water fund equipment and projects and $1.2 million for sewer fund equipment and projects.

Ziomek said some of the major proposals which the plan would fund, such as water storage and distribution improvements and road reconstruction," can not be delayed or the sum will become so major that we'll have to see Uncle Sam for the money."

Ziomek said the program can be funded within the constraints on property tax stipulated by Proposition 2½ but increases in water and sewer rates will be necessary.

The water rate will increase by $.12 to $.80 until fiscal year 1987, Ziomek said. This would enable the town to continue upgrading its water storage and distribution system. Ziomek noted that although conservation methods resulted in an actual decline in consumption, the improvements were still necessary.

Ziomek said although it is difficult to determine the effect of the rate increase of individual water bills, "if we're going to continue having self-supported water supplies, this is the only way to do it." He added that the $.80 rate was lower than many other Western Massachusetts towns.

Included in the general purpose and school plan were funds for 15 new pieces of equipment and vehicles. One of these vehicles is a new ladder truck for the fire department. Ziomek said the Town's ladder truck needs a great deal of maintenance and would not be adequate for "some of the taller buildings" on the University of Massachusetts campus. Ziomek said he hoped outside grants would pay for the new fire vehicle.

Coffee Shop closed weekends, Hatch hours extended

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

Beginning Saturday the Coffee Shop in the Campus Center will be closed on weekends and the Hatch Restaurant will be open, offering full service from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m.

"We are closing the Coffee Shop on Saturdays and Sundays and opening up the Hatch," said Richard Ellis, director of Food Services.

The change is being made with the hope of boosting sales in the Hatch and increasing efficiency within Food Services.

Currently, the Coffee Shop is open weekends until 11:00 p.m. while the Hatch is open on Saturdays with half service. Ellis said the present arrangement is not as efficient as it could be.

"It is not necessary to have both open at the same time," he said.

"By opening the Hatch we can offer our customers a greater variety of services. The change will enable people to utilize Food Service offerings to the fullest," Ellis said.

The Hatch Restaurant with full service, includes a deli, "la cuchina" Italian food area, a bar with beer and wine and a fast food line. It also features table service, a juke box and has a much larger seating capacity than the Coffee Shop, Ellis said.

"The advantages are overwhelming," Larry Jefferies, manager of the Hatch said.

The current weekend staff of the Coffee Shop will be transferred into other areas within the Hatch. The entire staff is expected to keep their jobs.

"We all agree that we can absorb the staff into the Hatch without any significant layoffs," Bill Harris, director of the Campus Center said. If all goes well with the new hours, the Coffee Shop may be closed during the evenings of the week and the Hatch expanded to full service until 10 p.m. or 11 p.m.

Ellis said the new weekend arrangements will be a "testing ground." If the results are successful, a similar change would be slowly phased in during the weeknights.

"I think it should work out well," Ellis said.

The new Hatch hours on weekends are as follows: the fast food line will be open from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m., the deli from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., italian food area from 5 p.m. to 11 p.m. and the Hatch bar from 5 p.m. to 11 p.m.

To start off the change the Hatch is going to offer a weekend special - a spaghetti dinner complete with salad and garlic bread for $1.99. Ellis said that many students on 10 and 14 meal plans are in need of an inexpensive meal and that the Hatch is trying to meet those needs.

Former Kissinger aide teaching at Amherst College

Anthony Lake, Amherst College political science professor.

By PAULA HOYT
Collegian Staff

After working as staff assistant at the State Department Vietnam desk, special assistant to Henry Kissinger, coordinator of foreign policy for the Muskie presidential campaign and director of policy planning for the Carter administration, Anthony Lake now enjoys his job as a professor of political science at the five colleges.

"What interests me the most about teaching, and working in Washington, is seeing the relationship between ideas and actual policy," Lake said.

Lake is a faculty member at Amherst College and a five college professor of political science. He teaches two courses on American foreign policy and lectures among the five campuses.

In one of his classes, "The Vietnam War and American Foreign Policy", Lake tries to emphasize to his students the consequences and lessons to be learned from the Vietnam experience."

Lake compares the thinking that went on in Vietnam policy planning to that of the present El Salvador issue.

"The Reagan administration is looking through a doctrinal prism and is repeating the kind of error that many of us did in thinking about Vietnam in the fifties and sixties," Lake said.

"There is still an open question as to the future course of American policy in El Salvador," Lake said. "People should remain involved with the issue, debate it, and above all, learn about it.

Another course Lake teaches is "Case Studies in American Foreign Policy," in which students examine past and present issues such as the intervention in the Korean war, Cuban missile crisis and arms control.

One point Lake said he attempts to get across to all his classes is that the officials in government are human beings driven by personal fears, ambitions, ideals and rivalries.

"You can't understand government decisions unless you try to understand the people who are making them," Lake said.

As director of policy planning with the Carter administration, Lake helped Secretary of State Cyrus Vance to anticipate the consequences of the current foreign policy decisions.

Lake said he fell in love with Western Massachusetts in the Spring of 1980 and decided to move to the area whether or not Carter was re-elected president.

Lake said he loves what he's doing now and he particularly enjoys students who challenge him.

"I am much more excited by a student who will try to poke holes in what I'm saying," Lake said.

Lake said that there are excellent students at all the college, and that probably more challenging is done at UMass than any other campus.

"UMass classes seem to be the most feisty for some reason," Lake said.

Despite his extensive background with foreign policy planning in Washington, Lake tries to relate personal experience in classes only when necessary.

"I tell stories when I think it helps to make a point, otherwise it is too easy to sound pompous," Lake said.

Lake joined the Foreign Service in 1962 because he was "excited by Kennedy." He then served in the Vietnam war for two years until 1965.

As a staff assistant for the State Department Vietnam desk, Lake did odd jobs and shuffled papers for the undersecretary of state, he said. He then spent two years on leave from the State Department because he wanted to get away, he said.

In 1969, he returned to Washington and was assigned as Henry Kissinger's special assistant. He helped Kissinger, who was National Security Advisor at the time, to manage day to day business and to work on Vietnam, he said.

Lake received a bachelor's degree in history from Harvard and studied at Cambridge University for a year until 1962. He later attended Princeton Graduate School and received a Ph.D. in public affairs.

He was the director of International Voluntary Services in 1973. This is a private agency which sends volunteers to work on developmental projects abroad, Lake said.

He also wrote the Tar-Baby Option, a book about American policy toward Rhodesia. He was contributing editor for The Legacy of Vietnam, a collection of essays on the consequences of the Vietnam war on various aspects of society and foreign policy.

Street entertainer and consciousness raiser Stephen Baird plays guitar outside the Student Union Building.

Reaganomics, New Right give minstrel fresh material

By MATTHEW BERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Street singer Steven Baird entertained a crowd of about a dozen on the stairs of the Student Union Building at the University of Massachusetts yesterday with his singing and storytelling.

Playing three guitars, a dulcimer, a mandolin and a kazoo he wooed busy UMass students for most of the afternoon.

Baird, 35, of Cambridge, has been playing on the streets since he was 22, first in protest against the Vietnam War and then as a vocation. Giving credit to Ronald Reagan and the "New Right", he is back to singing protest songs.

His humor is particularly devoted to Reagan.

"Did you hear that Reagan's library burnt down? Both books. You shouldn't giggle, he wasn't finished coloring in one of them," he quipped.

Baird calls the streets "a positive and creative space," a free breeding ground for new ideas and new music. He cited James Taylor and Patrick Henry as two who used the streets to spread political ideas.

"The streets have always been a first amendment right," he said.

Baird added that the streets are not as free now as they once were. Much of his time is spent organizing street singers and in fighting what he calls "police repression." In a 1973 suit brought by Baird, street singing was legalized in Boston and Baird was awarded street musician licence number one. Since then he has been traveling around the country in an effort to end all street music repression.

A former chemical engineering student at Northeastern University, he says that he has no regrets about quitting school and taking to the streets. As an admiring woman told him after a hug, "You're a hell of a lot more respectable than a chemical engineer."

Baird's income for the day was $15, much below his average of $25. He said UMass is usually slow, especially when compared with the $100 per day he usually receives at other colleges.

UMass group plans rally to oppose D.C. Klan march

By KEN LUNDBERG
Collegian Staff

To protest the Ku Klux Klan march in Washington D.C. this weekend in support of President Reagan, as well as, the group's recent activity nationwide, a counter-demonstration has been planned by a University of Massachusetts group in the capital city.

The rally, which is being organized by the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) Anti-Racism Team, will coincide with a similar rally in Northampton Saturday.

Mindy Chateauvert of the SCERA Anti-Racism Team said she expects about 60 people to take part in the protest against the Ku Klux Klan's march which is "so repetitive of history it's scary."

In a flyer released by the Committee for Racial and Religious Solidarity, a partial listing of over 50 groups from across the country are scheduled to attend the rally. The Civil Rights Department, United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO and the National Anti-Klan network are among those varied organizations.

Chateauvert, who is originally from Iowa, where she says the Klan involvement has grown 300 percent during the past five years, said the group is becoming "more powerful than it ever was."

The counter demonstration, Chateauvert said, "is as much against racism as it is against the Klan."

Not since the march in support of President Hoover in 1926 has the "newly-strengthened Klan come out in such numbers to back a president, Chateauvert said.

Communication vital to sex

By PHIL JENNINGS
Collegian Staff

Some sex education comes too late, but a new Peer Health Aid Program at the University of Massachusetts is designed to prevent this.

The Peer Health Aid Program is divided into different programs. The Peer Sexual Education Program (PSE) and Students Teaching Alcohol Responsibility (STARS).

Students in the Peer Health Aid Program educate undergraduates about herpes and genital disease, contraception and health aid, as well as alcohol control and nutritional habits.

The Peer Sexuality Education Program is a unique program which helps educate students about their own sexuality as well as giving out information about contraceptives and sexual diseases.

The program, which is a part of the University Health Services, advocates health education by giving workshops and colloquia in dormitories and fraternities and sororities to help inform the community about health issues.

Peer Sexual Educators also counsel students about ways to communicate with partners about sexuality.

"Our philosophy is if you can't talk about sex you have no business having intercourse," said Ron Mazur, health educator and coordinator of Peer Sexuality Education at the University Health Services.

Mazur said, "It's like the guy who bought a contraceptive for his woman and she said 'I haven't known you long enough to even discuss intercourse.'"

"The important thing is communication," said Mazur.

The goals of the program are to help students to communicate effectively and sensitively with one another about sexual concerns and issues, to take a responsibility for their own sexual health and relationships and to live in a community with those who hold differing values and lifestyles.

The Peer Health Aid program is also trying to get students involved in mental health, which may include coping with campus life or dealing with alcoholism.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Nuclear freeze — reality or folly?

Freeze backers ignore Russia

Some of the people who are working for the nuclear freeze are prisoners of a trap Reagan built, a trap of excess idealism, unreasonable fear, and self-centeredness, even selfishness. And some other people in the freeze movement could be called "the other moral majority."

It hurts me to say this since I am strongly in favor of arms control and what might be called "de-armament." ("Disarmament," even if only nuclear, will not come about until the world as a whole surmounts its current general crisis of over-urbanization, over-militarization, over-population and the resulting socio-political tensions.) I have signed pro-"freeze" petitions and aided the arms control process at the political and the governmental levels. But I support the freeze as a tool, not a panacea.

The freeze movement needs some reasoned, but still liberal and humanistic criticism. Supporters of the movement ought not automatically take such criticism as right-wing, obstructionist or absurd. The movement also needs some concern and education about the Soviet Union, that unavoidable and necessary "other party" whose approval and partnership is necessary for arms control. Strangely, the movement in effect ignores the Soviet Union. Thinking we alone can solve a problem is typically American. "Going it alone" on this is similar, sadly, to Reagan's approach to the arms control issue. Both the freeze movement and Reagan take rigid and unrealistic stands that ignore the other "players."

As a specialist on Soviet politics who has lived in the USSR I always ask, "Is such and such an American proposal acceptable to the Soviets?" Even if the Soviet government were based on principles and practices similar to ours it would tend to be strongly security-conscious and defense-oriented because it is a multi-ethnic (and multi-racial) state without an active "melting pot" bordering on a dozen countries and with huge territories acquired mainly by conquest.

If the USSR cannot come to an agreement with Japan on two insignificant islands how can it come to a transformational or totalistic arms control agreement with us? (Of course, small-scale, very specific agreements are possible, and they must be pursued, but these will not change the basic picture of a heavily armed USSR that only keeps up with us in every respect but, contrary to what some of the naive (and occasionally anti-American) "freezers" tell us, actually goes ahead of the United States in testing and deploying weapons, e.g., the satellite-killer.) Of course the United States has more than once deployed new weapons first. The MIRV or multiple-warhead missile is a notable example. But this only proves the underlying point or reality of the weapons development process. If a new weapon is thinkable it will be produced and deployed.

Even if the United States and the USSR were to agree not to deploy the cruise missile someone else would. There is no reason the French could not or would not build one (and then sell it to Argentina and Mexico, say). The cruise missile is an ideal deterrent for a small country, particularly if a producer begins to give them away or sell them. And what right do we have telling countries how to protect themselves?

The nuclear freeze movement could profit from examination as well as self-examination. It is a type of extremism, gentle and well-meaning in the main, but extremist nevertheless. It is natural American pragmatism become ideology, with its own high priests, propaganda, lingo and aims. This is "un-American" and dangerous, as dangerous as is the Reagan administration's policy. Although that administration has not totally polarized American politics and destroyed the middle ground of reason and realism, the freeze movement gets closer to completing the job. In addition, the freeze movement operates on the cheap. It offers the promise of an easy general solution to our problems. This is a scheme, not a plan, much less politics. Further, though its ideologists are educated people it panders to people's natural fear of death, not to their reason and knowledge. The movement is a type of isolationism. It is also selfish. Clearly, it is a movement of the well-off. They owe us and themselves more than this knee-jerk reaction to the fear of dying, a fear that is unfounded. Nuclear war is suicide, and states do not commit suicide. The real danger is "conventional war," which a freeze could bring closer. And "conventional war" is now a greater horror than ever, as the cluster bomb shows. We also have to be careful that some of the vocal opposition to Reaganism does not seem to be under the control of those who are permanently in opposition to everything. Let us keep up the pressure for arms control but let us not be led by a few "true believers" down garden paths that turn into swamps or dead ends. There are much more powerful issues with which to attack the Reagan administration.

Why does not the freeze support a broad civil rights, job creation and economic renewal effort? This needed alternative movement could bring the mass support the freeze movement lacks. A single-issue "suburban intellectual" movement cannot win. It cannot appeal to the down-and-out. It can only further cut apart the social bonds required for a rewarding politics in which all of us can share. Let us who are appalled at what the Reagan administration is doing to the country reach out further and build something that is believable as well as effective.

Karl W. Ryavek is a professor of Political Science at UMass

Foes prey to right-wing media

I would like to address a seriously, if not entirely, flawed editorial by Katherine Curda which appeared on October 26 on this page. Since she is a fellow Soviet Studies student, I feel especially compelled to respond.

Miss Curda is opposed to the Nuclear weapons freeze. To justify this position she accuses the Soviet Union of aspirations to nuclear superiority, cites the SS-20 as "perhaps the most dangerous weapon the Soviets have ever deployed," supports President Reagan's Zero-Option proposal for nuclear weapons reductions in Europe and is dismayed at the Soviet rejection of this proposal, distinguishes between a communist nuclear weapon and a democratic nuclear weapon, and unashamedly states that "only" 23 percent of the federal budget is going to the Pentagon.

Soviet Nuclear Superiority: Relative to the United States, the Soviet Union does not possess the economic or the technological capability to achieve nuclear superiority. The threat of Soviet nuclear superiority is a lie which has filtered down to Miss Curda through the Reagan Administration disinformation network, which includes Commentary Magazine, and The National Review, and the so-called research institutes or "think tanks": such as the Hoover Institution at Stanford University and the CPD (Committee on the Present Danger). Ronald Reagan is a director at CPD, and an honorary fellow at the Hoover Institution.

The purpose of these magazines and other institutes is to manage the social and political facts, create the ideological cover for the military budget and interventionist policies, and to ensure that the 'right kind of people' continue to fill the country's highest political offices. Their ranks are full of ex-CIA and intelligence agencies officials and their specialty is disinformation and the dissemination of political propaganda. Ray Cline, who was the CIA officer in charge of psychological warfare operations in Chile during the time of the Allende overthrow, is now a consultant to Readers Digest (a magazine devoted to waging psychological warfare on Americans) and head of the World Power Studies at CSIS at Georgetown University.

A major theme of these magazines and institutes is the overwhelming Soviet nuclear threat. However, if we were to freeze now the U.S. would have approximately 2,000 more strategic nuclear warheads, with more accurate and survivable launchers than the Soviet Union. In 1981 the Joint Chiefs of Staff unanimously stated that they would not trade their armed forces for the Soviet counterparts.

The Soviet SS-20 and President Reagans Zero-Option Proposal: Miss Curda says that the SS-20 is "perhaps the most dangerous weapon the Soviets have ever deployed." Yet, the SS-20 is not capable of reaching the United States and is deployed only on Soviet territory, with a significant portion of them being deployed along the Sino-Soviet border. On the other hand, the American Pershing 2 and Tomahawk Cruise missiles, scheduled for deployment in Europe in 1983, would be located only 10 minutes from Moscow, would be invisible to Soviet radar (a capability which the SS-20 does not have), and would be completely controlled by the U.S. Army. Not a single European country would have the authority to launch these missiles.

President Reagan's Zero-Option proposed that the Soviets dismantle all of their SS-20 missiles, while the U.S. would promise not to deploy the Pershing 2 and Cruise missiles. The context for this proposal is as follows. Including French nuclear missiles and British and U.S. nuclear submarines available to NATO, there are roughly 3,150 intermediate range nuclear missiles in NATO. The Warsaw Pact, including the Soviet SS-20 nuclear warheads, has 2,240 intermediate range nuclear warheads. The Zero-Option would require the Soviets to remove the SS-20 warheads from the 2,240 number, while the NATO number of 3,150 would remain intact. The Reagan Administration fully expected the Soviets to reject this proposal. The purpose of the Zero-Option was to create the illusion of a desire for arms control on the part of the Reagan Administration, while at the same time, creating the justification for Pershing 2 and Tomahawk Cruise missile deployment in Europe.

The Distinction Between a Communist Nuclear Weapon and a Democratic Nuclear Weapon: Miss Curda seems to acknowledge that NATO does in fact possess a credible nuclear missile force. She says, "To be fair, NATO also has weapons pointed at the Soviet Union, but these were placed there by agreement between allies, not by dictatorial fiat." This implies that a nuclear weapon deployed by a democratic country is somehow less treacherous than one deployed by a communist country. One wonders if the people of Indochina took any comfort in the fact that they were being killed by the military of a democratic country. Miss Curda's view is a common one which confuses the internal freedom in the United States with our country's international behavior. According to Professors Noam Chomsky of M.I.T., and Edward S. Herman of UPenn in The Political Economy of Human Rights, since World War II the United States "Has borne a heavy responsibility for the spread of the plague of neofacism, state terrorism, torture and repression throughout large parts of the underdeveloped world."

"'Only' 23 percent of the budget is going to the Pentagon." This is an extremely callous statement in light of the 7 percent to 9 percent (above the rate of inflation) annual budget increases being offered to the Pentagon in the face of severe budget cutbacks in almost all civilian agencies. According to Frank Ackerman, the Defense Department share of the federal budget will rise from 24 percent in 1981, to 32 percent in 1984. In view of the unprecedented federal budget deficits projected for 1984 (deficits due almost exclusively to the Pentagon budget), the question might reasonably be asked: "Where will the money come from?"

Will the commies leaf us alone?

To the Editor:

I wish to commend those people who releaved the trees in front of the library. I have complained several times to the campus police about leaf assault and not once have they done anything about it. I have been struck purposefully several times this Fall by leaves and an occasional acorn. It is an outrage that in a community dedicated to higher education such assaults go on unchecked. It is about time that vigilantes took matters into their own hands and strung those leaves up.

After the third or fourth attack I noticed a peculiar fact. Those leaves were red. And if they weren't red they were yellow! Could the Commies get any more obvious? I couldn't have been more dumbfounded if it had hit me over the head. The Russkis not only control the weather, they control the leaves!

Some may call me paranoid. I only know what I know. And what I know is fact. If all of you would only open your eyes and see the infiltration of the Red Menace in our society, especially among the University population, (just look at all the liberal nuclear freezers around here!) you too would know how our open society has practically invited the evil forces of Communism and atheism to destroy us.

I hope the editors will print this letter even though I cannot sign it. I fear too much for my safety and sanity. But this view must be heard and heeded before we sink into the Commie quagmire not to mention the lethal leafpile.

Wallace returns with the help of black voters

By DR. MANNING MARABLE

Of all the opponents to blacks' civil rights in the 1960's, none equalled George C. Wallace in racial hatred and demogoguery. Wallace was the personification of bigotry and white supremacy. Yet on September 29, 1982, the symbol of racism won an election in the Alabama Democratic primary, and is likely to become governor of that state for an unprecedented fourth term. In a narrow race with a progressive Democrat, Lieutenant Governor George McMillan, Wallace succeeded in carrying a third of the state's black voters, and by that margin won the election.

In the campaign, the overwhelming majority of black elected officials supported McMillan. But Wallace was able to co-opt the majority of conservative rural black preachers into his cause, who in turn urged their congregations to "forget the past" and "to forgive Wallace" by casting their support for him. When Mrs. Coretta Scott King and other civil rights activists stumped the state for McMillan, black ministers denounced her as "an outside agitator." Incredibly, several majority-black counties — the sites of the bloodiest civil rights demonstrations — cast majorities for Wallace. The former governor even received 30 to 40 percent of the black vote in Montgomery, the state capital.

For outside civil rights observers, the renaissance of Wallace is nothing short of a political nightmare. Such interpretations fail to take into account Wallace's chameleon-like ability to reverse himself according to the prevailing political conditions. During the recent campaign, for instance, Wallace not only defended Mrs. King's right ot campaign against him, but also noted to the press that "one or both of Mrs. King's elderly parents, who live in Marion, Alabama, planned to vote for him."

During his first decade in Alabama politics, Wallace established himself on the left wing of the Democratic Party on the race question. A genuine populist on economic issues, Wallace urged his white constituents to consider the plight of blacks in the same terms as their own. After his election as circuit judge, Wallace subsequently announced his candidacy for governor in 1958. His principal opponent was a "stridently irreconcilable segregationist," John Patterson. When Patterson accepted the support of the Ku Klux Klan, Wallace issued a sharp denunciation of the racist group. Endorsed by labor, Jewish organizations and the state's NAACP chapter, Wallace lost the run-off election to Patterson by 64,902 votes. After his defeat, Wallace informed his supporters: "John Patterson outniggahed me. And boys, I'm not goin' to be outniggahed again."

Wallace's sordid career in national politics is quite familiar, and can be summarized briefly. In 1964, 1968, and 1972 he was a major factor in the presidential races. 9.9 million Americans voted for him in an independent presidential campaign in 1968, comprising 13.5 percent of the electorate.

In the Democrat primary elections of 1972, he carried a 42 percent plurality in Florida, and also won in Michigan and Maryland. It is entirely possible that had Wallace not been shot and paralyzed during this campaign that he woud have become the Democratic party's Vice Presidential candidate, perhaps with conservative Senator Henry Jackson at the top of the ticket. As it was, Wallace's focus returned to state politics. Retiring in 1979, after serving three terms as governor, most black and progressive white Southerners breathed a sigh of relief — until this fall.

If it is possible to say anything positive about the Wallace legacy in Alabama, one must admit that his administration carried out substantial liberal socio-economic reforms in the state. Compared to the "New South" governor of Georgia, Jimmy Carter, Wallace was far more progressive. In ten years, he established 14 new junior colleges, 15 trade schools, and greatly expanded the size of Alabama's social services to the poor.

But a more disturbing issue remains. While in office, Wallace inspired a reign of lynchings, murders, and police brutality against blacks. His epigones raped and blugeoned blacks with legal impunity, in the name of white supremacy. In a very real sense, Wallace is responsible for the bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church in Birmingham in 1963, which killed four little black girls. After all the human sufferings, Wallace stands before the black electorate, asking for the remission of his bloody crimes.

Women's needs are met

by YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

The Every Women's Center, located in Wilder Hall at the University of Massachusetts is a center committed to meet the needs of low-income women, working women, single parents, and older women. Lesbians and Third World Women are also represented.

The Every Women's Center is commited to serve the needs of this population, and in 1978 the Third World Women Task Force was formed as a response to the need for protection of Third World Women, especially after several racial incidents occurred in the area. The major one still remembred is that of Jill Dickonson, a Black women who was raped, then dragged on the back of a buggy.

The Third World Women's Advocacy committee of the Third World Women's task Force, is a "pressure group" that concerns active women working not only on advocacy work, national and international solidarity struggles, overseas and at home, but also works on the cure and prevention of the issues concerning Third World women on campus and in the community.

The Third World Women's Task Force also offers:

1. Educational work
Speakers, movies, panels, general information to the University and to the community about Third World issues.
2. Referral work
Service component meetings on a one to one basis to campus and community women.
3. Counseling
4. Legislature work

The philosophy of the Task force is to "Fight sexism and racism in the institution (UMass) and in the community," and to "Develop leadership in Third World women," said Panna Putnam of the Third World task force.

The Third World Women's Task Force also wishes to "Encourage participation in the Task Force, and to bring women speakers to show women that they are side by side with men in the fight for social struggles," Panna Putnam said.

Since its formation in 1978, the Major success for the Task Force has been the community pressured inquiry of the area's District Attorney that prompted the reopening of the Jill Dickonson case.

The Third World Women's Task Force is presently in the process of developing a scholarship for Third World Women in memory of Jill Dickonson.

The Task Force is also working on a handbook of resources for the Third World population in the Valley pointing out where they can turn in case of racial, or any other incidents.

The long-range plans for the Task Force are to recruit more Third World women, to assess the needs of the local Third World population, and to set up a network with other Third World organizations on campus and in the Pioneer Valley.

Thoughts on Homecoming

By GUS MARTINS
Collegian Staff

Once again we find ourselves in the midst of Black Homecoming week. It started last Sunday and with all the activities planned should run until Saturday.

Black Homecoming week is a time of symbolic importance, from a historical standpoint to the present. Remembering the all-important pursuit of black and other minority student's struggle should fill each and every one of us concerned with pride.

You can best believe there was a high amount of risk involved. Those people who did the actual overthrow doubtlessly realized that they were subject to arrest by the authorities, and what's even worse is that they put their lives on the line. Given the nature of their act in relation to the period of history we're talking about, it was a very courageous effort.

But that was the sign of the times, and as a result of the courage exemplified by that group, we now have professional people in key places looking out for our survival.

When we celebrate Black Homecoming week, part of our reason for celebrating should be in the spirit of all the courageous people that laid the groundwork for the many organizations that we now have.

Another very important consideration to keep in mind while attending one of the functions planned this week, is that we're a strong and resourceful people. Those who struggled before us realized this. We should too.

When the time comes to struggle again in order to keep something that is rightfully ours, don't sit back and watch it be taken away. Do what has been done in the past and keep in the tradition that our kin have set.

Our struggling will only help to make it easier for those of us who have not yet reached this plane.

Commentary

But this feeling should not be a short-lived one that only emerges once annually. It should be a feeling that is carried around daily, especially when things don't seem to be in your favor.

Because while there are obstacles still in the way, our main problem is maintaining what was fought for years ago, when virtually everything was in someone else's favor.

To think that in 1967, before what is now the New Africa was overtaken by concerned people, there was more foreign students on campus than black American students.

Nest of devotion

By ELAINE SENAY
Collegian Staff

The Nest is a poignant and bittersweet tale of devotion between an elderly man and a 13-year-old girl.

Don Alejandro, played by Hector Alterio, is a widower who spends his time conducting music to the forest around his home. But his eccentric existence is broken by the young Goyita, played by Ana Torrent. Director Jaime De Arminan uses the play Macbeth as a metaphor to describe the relationship between the two principal characters. Torrent is playing Lady Macbeth in her school's production and she becomes like her as the film progresses.

To Torrent's Lady Macbeth is Alterio's Macbeth. Torrent pushes Alterio to fulfill her wishes in order for him to remain friends with her. At one point in the film, Torrent forces Alterio to burn his late wife's personal effects to prove his loyalty to her.

Finally Torent demands that Alterio kill the local police sergant who stands in the way of Torrent's and Alterio's deepening relationship. Thus the film ends in a bittersweet tragedy that is not wholly negative. Torrent tells Alterio that she has learned about love and all its power from him. Some may find it hard not to condemn her actions and behavior, as the entire town did, but perhaps the audience can find consolation in the fact that Alterio's actions at the end of the film were not devoid of purpose.

The performances in The Nest are outstanding throughout. Hector Alterio as Don Alejandro is engagingly sincere in his infatuation with Goyita. Anna Torrent is also convincing as a girl already on the verge of womanhood. Her intensity on screen projects her will to the audience just as it does to Alterio.

But this will that Torrent has over Alterio is not distasteful to observe. De Arminan shows their friendship as being affectionate in terms of their loyalty to each other. Neither character uses the other; rather they derive vitality from their friendship. Alterio finds a companion to take him out of his lonely life. Torrent needs someone who will treat her as an equal not as a child who can be controlled by her parents.

The Nest is a moving portrayal of a close relationship that is able to withstand the disapproval of society. Director De Arminan is brillant in the way he depicts the friendship between Alterio and Torrent. The Nest is an unusual film that treats its subject with sincerity and a clarity that is sure to engage the audience.

Hector Alterio (above, with Ana Torrent) has a good time in Jaime de Arminan's The Nest.

CLASS REUNION

National Lampoon's Class Reunion isn't the sequel to Animal House that it is touted to be. In fact, it really isn't much of a film at all. THERE AREN'T EVEN FORMER SATURDAY NIGHT LIVE MEMBERS IN THE CAST!

The plot here is intended as being a parody of Night School; which ripped off Terror Train; which ripped off I Spit on Your Grave; which ripped off I'll Cut Off Your Face, which ripped off Friday The 13th parts I, II, and III, which of course were spawned by the original Halloween.

In other words, instead of being just another Slice and Dice it is satisfied as merely being a Bruise and Snooze.

The tired old killer on the loose cliche has become so treadworn that the only people who really enjoy them are Andy Gordon and Joe Spinell. However Class Reunion tries to jam its non-existent humor down the throats of its audience with the effectiveness of a one legged man in an ass kicking contest. Stephen Furst (Flounder in Animal House) passes for the film's star and he tries to get laughs by doing dirty things with his tongue and drawing attention to the anatomical parts of the female members of the cast. Funny? It's a scream!

This film is so devoid of honest humor that the only laughs in the theater were more like cruel snickers at the stupidity of the situations. People don't laugh with this bomb, they laugh at it.

In fact, there wasn't even any nudity to excite and motivate the Private Lessons/Porky's crowd.

Something like this was tried in a film called Student Bodies last summer, but unlike the media blitz that accompanied this turkey, it was only shown in Drive-Ins and Mall Theaters in the South. Student Bodies with its $37.50 budget, had more technical errors than a Porno film but it at least had a few jokes that one could find themself laughing at.

If you liked Modern Problems, and enjoy looking at traffic accidents, you'll like this turkey. Otherwise you would be better off taking Moonie Zappa's advice and stay at home and gag yourself with a spoon.

Even the French wouldn't like this bomb.

CONCRETE JUNGLE

Jill St. John made her triumphant return to motion pictures last month in the eagerly awaited, much heralded Concrete Jungle.

Jill gives her all in this epic as if she was told she was a last minute replacement for Meryl Streep in a remake of Mildred Pierce. Oddly enough however, it seems that her role as a power freak prison warden was originally intended for a man and she does her best to play it that way. Where Julie Andrew's male impersonation in Victor, Victoria resembled David Bowie, Jill, in her severe pants suits and ballsy walk, comes off more like Clint Eastwood.

Supporting Jill in this important "women-in-prison" drama are veteran actresses Barbara Luna (every grade B film of the 60's) and Nita Talbot (the Russian spy in Hogan's Heros). Luna plays Jake, the prisoner-trustee who runs the place. She brings off the lesbian relationship between her character and the St. John character with all the grace of a bomb in a orphanage. Talbot, as Miss Banks, the macho investigator, displays all of the skills expected of a woman with her acting experience. Her line "Something is going on around here" is especially effective. Especially when all of her witnesses start turning up dead in the shower room.

All in all, Concrete Jungle is successful in all of the ways it means to be: sex, violence, exploitation. Plus some unexpected surprises. There are some totally unexpected and effective scenes of kindness, decency and humanity shown by the female characters to each other during situations of extreme strife. There is also an unusually effective performance by a young actress named Tracy Breggman in the key role of the young innocent cast suddenly into the snake pit. If Jill is the brains of this picture, Tracy is the welcome little soul.

Although I can't consciously recommend Concrete Jungle to the serious filmgoer, it isn't half the insult to the viewer that Class Reunion was.

Anyway, the French will love it.

Women's tennis season ends: look to future

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

The season is completed for the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team and about the best thing you could say for them would be that they worked hard all season and have a young team for the future.

The netwomen concluded their season this past weekend at Yale University placing ninth out of thirteen teams at the New England Championships, with eight and one half points.

"We had very few easy matches to play," said Coach John Beal. "I'm happy that the team maintained its place in the top ten, but I was disappointed that we couldn't have done a little better."

The tournament was divided up into three tournaments, or flights, for singles and three for doubles. A win in any round of a flight was worth two points. A separate consolation tournament was set up for those who lost in the first round. They played one set with the first to win eight games by two points the winner. One half point was given for winning a match in the consolation.

In Flight A, first singles player, Elizabeth Sullivan won her first round match by a score of 6-1, 6-1. She was eliminated in the second round, 6-4, 6-0, earning two points for UMass.

Also in Flight A, Ariel Fowler the number two singles player played what Beal called her best match of the season in winning 6-0, 6-2. She lost in the second round, 6-2, 6-2. She also earned two points for the Minutewomen.

In Flight B, third singles player, Chris Frazier won her first round match in three sets, 4-6, 7-6, 6-3. She lost a tough match in the second round by a score of 6-0, 2-6, 6-3, and earned another two points for UMass.

"Those were two of the best matches she has played all fall," said Beal.

Fourth singles player, Patricia Sullivan lost her first round match in Flight B, 6-0, 6-2. She won her first round match in the consolation tournament by a score of 8-3.

She won her second round match 8-6, and won the final 8-3, to earn one and a half points for the netwomen. Coach Beal thought it was the best she has played in her career at the university so far.

In the Flight C grouping, fifth singles player, Diana Biagioli lost in the first round 6-0, 7-5. She had to play an extra match in the consolation tournament but still made it to the semifinals. She won her first match 9-8 (7-4 in the tiebreaker) her second match 8-3, but lost her semifinal match by a score of 8-5 and played what Beal called an excellent match.

The other Flight C player was sixth singles player, Laura Kaufmann who lost in the first round 6-4, 6-4, and lost in the consolation tournament by a score of 8-1.

"I'm pleased with the way all the singles players played, Patricia, Chris, Diana and Ariel all played as well as I've ever seen them play," said Beal.

"I was disappointed with the way that the doubles teams played. We could have won all our first round matches, but the other teams played with more intensity," said Beal.

In the Flight A doubles tournament, Elizabeth Sullivan and Chris Frazier lost in the first round by a score of 4-6, 6-2, 7-5, and lost in the consolation round 8-5.

In the Flight B tournament, Ariel Fowler and Laura Kaufmann lost 6-2, 6-3 in the first round and Diana Biagoli lost in straight sets in the first round by a score of 6-4, 7-6, and lost in the consolation, 8-1.

The Minutewomen finish a long season with a record of 3-7, a fifth place finish in the state championships and a ninth place finish at the New Englands. They will now look forward to a good spring season with much of the same team.

Major League owners say bye-bye to Bowie

CHICAGO (AP) — Bowie Kuhn, in his 14th year as commissioner of baseball, was fired Monday in a vote of owners that ended 11 months of wrangling over his fate.

The commissioner was fired in a vote by the National League owners, despite gaining a majority. The vote was 7-5 in favor of Kuhn's re-election, but he needed three quarters of the votes, or nine. The American League vote was 11-3 in favor of retaining Kuhn.

Kuhn's second seven-year term as commissioner expires Aug. 13, 1983, when a new commissioner must be elected. None has been selected yet.

Although the dissenting votes in the National League were not announced, they reportedly were cast by owners Nelson Doubleday of the New York Mets, August A. Busch of the St. Louis Cardinals, Ted Turner of the Atlanta Braves, John McMullen of the Houston Astros and William Williams of the Cincinnati Reds.

The announcement, made by American League President Lee MacPhail and National League President Chub Feeney, followed a joint session of the owners that lasted only 27 minutes.

"We regret to say the commissioner failed re-election," MacPhail said.

Feeney said the NL vote was taken on a proposed compromise that would have kept Kuhn in office but would have added a business officer known as COOBA, for "Chief Operating Officer of Business Affairs."

However, five NL owners refused to accept the proposal, apparently because the business officer would have reported to the commissioner, and that was enough to block Kuhn's chances to staying in office.

Kuhn, whose job came under heavy fire as early as last December, refused all attempts to give the business officer equal or greater power than the commissioner.

Kuhn was elected to replace the fired William Eckert in February 1969. Kuhn served a six-month interim term before he was elected to a regular seven-year term on Aug 13, 1969. If Kuhn serves out his second term, he will have been commissioner for 14½ years.

"Now the process for the election of a new commissioner is in the hands of the (major league) executive council," Feeney said.

The executive council, which governs baseball on a daily basis, is comprised of eight owners, from Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Kansas City, San Francisco, Milwaukee, San Diego, Boston and Baltimore.

Opposition to Kuhn first surfaced at last December's baseball meetings, when it was discovered that nine owners had signed a letter asking Kuhn to resign. The letter was never sent, but its discovery unearthed the dissatisfaction with Kuhn.

More snags stall NFL talks

NEW YORK (AP) — Angry player representatives accused management yesterday of moving backward in its wage-scale negotiations in the 43-day-old National Football League strike.

The accusation came after the players met with union leadership for a briefing on negotiations. Their anger centered on a provision involving signing bonuses in management's latest contract offer.

Jim Miller, a spokesman for the owners' negotiators, called it "a small snag typical of labor negotiations." But that didn't seem to placate the player reps.

"I don't think we'll have a settlement now until January," said Marvin Powell, of the New York Jets.

Hockey fan wants collegiate hockey at UMass

By GEORGE MARTINS
Collegian Staff

I'm disgusted. This goes beyond the realms of understanding. The University of Massachusetts, the state university in the state that produces the best hockey players in the United States, does not have a varsity hockey team.

Commentary

This is disgraceful. Here are some facts to show why I am unable to comprehend this situation.

Massachusetts produces the finest collegiate hockey players in the United States. The best players in the eastern schools such as B.U., B.C., U.N.H., Northeastern and Lowell come from Massachusetts.

The National Hockey League, which at one time was 99 percent Canadian, is now filled with players from the United States many of whom are from this state.

Needham's Robbie Ftorek was captain of the Quebec Nordiques last year. The Washington Capitals chances of making the playoffs rest on the performances of Rob Carpenter and Rod Landway both of whom are from Massachusetts, and the Bruins have one of the finest defenses in the N.H.L. thanks largely to Walpole's Mike Milbury and Scituate's Mike O'Connell.

Other N.H.L. players that were born and bred in Massachusetts include Mark Fidler of the Minnesota North Stars, Chris Nilan of the Montreal Canadiens, and Bob Miller of the New Jersey Devils.

Why is there no UMass hockey team?

Ponder this question. What brings a state university national recognition? First of all there are the scientists who win Nobel prizes and next there are, you guessed it, nationally ranked men's athletic programs. I'm not saying that this is necessarily just, it's simply the way that it is. With the exception of lacrosse, UMass doesn't have any nationally ranked men's athletic programs.

Basketball is our only major winter-early spring sport. Another sport at this time period would, at the least, enliven interest in sports around campus.

The administration should want a hockey team because with adequate recruiting of the incredible crop of talent that we have in Massachusetts, within three years UMass could have a NCAA division one powerhouse.

The youth hockey programs in the Greater Boston area improve with each year and with the Bruins having a probable championship team in the next few years, interest in the sport will near heights not reached since Bobby Orr brought his magic to Beantown.

I think it is time for hockey again at UMass. I hope the administration will feel the same way.

Potential Danger signals of Irritated Nerves:
- Headaches, dizziness, blurred vision
- Neck pain, tight muscles, spasms
- Shoulder pain, pain down arms, numbness in hands
- Pain between shoulders, difficult breathing, abdominal pains
- Lower back pain, hip pain, pain down leg

Amherst Chiropractic Center is offering spinal check-ups and postural analysis for early detection of back problems.
TIME magazine says 75 million Americans have backache, and with each passing year, this astronomical fugure grows by 7,000,000.
Backache has become a catastrophic issue with the insurance companies and with our national economy. It is one of the top claims for disability. In addition to this, arthritis and rheumatic complaints affect 77 percent of our adult population, and every year millions sustain severe neck injuries from automobile collisions.
With the use of a few simple painless tests we will be able to determine the condition of the spine. Early detection of back problems is the best prevention for future back ailments.
The spinal screening will be offered without charge or obligation, at the

Amherst Chiropractic Center
190 University Dr., Amherst, MA

Doctors will be available for answering questions on treatment and prevention of back problems.

Minutemen back on track

Seniors get to play "D"

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Correspondent

The injuries and losses had finally reached the brink. It was time for a change. There was the need for a change.

So, as close to 10,000 people seated themselves in Alumni Stadium to watch UMass battle against UConn, the new Massachusetts defense was revealed.

Starting at Noseguard today, senior Tom Murray..."

Yep, Tom Murray the same Tom Murray who's more accustomed to running over defensive linemen than being one of them.

"It's a whole different world," Murray would say grinning later in the locker room. "The coaches thought it was the right move and I just want to do whatever it takes to win."

Murray would make his presence felt. Two solo tackles, one assisted tackle, one quarterback sack, and hit that resulted in the Huskies second fumble.

"Starting at defensive tackle today, senior Jerry Gordon..."

An offensive guard by trade, Gordon is one accustomed to the other side of the line. On this day though, Gordon joined a defensive corp that came away with nine Huskie turnovers.

"Murray and Gordon did an excellent job on defense after three years on offense," head Coach Bob Pickett would say. "We (the coaches) made the decision but they had to be behind us."

"Starting at cornerback today, sophomore Chris Wood..."

Here was the clincher. The man who played behind All-American Dwayne Lopes all season. One does not see may starts playing behind Dwayne Lpes. But Lopes would hurt a knee in practice Thursday and the call went out to Wood.

"I had the confidence but I was still nervous," Wood reflected. Nervous or not, the sophomore would shine in his big chance. Three solo tackles, three assisted tackles, one fumble caused and two interceptions.

Garry Pearson waves goodbye to University of Connecticut safety Matt Latham on his way to another long run in the Minutemen's 30-14 win Saturday at Alumni Stadium.

"He," noted defensive coach Jim Reid, "played a fantastic game. You know, he practices and practices and had to play behind Lopes all year, and he never said a word about not playing a lot. Then he gets his shot and plays a game like that. Great Game.

It should also be known that Dean Pecevich and Rich Jenkins were ready to step in at linebacker. Pecevich and Jenkins a quarterback and runningback respectively, practiced all week on defense.

"Do you know what Murray, Gordon, Pecevich, and Jenkins meant to this team today?" Reid asked. "They gave us confidence and pride in being seniors. They know how to play the game of football — tough, hardnosed, spirited, and enthusiastic. These guys just gave us a great game."

Murray had a response to that.

"With some of the younger guys on the team, the string of losses can really do a number emotionally. We felt a responsibility to them. The coaches asked us and we just did the job."

Later there would be Wilbur Jackson and Tony Pasquale moving from offensive tackle to defensive tackle. The beat went on and the job got done.

When it was over and UConn had left the field with only 14 points and a loss to reflect on, Pickett finished saying that things would stay the same next week. He spotted Murray leaving the locker room.

"Hey Tom, How's it goin'?" he asked.

"Fine," Murray replied.

"Nice job today," Pickett smiled.

The new look boys had made him a genius.

Pearson runs over UConn

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

"Juice, Juice, Juice," chanted Grady Fuller as he strolled by Garry Pearson's locker as Pearson held court with reporters from the Connecticut media after his 215 yard, four touchdown performance against the University of Connecticut Saturday.

What they all wanted to know, of course, was why Pearson happened to save the three best performances of his career for their beloved Huskies.

"Is it because you get up more for UConn because your from Connecticut?" they asked.

"I can't say yes to that because I get up as much as I can for every game," replied Pearson.

They persisted. "Come on Garry," they said. "It has nothing to do with playing UConn and being from Connecticut," they asked.

"Well," said Pearson. "I don't like to go home after losing to UConn."

And Pearson should be able to do as much talking as he likes when he finally journeys home to Connecticut after he juked and spun his way to another UConn killing performance.

So, without much consideration to anyone else, Pearson is this weeks Collegian Player-of-the-Game.

To illustrate just how awesome Pearson's performance was in the Minutemen's 30-14 victory over the Huskies, consider this statistic.

Pearson also caught the only completed pass of the day for six yards, giving Pearson 221 total yards on the day. The Minutemen gained 265 total yards on the game as a team. A little math will tell you that Pearson accounted for 83 percent of the UMass offense and also scored 24 of the Minutemen's 30 points.

Hopefully Pearson saved a little magic for next week with the Boston College Eagles coming to Amherst next Saturday.

With the powerful Eagles coming to Alumni Stadium after dropping a 52-17 decision to the Nittany Lions of Penn State an offensive explosion could be in the works. If the Minutemen want to be part of that explosion, Pearson will have to be at his very best next week.

The NBA season preview: The Atlantic Division

BRIAN C. MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

Once again, the NBA season is upon us and this year doesn't seem to be any different than last year. Four teams are the cream of the crop and they all strengthened themselves either via trades or the draft.

Probably the strongest division is the Atlantic Division which contain two of the four biggies, Boston and Philadelphia. Here's a preview of the Atlantic Division and what to expect from it.

Predicted Order of Finish — Boston, Philadelphia, New Jersey, New York, Washington.

Boston — Unquestionably has the best front line in the league. Anchored in the pivot by Robert Parish, the bookends are Larry Bird and Cedric Maxwell, and the bench carries Kevin McHale, and first round draft choice Darren Tillis of Cleveland State.

The guards will be the most important part of the team. A healthy Tiny Archibald is one of the best point guards in the league. The Celts picked up Quinn Buckner from Milwaukee for Dave Cowens to shape up their guard spots. Danny Ainge has the potential to be a great NBA guard, and Gerry Henderson has shown signs of brilliance.

Bill Fitch has said this year there'll be no such thing as a point guard or a shooting guard, so Tiny and Quinn Buckner will see playing time together. The key for the Celts this season is for another guard to take the pressure off of Tiny. Another sixty win season for sure, but will Philly win more?

Philadelphia — A starting lineup of Moses Malone, Bobby Jones, Julius Erving, Mo Cheeks and Andrew Toney is devastating. The big quesiton mark is the bench. Clint Richardson is the third guard, and he reportedly has played well. So well in fact, that Lionel Hollins got the boot to San Diego.

The big question mark is the Sixers bench strength for big men. Mark McNamara, the first rounder from California, has to come through. Philly's biggest surprise is Marc Iavaroni. He's a bruiser who will give them added muscle. Mike Banton, Steve Mix, Darryl Dawkins, Caldwell Jones, and Lionel Hollins are gone. As a result, four rookies are on this year's team.

New Jersey — Larry Brown has assembled a team that could be the surprise of the league. A super backcourt has Phil Ford and Otis Birdsong starting, with Sleepy Floyd and Foots Walker on the bench. The big men have the potential, but can they fulfill it?

Darryl Dawkins is in a new atmosphere, plus he has a teaching coach who will show double D some of the fundamentals he missed in college. For seven years he's been labeled a "wait till next year" but there aren't many left. The forwards are strong. Rookie-of-the-Year Buck Williams and his college roommate Albert King are bonafide pros. Off the bench come Len Elmore, Mike Gminski, Mike O'Koren, and draft choice Eddie Phillips from Alabama. Keep an eye on the Meadowlands, they'll be fun.

AP Laserphoto

Hopefully Tiny can stay healthy and drive the Celtics all the way to the NBA championship this year.

New York — They are a couple of players away from getting back into the thick of things. If Paul Westphal is healthy, he's of all-star quality. Trent Trucker, the first rounder from Minnesota is a good one, and the surprise of their camp was Edmund Sherod, out of the Continental Basketball League.

Washington — It's too bad they got stuck in this division. Last year they were the surprise team of the league, and this year they'll hold their own. Excellent forwards in Greg Ballard, and Rick Mahorn, plus Jeff Ruland impressed everyone last year. Frank Johnson will be the point guard, which resulted in Kevin Porter getting his walking papers.

Dukakis says I look forward to 2nd chance

Compiled from reports from the Associated Press and the Collegian staff.

BOSTON — Former Governor Michael S. Dukakis succeeded in his bid to return to Beacon Hill, easily defeating Repblican gubernatorial candidate John W. Sears yesterday.

"It's a rare opportunity to have a second chance," Dukakis, 49, of Brookline, said last night. Dukakis, who served as Massachusetts Governor from 1975 to 1979 but lost the Democratic primary to Gov. Edward J. King in 1978, defeated King in September's primary election setting up yesterday's contest with Sears.

Dukakis, according to returns available about 1 a.m., soundly defeated Sears, taking 63 percent of the vote to 34 for Sears. Conservative independent Frank Rich received three percent of the ballots cast.

Sears, who defeated John R. Lakian and Andrew Card in the Republican primary, conceded last night's election less than one hour after the state's polls closed at 8 p.m.

"Congratulations, Mike Dukakis. I wish you well," Sears said in his concession. "You have a victory."

Dukakis said the economy and unemployment would be the primary concerns of his administration during the next four years.

"I don't think there's any question that the economy and jobs for our people has to be our top priority," Dukakis said last night.

Along with Dukakis, John Kerry, 39, of Newton, a lawyer, small business owner and former Boston television commentator, was elected lieutenant governor.

Throughout their campaign, Dukakis and Kerry have stressed the issue of corruption in state government and cited Dukakis' previous gubernatorial record as proof he could do the job. The pair have also stressed their commitment to higher education and increased financial aid for students.

Sears, 52, of Beacon Hill, served in the state House of Representatives from 1965 to 1967 and was a Boston City Councilor from 1979 to 1981. He ran unsuccessfully for Mayor of Boston in 1967 and for Secretary of State in 1968.

In their campaign, Sears and running mate Leon J. Lombardi supported the tenets of the "New Federalism" promoted by President Ronald Reagan, urging the state to provide many social services provided by the federal government. The pair had proposed increasing the state sales tax to raise money for student financial aid.

Rich, 56, of Saugus, espoused conservative viewpoints in his independ candidacy and came out against increased aid to students and many social issues and programs.

In a turn-out town officials called disappointing, 67 percent of the registered voters in Amherst yesterday cast ballots for various candidacies and expressed their opinions on six referenda questions.

In the Franklin-Hampshire County senatorial race, 10-year Democratic incumbent, John W. Olver, a former chemistry professor at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst held his seat against UMass/Amherst graduate and Republican candidate Jim Tripp. Olver carried Amherst with 6,807 votes compared to Tripp's 1,298.

UMass graduate and Northampton lawyer, W. Michael Ryan, candidate for District Attorney, defeated Republican incumbent Thomas Simons in the race for Franklin-Hampshire County District Attorney. Ryan won 5,468 votes against Simon's 2,369 in Amherst.

Running unopposed for U.S. Representative, Republican Silvio O. Conte, who had both the Democratic and Republican nominations, was elected with 5,779 Amherst votes. One hundred and thirty seven votes were Cast opposing Conte.

A question to amend the state constitution to provide private schools with public aid was rejected by voters, with 7,389 voting against the proposition and 1,436 in favor.

Local voters opposed a constitutional amendment to reinstate the death penalty. Six thousand three hundred and four ballots were cast opposing the referendum which asked if capital punishment, for crimes to be determined in the future, should be reinstated in Massachusetts.

Voters approved a referendum question calling for legislative action as well as a state wide referendum question in order to site a nuclear power plant or low-level radioactive waste dump.

Answering in support of the bottle bill, Question 4 on the ballot, Amherst voters cast ballots in overwhelming favor of retaining the bottle bill showing a margin of victory comparable to state-wide results. In the largest victory of the six questions, Question 4 secured 7,657 'yes' votes and only 1,287 'no' votes.

The nuclear freeze question won overwhelming voter support in Amherst grabbing 7,331 'yes' votes and 1,165 'no' votes. the secretary of the Commonwealth is now required to inform the President the people of Massachusetts support a mutually verifiable nuclear weapons freeze between the Soviet Union and the United States.

Amherst voters delivered a resounding 'yes' to referendum Question six which proposed that federal funds currently used for defense spending be re-channel led into transportation, education and other social services.

Referendum issues draw UMass students to vote

By TRISIA NYLANDER
Collegian Correspondent

Many students who turned out on a warm sunny day yesterday to vote at the Bangs Community Center said it was the referendum issues that brought them there.

Of the students interviewed most said they were voting for the first time this year.

"I'm exercising my basic rights," said Pia Giannasi, 18, a political science major. She said the vote she cast yesterday was her first.

"I'm supporting question three, because I feel we should have a say in nuclear waste dump sites," Giannasi said.

Mike Cassaboom, 19, a communications major, said he feels voting is necessary to "exercise your right as an American, so you can argue who is in office. You don't have a right to (argue) if you don't vote."

Cassaboom said he had no particular candidate or issue in mind when he went to the polls yesterday.

Out of 12 people interviewed by the Collegian, 11 said they were voting particularly to state their views on the referendum questions.

"I'm here voting today more for the questions than the politicians," said Jeff Moeffer, 18, a computer and engineering major.

"I support the nuclear freeze and the bottle bill and am against the death penalty," said Cinthia Smith, 26, an education major. Smith said although she is not "ever enthusiastic" about a particular candidate she feels "you can't be apathetic, you still have to vote."

"I'm here because of bombs and bottles," said Bob Kentor, 34, a comparative literature graduate student. "I'm against them," he said.

Of the students who came out to vote on referendum questions, most said the nuclear freeze referendum, question three, was the most important.

"I am here supporting Kennedy and the nuclear freeze movement," said Kara Manlon, 19, an animal science major.

"I think there are a lot of good questions," said Skia Hurst, 22, a former UMass student, who described herself as a welfare mother. "I am supporting question six, jobs for peace."

Hurst also said as a mother she would vote for question one which would allow federal education aid to go to private schools because it might benefit her child.

"I didn't vote before in the presidential elections," said Kyle Cooper, 20, a design major. "I wish I had." Kyle said he was voting for Dukakis because of King's endorsement.

Duffey to add new student to vice chancellor's search

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph Duffey said yesterday he may appoint a new student representative to the search committee for the vice chancellor for University relations and development, while retaining the current student representative.

Because Kenneth Moore, the current student representative on the search, graduated last year, the office of the student attorney general at UMass issued a statement last week saying that Moore should be replaced by another student.

"It is proper that this seat be filled by an active undergraduate student, not an alumni, the statement said. "The position that Mr. Moore now holds should be occupied by a new student apointee."

Moore was appointed to the committee last February by former Chancellor Henry Koffler. According to Moore, when Koffler made the appointment he was aware that the search would last past Moore's graduation from UMass.

Student Government Association President Jim Murphy, who said last week that Moore should remain on the search committee, expressed enthusiasm over Duffey's statement.

"I think that is great," Murphy said. "That will increase our representation on the committee."

Murphy said Moore's graduation placed the search committee in an unusual situation.

"This is an exceptional situation, and it calls for an exceptional resolution," Murphy said.

Harry Allan, chairman of the search, said the new student will have a vote on the committee if he or she is appointed by the chancellor before the committee begins interviewing the finalists in the search.

In the next week or so, the committee plans to meet to choose those candidates who will be interviewed during the "formal visit stage of the search," Allan said.

"If the student comes in at the beginning of the formal visit round then a vote would be quite appropriate," he said.

The vice chancellor for University Relations and Development, a newly created position, will be responsible for coordinating relations between UMass and external communities.

Allan said he hopes the committee will finish the search by the end of November.

Pope John Paul II blesses a receptive Spanish crowd during an open-air mass in Madrid.

Pope takes stance against Spanish Socialist platform

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Pope John Paul II shook hands with Spain's Socialist premierdesignate yesterday but seven hours later took the offensive against his campaign pledges to liberalize the laws against divorce, contraception and abortion.

The Roman Catholic pontiff said his meeting with Felipe Gonzalez, whose Socialist Party won last week's general election by a landslide, should "remove any doubts — if there ever were any — about my respect for the country's freely elected leaders."

He told Gonzalez and other political and military leaders the church respects "the temporal order of things" but must speak out on matters "that have to do with God and influence the conscience of his children, in their private and public lives."

And John Paul spoke out later with one of his strongest statements on what his church calls "family issues" at a twilight, open-air "Mass for the Christian Family." Police estimated 1.5 million people jammed the Paseo de la Castellana, one of Madrid's main arteries.

Denouncing abortion, his voice rising with emotion, he asked: "What sense is there to speak about the dignity of man and his fundamental rights if you don't protect an innocent or if you allow doctors and public or private (medical) services to destroy defenseless human lives?"

He attacked artificial birth control as "a falsification of the interior truth of conjugal love." And he said of divorce, "According to God's plan, marriage is a community of love indissoluble and lasting for life."

The platform on which the Socialists won a majority in the Spanish parliament last Thursday includes proposals to establish family planning centers in all public health facilities, to make divorce easier and to permit abortion where the life of the mother is in danger. It also wants to reduce government subsidies to parochial schools.

The Catholic church refrained from active participation in the election campaign but made clear its strong disapproval of these platform planks.

Iranian guards set up 'Ayatollah Khomeini Square'

BAALBEK, Lebanon (AP) — Revolutionary guards from Iran, intent on exporting Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's Islamic fundamentalism, have set up a headquarters, hospital and sports center in this eastern Lebanese town.

Slipping into Lebanon during the confusion caused by Israel's June 6 invasion, an estimated 300 Iranians have renamed Baalbek's main plaza "Ayatollah Khomeini Square," hung Iran's red, white and green flags in the streets and painted walls with the same "Death to America" slogans seen in Iran.

"We are here for propaganda reasons and to guide the people to export Iran's Islamic revolution," said a bearded revolutionary in his early 20s who refused to give his name.

Baalbek, whose ancient Roman ruins attracted thousands of foreign tourists in more peaceful decades, is a town of about 25,000 people. An estimated 95 percent are Shiite Moslems, the same Islamic sect as Khomeini and most of his countrymen.

The Shiites reject most of the oral traditions, law and ceremony of the Sunni Moslems, who comprise about 85 percent of the world's Islamic population. Most live in Iran where the beliefs are intensified by strong feelings of Iranian nationalism.

At the height of the Israeli invasion last summer, Iran dispatched a contingent of the paramilitary revolutionary guards to Syria, Lebanon's eastern neighbor, according to western intelligence reports.

Some of the guardsmen now in Baalbek indirectly confirmed this, but they said their mission now was to spread the word of the Khomeini regime in Lebanon where many of the country's 950,000 Shiites regard the Iranian patriarch as their spiritual leader.

"We have no goal other than the Islamization of the place. As the imam (Khomeini) says, we have come here with the aim of serving the deprived Palestinians and the deprived Lebanese," said one guardsman in his mid-20s who said he was from Tehran, the Iranian capital.

Several Baalbek residents, declining to be named for fear of reprisals, said they are frightened by the fanaticism the Iranians are arousing among some Shiites.

"My friends and I stay at home and avoid going out on the streets for fear of being sworn at or assaulted by someone who thinks we are not complying with Islamic traditions," one Shiite woman said.

"They have just gone too far," said another Shiite woman. "Now we are afraid. We do not even feel easy walking with our husbands in case someone mistakes them for boyfriends."

In Khomeini's Iran, the sexes are strictly segregated, except for close relatives.

Widow files $80 M suit in privacy case

SPRINGFIELD — A widow whose late husband fought in court for his right to die has filed an $80 million right-to-privacy lawsuit that was scheduled to go to trial today in Hampden County Superior Court.

Earle Spring died on April 6, 1980, at age 78 as the state Supreme Court was debating whether his family had the right to stop dialysis treatments that had kept him alive since February 1978.

While Spring was still attached to life-support equipment, the court affirmed Judge Sanford Keedy's ruling that the tests could be stopped, drawing national attention to the case.

Spring's widow, Blanche, of Montague, later filed a privacy lawsuit against the Holyoke nursing home where Spring spent his last days and against some of its administrators and nurses who said that Spring told them he wanted to live.

Mrs. Spring's suit alleges that the defendants invaded Spring's right to privacy by releasing to reporters confidential information about his financial and medical condition.

Mrs. Spring also charges that those actions caused her emotional distress and violated state law on patients' right to privacy and the state Consumer Protection Act.

School committeeman resigns in Fall River

FALL RIVER — School Committeeman Allen L. Jarabek, who faces sentencing in two days after being convicted in federal court this month of conspiracy and extortion charges, resigned on Tuesday.

"The lengthy and demanding litigation has exhausted my wife, my children and myself," said Jarabek, 48. "To continue in public office would be an additional embarrassment to my loved ones ..."

Jarabek's letter of resignation was delivered to the city clerk Tuesday morning.

Jarabek, first elected to the school committee in 1975, and Thomas E. Alecrim, former assistant school superintendent and currently suspended as director of high school vocational education, were convicted Oct. 13 in U.S. District Court in Boston of shaking down Boston contractor Richard A. Miara.

Miara, whose firm, New England Fence Co., installed security fence at Fall River's new high school in 1979-80, testified that with the knowledge of federal law enforcement officials, he paid out a total of $4,000 to Jarabek and Alecrim.

Earle C. Cooley, Jarabek's lawyer, said he would file an appeal of the jury verdict Thursday, the day Judge W. Arthur Garrity set for sentencing.

Honeywell cuts 800 employees in Mass.

WALTHAM — Honeywell Inc., in its second workforce reduction this year, said Tuesday that it will cut 800 jobs in Massachusetts in the next 30 days, shrinking the number of its 7,300 Bay State employees by 11 percent.

Dr. James J. Renier, Honeywell's recently appointed vice chairman and president of the Information Systems group of the computer firm, said the reduction was necessary to improve the company's competitive position.

"Our success in maintaining a strong position in the industry will depend on our ability to keep operating costs in line with revenues," Renier said.

"The order rates for systems are down from our projections, and, as a result, this difficult decison (to lay off workers) had to be made," he said.

US military advisers may aid Lebanese

WASHINGTON — U.S. training teams are expected to be sent to Lebanon soon to begin working with the Lebanese army so it can take over security responsibilities and allow a multinational peacekeeping force to withdraw, Pentagon officials said yesterday.

The officials, who asked not to be identified, said the U.S. plan contemplates 50 to 60 U.S. military advisers serving in Lebanon on a temporary basis. Not all the teams will necessarily be in the country at the same time, officials said.

This is one element of an aid package due to be discussed with Lebanese President Amin Gemayel in Beirut.

The U.S. proposal is being presented by Assistant Defense Secretary Francis J. West on behalf of President Reagan, officials said.

King appoints four to Board of Regents

BOSTON — Outgoing Gov. Edward J. King has made four appointments to the state Board of Regents of Higher Education, replacing three members whose terms expired and one who resigned, it was announced yesterday.

Named to five-year terms on the 15-member public higher education governing board were:

James M. Howell, senior vice president of the First National Bank of Boston; Edward T. Sullivan of Belmont, business manager of the Service Employees International Union, Local 254; Nicholas Boraski of Pittsfield, vice president and general manager at General Electric Co.; Gerard F. Doherty of Boston's Charlestown section, a lawyer and developer.

The board said in a news release that Arnold Friedman had resigned in September, citing increased professional responsibilities. Friedman is editor of Springfield's daily morning newspaper, the Springfield Union.

Building Operations "trashes" Spectrum

By JOHN A. BROBST
Collegian Staff

Two-thirds of the new issues of Spectrum, the literary and fine arts magazine at the University of Massachusetts, were disposed of two weeks ago by Campus Center Building Operations workers.

About 2000 new issues, along with about 2000 past issues, were being temporarily stored since early May in a dressing room behind the Campus Center Auditorium. They were taken to the Amherst Landfill two weeks ago because Building Operations officials did not know who they belonged to.

"I didn't know who they belonged to," said Building Operations Manager Dudley Bridges. "All I saw was a mess, and I had to clean it up."

The issues were to be stored there for only a short time, Bridges said, until the 25th Anniversary issue of Spectrum could find a permanent place for storage.

"They were supposed to be taken out in a few days, and that was in May," Bridges said. "They didn't ask about them until a couple of days ago."

"We don't store things," Bridges said.

"I see three different acts of negligence on the part of Building Operations," said Spectrum managing editor Charles Francis Carroll."

"Building Operations should have given us a written contract for the space, the supposed vandalism was not reported to Spectrum members, and the removal of our property was performed without our knowing it."

"When we first saw Dudley (Bridges), he said the magazines had been there for two years. That's ridiculous," Carroll said.

Carroll said the issues were worth about $10,000, and replacement costs would be even more than that.

"But we feel the magazine is worth much more than that," Carroll said. "There were literally thousands of work hours from volunteer student workers in those magazines."

Carroll said he has informed various groups on campus of the disposal, including Student Activities Office, the Student Attorney General, and Legal Services Organization seeking advice for the proper action.

"One of the options, I imagine, would be a civil suit," Carroll said.

Carroll said that although there are a few Spectrum copies still around campus, the office only has 40 issues left.

Vandals had entered the temporary storage room over the summer, ripped open the boxes, and damaged them with spray paint and a fire extinguisher, according to Bill Smith of Building Operations.

"There were about 25 boxes of them, only about 6 boxes were undamaged," Smith said. "I feel bad for them, but the understanding was that they were only going to be there for a few weeks. They stayed there all summer."

"We had to move them out and back into the dressing room many times during the summer. We had a lot of things happening in the Auditorium over the summer," Smith said.

"After the vandalism, they were all wet and they smelled," Smith said.

Bridges said he may send a truck to the Amherst Landfill to retrieve as many issues as possible.

Adultery laws, forced marriages cause sexism

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Unfair adultery laws and forced marriages are ways society has controlled the sexuality of women throughout history, said a well-known anthropologist yesterday during a lecture at Smith College.

Verena Stolcke, a social anthropologist from the Universidad Autonoma de Barcelona lectured to about 50 people on "Why Women? Considerations on the Subordination of Women. Examples from Cuba and Brazil."

"Adultery has always been an exclusively feminine crime. Men are never punished for adultery," Stolcke said.

In the 19th century, husbands in Cuba were allowed to shoot their wives if they committed adultery, she said.

"Adultery continued in Spainish legislation until three years ago," she said.

Women's sexuality is controlled not only by adultery laws but also by forcing women to marry the "right" men, as it was in Cuba. Fathers "controlled that women reproduced with socially and racially right men." In Cuba, that meant that men had to be rich and white, she said.

Because of forced marriages, elopement came into existence. "Elopement is an institutional way to break parental opposition to a marriage," Stolcke said.

"Couples who tried to dump over the values (of society) are appealing to love. Love is blind. Love doesn't see wealth. It disregards social conditions," she said.

Motherhood in nineteenth century thought was ideologically considered the natural function of women. Because of that reproductive function, women are considered the "main element" of society, she said.

"And if women really are the main element of society, it is all the more important (for the men of the dominant class) to control us," she said.

"Women's roles are related to the racial, structural nature of society"

"The social definition of women's roles as controlled by men, is clearly related to the racial nature and the structural nature of the society," she said. "Women subordination derives from the inferior functions that women fulfill." Women are in society considered second rate."

Stolcke said women fulfill "inferior functions" because they have the menial jobs in society. "The control of sexuality of women guarantees the perpetuation of class superiority through time."

"The use of women's sex to guarantee class superiority makes a difference only in a class society. It makes no difference in a society of equals," Stolcke said.

"Women are subordinated on account of a class society," she said.

In her study of nineteenth century Cuba and classist society she said, "it became clear that the subordination of women, particularly of women in the dominant class, was not very different from the role of women in Victorian England."

Crime statistics show increase in traffic citations

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Correspondent

Although violent crimes in Amherst have decreased, September traffic citations have almost doubled in number from last year, according to crime statistics for September.

Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia said that Part One offenses, which include rape, murder, larceny, burglary, robbery, aggravated assault, and motor vehicle theft, have decreased in number from 96 in September, 1981 to 92 in September, 1982. Burglary and larceny led the list of Part One crimes with 26 burglaries and 48 incidents of larceny.

Maia attributed the decrease in violent crime in Amherst to new laws increasing people's right to protect their homes, and mandatory sentences for sexual offenses and other violent crimes against a person.

The figures, released yesterday by the Amherst Police Department, said that of the 868 motor vehicle citations given in September, 313 were warnings, 530 were complaints, and 25 resulted in arrest. In September of 1981, Amherst police issued 58 warnings and 407 complaints, and made 20 arrests, for a total of 485 traffic citations.

The increase in traffic related incidents, Maia said, is due to the increased vigilance of the Amherst Police for these violations, and also to the Speed and Alcohol Patrol. Maia said he has asked officers for "24-hour enforcement" of these laws.

Motor vehicle accidents have decreased in number compared with last year at this time, the police chief said. While September of last year saw 55 accidents with 18 cases of personal injury, this September had only 38 accidents with 16 injuries.

Radio program covers French affairs

By MICHAEL S. KNIGHT
Collegian Correspondent

People interested in French affairs both local and abroad, French music or the language itself, are invited to tune into "Tout en Francais," on WFCR located at 88.5 on the FMdial.

Aired Sundays at 6 P.M., "Tout en Francais" or its English translation, "All in French," is as the title suggests, conducted mainly in that language.

Its purpose is to meet the listening interests of Franco-American families in Massachusetts, a state with more French speaking people than any other state in the nation, with the exception of Louisiana.

WFCR, situated on the UMass campus, is part of the National Public Radio system. Contributions from listeners and various grants fund the operation of the station.

The sponsorship of "Tout en Francais" comes mainly from the 5 college French departments and has aired on WFCR for 10 years.

A grant has recently been given by the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy (in Whitmore, room 237) to aid in the betterment of "Tout en Francais," said Evelyn Woestelandt, the producer of the show who presently teaches French at the University.

Woesterlandt said the grant, which amounted to $6,147, is the first to be given in Massachusetts to fund the interviewing of Franco-American people within the state.

Woestelandt said these Franco-Americans, residing mainly in the Pioneer Valley, Leominster, North Adams and Lowell, provide the show with many interesting and helpful interviews.

Woestelandt said the program has hosted first generation French Canadians who came down from Quebec to find work in the New England textile mills during the first half of the century. In juxtaposition, she said, interviews have been conducted with the second and third generations of the French-Canadians examining how they presently fare on the job scene.

A different topic is aired each Sunday of the month in regular order: The first Sunday is devoted to French music; the second brings news from France; the third Sunday consists of Franco-American and Canadian interviews; the fourth has interviews with local Francophiles, and the last Sunday is devoted to local news and happenings.

So, if you're looking to improve your abilities with the French language and are interested in becoming more adept on French-related affairs, ecoutez "Tout en Francais."

Legal Assistant Interns Wanted

Two PVTA bus stops moved for safety reasons

By DAVE LINTON
Collegian Staff

Students will have to walk further south this winter to wait for buses at stops near the Graduate Research Towers and Hasbrouck Laboratory because of sidewalk improvements along North Pleasant Street.

The bus stop at the Graduate Research Towers was moved because it was located too close to an air intake vent outside the building, according to William A. Lambert, a University of Massachusetts landscape architect. As a result, all the diesel fumes from the buses were being sucked into the building, he said.

"Why mechanical engineers put intake vents on the ground I'll never know," Lambert said.

The new stop at the Graduate Research Tower is located about 60 feet south of the PVTA shelter, he said. Lambert said whether the old shelter will be moved or whether a new shelter will be constructed at Hasbrouck is up to the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA).

Allan E. Byam, transit operations manager for UMass, said the PVTA will be notified when the construction is completed.

Lambert said the bus stop at Hasbrouck Laboratory was moved to comply with federal law and for the safety of students.

"The stop at Hasbrouck was located dead center in the middle of a crosswalk," Lambert said.

He said the area was being improved to make it accessible to the handicapped in accordance with Section 503 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, which went into effect five years ago.

The new stop at Hasbrouck was moved about 100 feet south to where it was originally in 1973. It was moved after complaints were received from the faculty and the building coordinator that students waiting for the bus on the walk outside the building were disrupting classes, Lambert said.

The work, contracted by Warner Brothers of Sunderland, is part of on-going repairs and improvements on campus that are dependent on state funding, Lambert said.

A proposal to improve the sidewalk and bus stop at the Fine Arts Center is awaiting approval for funds, he said.

Workshop film depicts struggle of Women's Emergency Brigade

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

"With Babies and Banners," a film depicting the involvement of the Women's Emergency Brigade during the 1937 General Motors Strike in Flint, Michigan was shown as the second in a series of eight lunch time workshops on women and work.

The Women's Emergency Brigade was formed by the wives of strikers and women factory workers who volunteered their services during the strike. "We made up our minds we were going to be as important as the men," said a member of the Brigade.

In December 1936, workers in the Fischer One and Fischer Two plants of General Motors staged a sit down strike to protest working conditions and to establish a union. "We were fighting for dignity...we were not just fighting for money," said a Brigade member. Another woman added, "The UAW (United Auto Workers Association) was our struggle for survival."

When the women first volunteered to work for the strike, the union tried to keep them in the kitchen. In the past the unions had been the domain of men. "Women couldn't be too masculine, too feminine or too intellectual, or men resented them," said a Brigade organizer.

Strikers were criticized by friends, neighbors and relatives as well as accused of being communist. At one point during the strike a riot broke out. A wife of one of the strikers appealed to the women of Flint Michigan to stand by their husbands, brothers and sons and to break through the police barriers. "Police didn't want to be accused of shooting into the backs of unarmed women," she said. That evening when the riot had ended, the Women's Emergency Brigade was officially formed.

In February 1937, strikers attempted to shut down plant four — the Chevrolet plant where motors were made to be distributed nation-wide — to hamper production as a means of forcing General Motors to settle the strike. Women strung themselves across the plant's gates to keep police out until union members arrived.

The union was able to successfully hold off production and on February 11, General Motors gave in and signed the union's agreement. The UAW was formed.

Forty years later, at the anniversary of the General Motor strike, women who had been members of the Brigade requested to speak before the assembly. A member of the Women's Emergency Brigade said the women were a symbol of women changing in society. The strike gave men a perspective of women other than that of housewife.

UMassPIRG celebrates battle for bottle bill victory

By JOHN F. HUDSON
Collegian Staff

Cheers, hugs, laughter and an occasional tear filled a room on the 10th floor of the Campus Center last night as UMassPIRG celebrated their decisive victory in the battle of the bottle bill.

Since 1972, MassPIRG has fought for the passage of the bill and, according to Lisa DeCarolis, chairman of UMassPIRG, it has been well worth it.

"The bottle-bill victory showed that by working together, people can win, regardless of the bigger and more powerful forces that they may be pitted against," DeCarolis said.

"Right now, I feel extreme satisfaction," she said. "It's a real sense of gladness to be able to beat out the bigger powers which were up against us. The fact that it was a grassroots effort makes it mean much more."

Louise Gogel, UMassPIRG's Treasurer, echoed the same sentiment. "Since it was a real grassroots movement, it was that much more important."

The bill itself had been in existence since 1972. Since that time it had been killed in committee once, defeated on the ballot in 1976, been the victim of a rare parliamentary maneuver in 1978 and finally vetoed by Governor King twice during his term. The second King veto was overidden in 1981 by the State Legislature. Opponents placed the bill once again on the ballot in hopes of overturning the law.

Voters demonstrated strong support for the anti-litter bill by voting to support it yesterday.

UMassPIRG members said they think the last minute efforts by the Voter Education Committee to defeat the question were underhanded.

"The Voter Education Committee pulled some underhanded stunts at the last minute," DeCarolis said. "It was particularly unfair when they said that a vote against the Bottle Bill was a vote for an industry funded anti-litter program."

The fight for the bill took more than 11 years and as DeCarolis said, "The organization solely concentrated on this issue this year. All other issues were dropped in favor of pushing for the (bottle) bill."

Now that the battle for the anti-litter bill is over and successful, the question is, where to from here?

"We're still working on hazardous waste, consumer interests and our recycling group," Gogel said.

DeCarolis reitterated this position.

"Environmental issues are a prime concern as far as I can see. The grassroot power of UMassPIRG is the most important," she said.

After the champagne bottles are empty, the celebration is over and UMassPIRG gets back to other issues it is currently promoting, their hard-fought victory on the bottle bill will still represent a major one for any and all student-oriented grassroots organizations.

Voters approve death penalty, nuclear freeze

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts residents yesterday voted in favor of the bottle bill, capital punishment, a nuclear weapons freeze and controls on radioactive waste, but they rejected state aid to private schools.

With 136 of 2,192 precincts counted, 57 percent of the voters favored requiring deposits on beer and soft drink containers, while 43 percent opposed it.

The nuclear weapons freeze question captured the widest support. A total of 72 percent voted in favor of it, while 28 percent were opposed.

A constitutional amendment restoring the death penalty was favored by 61 percent of the voters, while 39 percent were against it.

A measure requiring voter approval for any low-level radioactive waste dumps in the state was approved by 67 percent, while 33 percent were opposed.

About 38 percent of the ballots were cast in favor of allowing state aid to private schools, while 62 percent were opposed.

The law requiring nickel and dime deposits on beer and soda containers was passed by the legislature and voter approval in the referendum means that it will go into effect Jan. 17.

The law was approved over Gov. Edward J. King's veto and is designed to feduce litter. Opponents, who mounted the petition drive that gave voters a chance to repeal it, argued that it would lead to higher prices, lost jobs and sanitary problems. Supporters said jobs would actually increase.

The death penalty was before the voters in the form of a constitutional amendment that was only a first step toward restoring capital punishment.

The state Supreme Court has repeatedly overturned death penalty laws on the ground they violated state constitutional prohibitions against cruel and unusual punishment. The U.S. Supreme Court has upheld the death penalty.

The proposed amendment would change the state constitution to authorize capital punishment but would leave to the Legislature the specifics of how the death penalty would be imposed.

Another proposed constitutional amendment on the ballot was designed to ease the state's restrictions against aid to private schools, especially parochial schools. The amendment would allow state law to be governed by federal constitutional limitations, which permit limited aid to churchrun schools.

Massachusetts was one of nine states and several cities giving voters a say on whether to ask President Reagan to negotiate with the Soviet Union to put a freeze on nuclear weapons testing, deployment and production.

The other nuclear question would give the state's voters the final say over whether any new nuclear plants could be built in the state or whether Massachusetts could become the site of a dump for low-level radioactive waste.

Incumbent Sen. Jonn W. Olver, D-Amherst, beat out his opponent Jim Tripp in last night's election.

Olver wins senate re-election bid; attributes victory to student turnout

By RICHARD NANGLE
and PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, last night won re-election to his seat in the Massachusetts Legislature by a landslide over Republican challenger Jim Tripp. (Early returns at press time showed Olver holding an aproximately 3-1 lead over Tripp.)

Olver, a 14-year veteran of the State House, is a former professor of chemistry at the University of Massachusetts. Tripp, a 1970 UMass graduate, was making his first attempt for public election.

In explaining his overwhelming victory, Olver praised student voter turnout, which was spurred last month by the largest voter registration drive ever held at UMass.

"They clearly did vote today, and that is significant,". Olver said of his student constituents. However, he warned a similar effort is now needed at colleges statewide for their voice to be heard. Otherwise, "it (yesterday's student vote) does not have any statewide effect whatsoever."
tion results were announced.

Tripp yesterday said he cast his vote in his hometown of Williamsburg and then returned to his travel agency in Northampton to finish work he said he neglected there during his campaign and was too important to be left until the day after the elections.

"The other guy for whatever reason did not run a campagin," Olver said of Tripp, hypothesizing he may have run the campaign to achieve "name recognition" for future political endeavors. However, if Tripp loses by a 2-1 or 3-1 margin, as it appeared he had, Olver said the result would have a net negative effect for Tripp in the long run.

"I cannot give any reason whatsoever for running a campaign that way," Olver said.

Olver, endorsed by the Massachusetts Teachers Association and the UMass Undergraduate Student Senate, has in his current term filed legislation to aid higher education that includes a bill to provide student scholarships through a tax on cigarettes and a bill to establish a telecommunications network to connect both colleges and business in Massachusetts.

Following his tenure at UMass, Olver was elected to the Massachusetts House of Representataives in 1968, and the Massachusetts Senate in 1972.

Tripp entered the travel business after graduation and later began his own agency in Northampton.

He said the primary issue motivating him to run was his perception of corruption in the State House and its leadership.

Tripp's stated goal was to maintain the current level of eight Republican senators in the legislature, which is the minimum number required to request and obtain a recorded vote on any motion. He said such a vote is needed to counter the power held in the General Court by the Democratic majority and its leadership.

Ryan beats incumbent Simons in local district attorney race

By RICHARD NANGLE
and ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Political newcomer W. Michael Ryan last night upset incumbent Thomas Simons to win the District Attorney's post for Hampshire and Franklin Counties.

Ryan, the Democratic candidate, easily defeated his Republican opponent, with 26,066 votes, or 59 percent, to 17,950, 41 percent, with much of the vote counted last night. In Amherst and Northampton, Ryan received 11,829 votes to Simon's 5,688, a two-to-one margin.

A Northampton attorney who graduated from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and the Western New England Law School, Ryan said he did about as well as he expected.

"We're about what we figured," Ryan said last night, adding he expected to capture 60 percent of the vote in Hampshire County and 40 percent in Franklin, for a combined total of 55 percent.

Ryan said he was looking toward a smooth transition into the office in January and said he would not make any immediate massive changes.

"I'm not going to have any mass firing or anything like that," Ryan said.

Ryan said he felt his victory could not be attributed to any one issue but cited current problems in the district attorney's office and a large staff turnover as well as the support he received from the area legal community.

Simons, a 40-year-old lawyer and District Attorney for the past four years, served four terms in the state Legislature before his election as District Attorney. Simons, a Montague resident, came under heavy attack from area attorneys critical of his record prosecuting cases, particularly violent crimes such as rape. Throughout the campaign, Simons defended his record as District Attorney and maintained that he was best for the job.

When contacted at his campaign headquarters last night, Simons refused comment on the outcome, although the crowd at his Northampton headquarters was quiet and gloomy.

Ryan made an issue of the prosecution of violent crimes, especially rape, during his campaign, pledging to personally prosecute especially violent crimes himself.

Ryan celebrated his victory at the area Democratic party held at the Hotel Northampton, greeting supporters throughout the evening. At one point, when asked by a well-wisher whether he shaved off his former moustache in order to run for office, Ryan responded, "I shaved it off Sunday and announced (my candidacy) Monday morning."

"I want to thank everyone here for making a winner out of me," Ryan told his supporters last night.

Northampton Mayor David Musante, who was present at the Democratic victory party last night, said he was glad Ryan had won and predicted he would have a successful tenure as District Attorney.

"I think Mike Ryan will return the office to the height it (once) was," Musante said.

Kennedy breezes past Shamie; says 'clear signal' sent to D.C.

Compiled from Associated Press and Collegian staff reports

Senator Edward M. Kennedy easily breezed past Republican challenger Ray Shamie for re-election to the United States Senate in yesterday's election.

In early returns last night, Kennedy led Shamie by a wide margin, capturing 65 percent of the vote to 35 for Shamie. Kennedy, who is rumored to possibly be gearing up for a Presidential bid in 1984 had sharply criticized President Ronald Reagan's policies during the campaign and said last night he felt the election had sent a clear signal to the lawmakers.

"I think now this election calls for an alteration in our economic policy. There are an awful lot of people that are hurting," Kennedy said last night.

"President Reagan's economic program was ill advised and ill conceived and I took that issue to the people of Massachusetts and they responded," Kennedy said, adding that he felt the state's voters also responded to his support for the nuclear freeze movement.

Kennedy, who has served in the Senate for the past two decades, is the ranking Democrat on the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee. The brother of late President John F. Kennedy and late Attorney General and presidential hopeful Robert F. Kennedy, Kennedy graduated from Harvard University and later attended the University of Virginia Law School. Kennedy himself made a bid for the Democratic Presidential nomination in 1980, but ultimately lost to President Jimmy Carter.

Throughout the campaign, Kennedy stressed his opposition to Reagan's economic and social policies, including tax policies and a proposed constitutional amendment for a balanced budget. Kennedy has also been a leader of the nuclear weapons freeze movement.

Shamie, the owner and founder of Metal Bellows Corp. in Sharon, has supported Reagan's economic policies and has come out in favor of republican proposals for tuition tax credits for families with students in private schools, the tax cut plan and the amendment for a balanced budget.

Frank wins re-election; Heckler: I wasn't promised a rose garden

By MARY BETH HEBERT
Collegian Staff

In one of this state's most hotly contested Congressional races, Barney Frank defeated Margaret Heckler by a 2 to 1 margin.

The Frank-Heckler race was one of the six campaigns in the country that pitted an incumbent Democrat against an incumbent Republican. Initially, Frank was at a decided disadvantage for this House seat when redistricting caused him to keep only two communities in his original district while his opponent retained over 80 percent of her constituency.

National interest in this election grew as many people saw the contest as the Frank-styled liberalism versus the Heckler-supported Reaganomics. Frank stated in Promoting Zionist objectives

To the Editor:

It comes as no surprise that Zionist organizations would resort to every means possible to try to discredit the Organization of Arab Students (OAS) and thus get rid of an entity that exposes the true nature of the state of Israel. And it comes as no surprise as well that they would 'infiltrate' the press to achieve such objectives; for it is through the press and the media that they have successfully through the generations misinformed the public and stereotyped Arabs.

However, a line must be drawn here. The "ourside press" is corporate; and therefore newsmaking and reporting is based on a policy which brings in more circulation and thus more profits without regard to the real facts and issues. But, the "inside press," that of schools, like our Collegian, is not corporate, and therefore should represent true journalism.

Unfortunately, our Collegian is resembling more and more the "outside press," and those with the true stories, those victims are being stepped over. One such victim has been the OAS.

Since the beginning of the semester, a barrage of articles and editorials with unquestionable bias attempted to put down the OAS. To some people this wasn't satisfactory, so they resorted to shameful methods such as taking down OAS posters that announced activities. Some, in an OAS teach-in, dared to stick their feet up in the air when asked to stand in mourning for the dead in Lebanon. These incidents fail to make a story in the eyes of our press; as did the thousands who died in Lebanon.

The saddest thing is that this is continuing; as resently exemplified by a Collegian front page story on Wednesday, Oct. 28, about vandalized Zionist posters and with hidden, shady meanings tried to blame it on the OAS. The reporter did not even attempt to contact OAS members for an opinion.

The Zionist community is dying to get an issue with which they could come down on the OAS and since the OAS is not making any mistakes they have decided to make it for them. And what a better way to do this than to use the Collegian and through sloppy journalists who can not even spell semitism correctly. The objective being that a singling out of the OAS would make them appear as a stimuli of undecency and this put them on the offensive which will give all those pen-ready Zionists something to write about for the whole semester.

Our paper must not be allowed to be used a s a tool and we urge the Collegian to get back on the course of true journalism and to contact all involved in stories that they write.

We urge the Collegian to give an ear to all those who have genuine stories to tell. And in the end we demand an apology from the Collegian for what wrong they have done us.

Seeds of oppression real

To the Editor:

The seeds for a new harvest of oppression are now being sown. On Monday, October 25, Bernadette Devlin McAliskey came to speak at the University of Massachusetts. She spoke of the liberation struggle in Northern Ireland, linking the struggle of its people to those of people across the world. The struggles of people in South Africa, in Central America, and here in the United States are fought against the same forces, broadly labeled the forces of exploitative economic imperialism; the struggles are fought for the same ideals, for civil rights, for economic and political justice, for freedom.

This much, I believe, is true. She spoke of ideals which are the right of every person on the Earth. That many are denied these rights so that a privileged few may accumulate unjust amounts of wealth and power is undeniable. When she finished her speech, the crowd rose to give her a standing ovation. I did not rise. I could not applaud. For Bernadette Devlin McAliskey does not believe in those ideals. Her support of the armed resistance, call it terrorism or guerrilla warfare, in Northern Ireland is based upon an abandonment of every principle of human dignity and justice.

Ms. McAliskey made it very clear; the resistance cannot be judged on moral bases. For her, and the republican revolutionaries, the continued bombings and shootings are necessary tactics. The moral value of these tactics cannot be determined; the only measure of their value is expediency. These openly morally bankrupt measures can never lay the foundation for a just society. How can Ms. McAliskey hope to attain the ideals of equality, freedom, and justice while abandoning those very ideals in the struggle to achieve them? The struggle for justice cannot be fought by unjust means.

If the Irish republicans of Northern Ireland continue their policies of public bombings, murder, and their authoritarian disciplinary measures such as kneecapping, Northern Ireland will not be free. The British may leave, but the oppression will continue. Instead, there will be new masters and new slaves. If the Republicans truly believe in justice, if they truly believe in freedom, they must employ these ideals. Justice must be learned through practice. To abandon morality in the struggle against the oppressors, revolutionaries abandon the means of achieving a truly free society.

"Bushwa" unfair to co-op

To the Editor:

A gross misrepresentation of food cooperatives has recently been made in the comic "Bushwa". A reference was made to a food cooperative that requires a prospective member to fill out a lengthy application and to be put on a waiting list in order to become a member.

No food cooperative would operate in such a manner. The Yellow Sun Food Cooperative in Amherst (which I assume the comic was trying to parody) is open to all. One can become a member and receive a 20 percent discount simply by buying a share in the cooperative, $10 annually (refundable), attending an orientation meeting, then working in the cooperative 2 hours per month thereafter.

Food cooperatives are a creative alternative to the traditional supermarket system. Wholesome foods are available at a discount. Each member is part owner of the cooperative, and has the opportunity to participate in and make changes within this community-centered organization. It is unfortunate that the message in this comic strip may have misinformed the UMass community as to what food-cooperatives are all about.

Profile recipient thanks paper

To the Editor:

I am writing a letter of appreciation to Mr. Dan Leberfeld and Miss Katie Watters for the interview and pictures that they took of me in the Campus Center for the Collegian. There are some things on Reaganomics that need more of an explanation than that which appeared in the interview. That subject could take more space than one could possible expect to have in the paper with the other items. I would like to mention also that science and engineering students stop to view these pictures and discuss them with me more than any other group.

El Salvador: still no peace

Bill Thomas

Remember El Salvador? It didn't go away just because media attention hasn't been focused upon it in the past few months. The country where Amnesty International's recently released 1982 report says "regular security and military units are responsible for widespread torture, mutilations and killing of noncombatant civilians from all section's of society," is making headlines again.

Although the period following the March, 1982 elections was one of relative calm, current reports coming from El Salvador indicate that any hopes of a lasting peace in that country were nothing more than pipe dreams. In an October sixth Valley Advocate article, a spokesperson for the Christian Legal Aid Organization is quoted as saying killings of peasants decreased in the period prior to the July 28th certification of human rights improvement. Immediately after continued aid was approved, the murder of civilians decreased sharply.

That the Reagan administration's certification of human rights improvement is a mockery of any legitimate attempt to bring pressure to bear upon the government military forces is evidenced by the kidnappings of 16 leftist and labor leaders by the U.S. backed Salvadoran military between October 15th and 21st.

U.S. Ambassador to El Salvador Deane S. Hinton's remarks concerning the abductions are further testimony to the fact that the US has no more control over the actions of the Salvadoran military than that of a rodeo clown over a raging bull:

"Now there is the nice question (regarding) who gave the orders (to carry out the abductions)," Hinton said, "but it did not come from the Cabinet level as far as I can judge."

We really shouldn't be too surprised about these developments however, when we consider that the right wing leader of the National Assembly, Roberto D'Aubuisson, was classified as a "pathological killer" by the Reagan administration right up until the period previous to his election to office in the U.S. supported March 28th elections.

Prior to his election as the leader of the National Assembly, D'Aubuisson's actions included, among other terrorist acts, the threatening of the American charge d'affaires on Salvadoran television, claiming credit for a shooting attack on the U.S. embassy in San Salvador and the suspected assassination of Salvadoran Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero on March 24, 1980. Among the evidence linking D'Aubuisson to Romero's murder were documents found on D'Aubuisson when he was arrested for an abortive coup attempt in May, 1980. The Boston Globe obtained copies of these documents and in a March 17, 1982 article, reported that "among the papers (seized from D'Aubuisson) is the outline for an 'Operation Pina' which U.S. and Salvadoran sources identified as the plan for the murder of Archbishop Romero." This is the man that the U.S. government is now supporting as head of the "Democratic" government of El Salvador! And of course no one has even been tried for Romero's assassination.

The leftist forces have been very successful lately, claiming to have inflicted 417 casualties on government troops and taken 100 prisoners in the first two weeks of October. On October 26th the rebels proposed meetings for peace negotiations. In refusing to negotiate, the Reagan administrtation has used the pretext of requiring the guerrillas to lay down their arms before consenting to negotiations. This is a stipulation that the leftists obviously cannot agree to when the Salvadoran governments idea of a good faith gesture is the abduction of the leftists' political leaders. In spite of the kidnappings between October 15th and 21st, the guerrillas released 60 captured government soldier on October 26th. Who do you think really wants peace?

Attack of the flying gumbies

Q
Directed by Lawrence Cohen
Starring Michael Moriarity
By TOM FAISON
Collegian Staff

One of the biggest surprises in New York's fall film season this year is a daring new motion picture by Larry Cohen. Cohen, the genius behind the sinper epic God Told Me To and the monster baby It's Alive traumas, has come up with a clever idea for his new film Q. Not only has it become a favorite amongst general audiences, but a hit with the high brow critics as well. What's it about?

Imagine a gigantic flying snake living in the pointed dome of New York's Chrysler Building, chomping the heads off of hapless window washers, carrying away gorgeous nude sunbathers and laying eggs all over the west side. Sound great? It sure is. Not only is this flying gumby absolutely terrifying in the clever way it is presented on the screen, but there is a powerhouse cast of megastars and a storyline that just doesn't quit.

Topping off this all-star cast is Michael Moriarity (everyone's favorite bald Shakespearian actor). Moriarity plays Benjy, a down in the mouth jazz pianist and bank robber who, for no apparent reason, takes refuge in the spires of the Chrysler Building. There he encounters a lot of bones, a big nest and a large hungry bird.

Bengy, always ready to seize upon a situation, uses the bird to dispatch some unwanted friends and provide himself with some much needed revenue. Namely, to hold the entire city for ransom until he gets $1 million in cash, a pardon for his crimes and his picture in the paper; all in return for directions to the bird's lair. (Just how a 60' bird is able to fly around undetected and nest in one of the city's tallest buildings is given only a cursory explanation.)

Wisely enough, the Police Commisioner (cleverly played by Broadway actor Malachi McCort) gives his approval and sends the detectives in charge of the case (David Carradine and Richard Roundtree) to finish the ungainly pest with the aid of an unenthusiastic SWAT Team and a few sub-machine guns. (Rumour has it that the reason why they didn't choose Army Hellicopters with 50 cal. machine guns mounted on the sides was because the special effects budget couldn't afford it).

Nevertheless, the final confrontation between man and beast is a good one. Not just for the special effects (which are basically pretty silly), but for the way the film forces you to use your imagination to fill in the rough spots.

To be honest, the way that Cohen simulated the bird's flight was to give the audience a bird's eye view of the city via a helicopter, while some guy goes whoooosh into a microphone. To present a scene where policemen are picked off a roof and thrown into the streets below, Cohen must have projected some aerial footage on a screen, dropped a gumby in front of it, filmed the two together, and dubbed in a man screaming. This way, if it doesn't scare you it's bound to make you laugh. Cohen, in his infinite wisdom, doesn't particularly care either way.

Also along for the ride is ex-movie star Candy Clark (American Graffitti, The Man Who Fell To Earth) in a goggle-eyed bit as Moriarity's college-educated liberal girl friend; as well as a Joe Spinell look-alike as a mad, medical student who brings the creature back to life from its long slumber in a Mexican Crypt. And of course, Cohen, again uses the people of New York as a creaming, hysterical mass told to react to a creature that they never see. (Unfortunately, in one scene, the people are screaming and looking to the left when the creature appears off to the right. But who's perfect?)

Although Q hasn't come to The Pionéer Valley yet, I'm sure it'll make it's appearance before the end of the season. Anyway, as the ads proclaim: "It's name is Quetzlcoatl, but you'll only be able to say Q before it tears your head off." Or in other words, if you spend money to see a Godzilla movie, you may be putting 13 Larry Cohen's out of work.

Mount Holyoke College's Department of Theatre Arts will present Ondine by Jean Giraudoux which combines farce, stark drama and great passion in a love story of several worlds. A water-sprite renounces her immortality to marry a knight on the condition that if he is unfaithful, he will have to die. Performances are November 5-7 and 11-14 at 8 p.m.

The No Theatre of Northampton will be performing Whose Afraid of Virginia Woolfe? by Edward Albee at Thornes Market, Northampton. The curtain goes up at 8 p.m. on November 4, 5, 6, 12 and 13. Tickets are $4.

Madeline Defrees, James Tate
Poetry Reading
Thursday, October 27
Memorial Hall

By MYLES GORDON
Collegian Correspondent

Poets Madeline Defrees and James Tate, both on the faculty of the UMass English department, read from their works Thursday night, in Memorial Hall to a packed house.

Much of Defrees' poetry touches on her experiences as a nun, and conflicts which led her to leave the convent. Her final poem, an elegy to poet Richard Hugo, was stunning in its imagery and the overall feelings it evoked.

Tate's poetry spoke of the pathos and absurdity of life with his surrealistic, stream-of-consciousness imagery. This poem jumped from hilarity to sorrow and back again.

This Thursday, November 4 at 7:30 p.m., poet Joseph Langland will give a reading at the Jones Library.

Franke gets knocked out

BELOW THE BELT
(MILLENNILM)
Franke & The Knockouts

By PETER BENTTINEN
Collegian Correspondent

This is another one of those faceless bands that come up trying to cash in on someone else's success. I mean, records cost enough without forcing us to buy a regurgitation of Foreigner IV. I'm not saying these guys have no talent, I wouldn't be that mean. However, if it's originality your looking for, better forget it.

This bunch of pretenders to the throne of the most influential rock and roll group of the eighties have got to be kidding.

Now, they are all pretty good musicians, and can actually sing in tune. All said and done, there are a few decent songs on the album.

"Never Had It Better" rolls side one into an up-beat mode as the opening tune. But, I thought the copyright on "Double Vision" was good for at least seven years. Maybe I'm wrong, but perhaps these two groups are best of friends, both using the same formula to make gold records. The possibilities are frightening. Could you see our beautiful country being taken over by clones of average musicians? I personally think that's scary.

Well, if I was about to market a piece of vinyl with the intent of making a million dollars I might do it something similar. It's a well-produced effort, very professionally put together, with the production reminiscent of the Stones. It actually is a pretty good attempt to bring new meaning to the words, capable, but usual music. Like I said earlier, if the sound of Foreigner or REO Speedwagon turns you on, buy this one; you won't be disappointed.

There are seven musicians on board to thrill we multitudes of the record buying public on Below the Belt. There really is a Franke, he does the singing, and not too badly. The lead guitarist's name is Billy Elworthy. He's qualified to fill his role, and is especially noticeable on "Just What I Want" on side one. The others in the group all play with appropriate gusto. Only the problem seems to be they are copying every line and riff rock and roll has ever invented.

Poll shows voters wary of Reaganomics, most Americans willing to 'stay the course'

NEW YORK (AP) — Two years after Ronald Reagan's election to the presidency, his economic programs appear to have driven many of his Democratic supporters back to their own party, an Associated Press-NBC News voter poll said yesterday.

The survey said voters were about evenly split on whether Reaganomics is helping the country. Nearly half those polled seemed willing, in the words of the Republican slogan, to "stay the course." But the poll also found a return to the Democratic party among groups like blue-collar' workers who voted heavily for Reagan two years ago.

The poll included responses from more than 10,000 voters after they cast their ballots at 400 polling places around the country.

The poll results, which were weighted to more accurately reflect actual turnout around the country, said respondents evenly split on whether Reagan's economic program has helped or hurt the country.

And asked if they felt Reagan's economic program was a success or failure, only 6 percent said success and 37 percent called it a failure; 48 percent, however, said they believe the program needs more time to succeed.

Asked for whom they voted for in their congressional races, 52 percent said they voted for a Democrat and 42 percent said they voted for a Republican.

Among those who said Reagan's economic program has hurt the country, 8 of 10 said they voted for a Democrat. Among those who said either Reaganomics is a success or needs more time, two-thirds said they voted for a Republican House candidate.

Yesterday's voting, according to the poll, appeared to be a return to more traditional voting patterns from the 1980 elections when many people who characterized themselves as Democrats voted for Reagan and other Republican candidates.

For example, 17 percent of those who identified themselves as Democrats Tuesday said they had voted for Reagan in 1980. But fewer than half of those voters said they had voted for a Republican House candidate on Tuesday.

Overall, 40 percent of those polled Tuesday called themselves Democrats, 30 percent Republicans and 30 percent independent.

CHIROPRACTORS
Wrist and Hand Problems
If you feel a weakness, numbness, or pain in your hand and wrist, the problem may be carpal tunnel syndrome.
This is caused by pressure on a nerve as it goes through a tunnel in the wrist. The tunnel is made up of several small bones and ligaments that form a groove. The nerve that passes through the groove is vulnerable to injury, especially when the wrist is bent back forcefully. This can happen when you fall with your hands outstretched to brace yourself - or when you hit a swinging door with the wrist bent backwards.
Sometimes it results from the kind of physical exertion that's normal in your daily activities. A carpenter, for example, can develop the syndrome from heavy hammering. So can a mechanic who pulls forcefully on a wrench. So can a student who writes for extended periods of time with the wrist bent backward.
Whatever the cause, treatment is available to relieve the pressure and return your wrist and hands to their normal condition--free of weakness and pain.

Incumbents sweep to re-election; GOP to retain control of Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate incumbents swept to re-election in 10 states last night and led in 13 more as America's voters elected the new Congress that will decide whether to stay President Reagan's course — or stay his hand — for the next two years.

Eight of the early victors were Democrats, two Republicans — but the GOP was leading for more than enough Senate seats to renew control of that chamber in the 98th Congress.

There were Senate elections in 33 states. In contests settled quickly, Democratic Senators James Sasser of Tennessee, Robert Byrd of West Virginia, Paul Sarbanes of Maryland, Edward Zorinsky of Nebraska, John C. Stennis of Mississippi, Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York and Lawton Chiles of Florida won re-election as expected. So did Republican Senators Richard Lugar of Indiana and John Heinz of Pennsylvania.

In the battle for the House of Representatives, where both parties expected Democratic gains, Democrats had won 50 seats by mid-evening, and led for 100 more. Republican candidates had captured 16 seats, led for 66. There were no returns in the other House contests.

In the hotly-contested California Senate race, San Diego Mayor Pete Wilson was leading by a wide margin over Gov. Jerry Brown in early returns. The television networks predicted Wilson would win.

A partial count in Connecticut was close between GOP Sen. Lowell Weicker and Rep. Toby Moffett. CBS projected a Weicker victory.

Democratic senators also led for re-election in Texas, Ohio, Michigan, North Dakota and Maine. Republican incumbents were ahead in Utah, Delaware, Vermont and New Mexico.

Former Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace led in his bid for a comeback fourth term, with 62 percent of the vote against Republican Mayor Emory Folmar of Montgomery.

Democratic Governors Richard Riley of South Carolina, Robert Graham of Florida, Harry Hughes of Maryland, William O'Neill of Connecticut and George Nigh of Oklahoma all won re-election. Republican Gov. Lamar Alexander of Tennessee won a new term.

In New Hampshire Republican John Sununu led Democratic Gov. Hugh Gallen. Former Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas, trying for a comeback against the Republican who knocked him out of office last time, led Gov. Frank White.

ALPHA LAMBDA DELTA

OFFERS FOR GRADUATE STUDY DURING 1983-84

The National Council of Alpha Lambda Delta announces that the fellowships for graduate study listed above will be awarded for use during the 1983-84 academic year. The amount of each fellowship is 2500. Applicants will be judged on academic record, recommendations submitted, the soundness of the proposed project and its purpose, and need.

Any member of Alpha Lambda Delta graduating with a cumulative average of Alpha Lambda Delta initiation standard (3.7+) is eligible. Graduating seniors may apply if they have achieved this average at the end of the first semester (or first quarter) of this year.

Application blanks may be obtained by the Chapter Advisor, Gladys Rodriguez, at the Dean of Students Office, room 227 Whitmore. The deadline for application is January 4, 1983. For further information regarding the fellowships, see Gladys Rodriguez.

Constitutional state officers retain jobs

BOSTON (AP) — Overshadowed by the main events, Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti was quietly collecting a dramatic majority as four veteran Democrats appeared to be holding onto their powerful state jobs.

In races that attracted a dozen candidates but little public attention, Bellotti, State Secretary Michael J. Connolly, Treasurer Robert Q. Crane and Auditor John J. Finnegan were easily beating back challenges by four Republicans and four unknown Libertarians.

Bellotti was leading Republican Richard L. Wainwright in early returns with 73 percent of the vote to 24 percent. Libertarian challenger Michael Reilly of Brockton had 3 percent.

Connolly was in front of Republican Jody DeRoma Dow with 66 percent to 31 percent. Libertarian Robin D. Zazula of Medford had 3 percent.

Crane was leading Republican Mary J. LeClair with 64 percent of the votes to 33 percent. Libertarian candidate Freda L. Nason had 3 percent.

In the auditor's contest, the returns put Finnegan ahead of Republican Michael S. Robertson with 60 percent to 35 percent. Libertarian contestant Donald E. Washburn of North Adams had 5 percent.

December that the election would serve as a referendum of Regan's policies.

The race was earmarked by expensive campaigning and the taint of smear campaigns, in what is being called one of the most expensive contests in the country, estimates of total expenditures for both candidates exceeded $2 million. the first hint of mud-throwing came at the end of the only television Frank-Heckler debate when Heckler lelvied charges that Frank had sponsored bills in the state legislature supporting pornography and prostitution.

There have been hundreds of sports books written that avid sports fans have grown up reading. Some are terrific, most are middle of the road, many are plain garbage written to take advantage of sports fans during holiday seasons. This article will attempt to help the discerning sports fan wade through the available sports books and choose the most interesting.

Interestingly, the best sports literature is found in baseball, with basketball a close second. There are fewer good books dealing with football, boxing, and hockey — yet these sports translate particularly well on movie screens (especially boxing), whereas baseball movies have been death at the box office.

There are also different types of sports books. There are reference books, novels, diarys and accounty, public relation hyped biography's, athletes writing about how they found a) God, b) women, and c) current events. There are also journalists who have compiled their articles and observations and packaged them.

For reference works, there is only one: The Baseball Encyclopedia. It is the ultimate argument settler. It's the one book I want with me on a deserted desert island. Bill James has written The Baseball Abstract and that book is fascinating. The inevitable marriage of baseball statistics and computer, with a passionate man to dissect and discover and analyze the information.

There are a couple thousand novels about sports and most of them are poor. The Universal Baseball Association by J. Hoover Cooper is way above average about an accountant who is obsessed with a tabletop baseball game.

Two excellent biographies include 1961's Baseball is a Funny Game by Joe Garagiola and Cosell by Howard Cosell, written in 1973. Cosell's comments on the 1972 Munich Olympics is especially touching. Roy Campanella's It's Good to be Alive and John Wooden's They Call Me Coach deserve runner-up in this (auto)biography category. Bob Welch and George Vecsey's 1982 5:00 Comes Early: The Bob Welch Story contains very little about sports, but is an excellent book about alcoholism in sports.

Before the ten best sports books of all time are announced, I have not informed people about what to stay away from: George Steinbrenner books, anything by ghost write Pete Golonback, Wilt Chamberlain's, Muhammed Ali's, and both Bill Russell biography's. This Year in (Yankee, Red Sox, etc.) History, books published by Scholastic House, anything by Pete Rose, Ted Williams, and Tom Seaver, and for some reason, tennis books. The worst sports books of all may be the two picking the 100 best ballplayers of all time. Thurman Munson's book was trash.

The Glory of the Times, about baseball in its infancy is at the bottom of the top 10 of all time. Jackie Robinson's I Never had it Made and Satchel Paige's book Never Look Back also deserve a spot in the top 10. Meat on the Hoof was absolutely frightening by Gary Shaw, and is number 7 on my all time list.

David Halberstam's study of the Portland Trailblazers, The Breaks of the Game is highly recommended for the insides of the professional basketball scene, while Pete Axthelm's The City Game is definitive book of schoolyard basketball. They are, respectively, the fifth and sixth best.

For those sports enthusiasts who have read these books, they know that these are for the SERIOUS sports fan.

Roger Angell's Five Seasons is real quality. He is very literary and poetic, but still captures the essence of the game. Studying daily boxscores is a big part of my life, and I suspect Angell's, too.

The Boys of Summer, by Roger Kahn, is a love story of man and team. Pack this book into my casket when I die. It's worth buying in hardcover.

The best baseball book of all time was published less than a year ago. Thomas Boswell's How Life Imitates the World Series is incredible. Boswell, a columnist for the Washington Post, is the best baseball writer in the country today and a chance to read him 3 times a week is incentive enough to move to Washington D.C. The chapter on the greatest game ever played (the 1978 Boston/New York playoff) is a standout piece among standout pieces.

David Wolf and Connie Hawkins wrote the greatest sports book of all time: Foul. Hawkins' story is a fascinating, insightful look at our sports, our social systems, our legal systems, and ghetto life, and incidentally, one hell of a basketball player. Ten years after it was written, it has lost none of its impact.

Susienka shines in tourney wins

By JIM SAMIA
Collegian Correspondent

The name Marlene Susienka has become synonymous with women's golf at UMass. This fall she led the Minutewomen to one of the best seasons ever. It was no coincidence that Marlene also had one of her best campaigns ever.

The senior Exercise Science major won three top tournaments this fall, all with relative ease. Winning one tournament is great, winning two is simply outstanding, but to win three tournaments in one year is unheard of. Marlene's triple crown year is a feat that happens once in a long while.

The first tournament she captured was the Yale Invitational. This tournament featured schools such as North Carolina at Wilmington and Longwood College. These schools give scholarships to their golfers. This is something few schools, including UMass, don't do. She then won the Eastern AIAW's at Dartmouth.

"I knew if I played my own game I would be successful," said Susienka. "I went to Yale (Invitational) and Dartmouth (AIAW's) trying to win it...just trying to break 80 because I knew that would win it." She also won the Mt. Holyoke Invitational.

Marlene came to UMass from Whitinsville on a basketball scholarship. She was not unfamilar with golf though. She began to take lessons when she was 13 years old. A former golf pro, H.B. Lu tz, lived in Whitinsville and helped get Marlene on the right track. Her parents were also very influential in her start.

"My parents didn't push me," Marlene said. "They were very supportive and drove me to all the tournaments."

Marlene Susienka

Marlene began her golfing career at UMass when she was a freshman. It was also the same time that Jack Leaman became the women's golf coach. Leaman is one of Marlene's biggest boosters. He has nothing but praise and admiration for her.

The pupil also feels the same way about the coach.

"He has been a great help to me both on and off the course," said Susienka. "He knows how to get you to believe in yourself. He can get you to play to the best of your potential."

Marlene was pleased with the golf team this fall. She downplays her accomplishments and puts the team ahead of any individual achievements.

"We weren't expecting a strong team but we kept on playing better and better," said the team's most prolific player. "We should have a strong team this spring."

When asked about the upcoming varsity basketball season, Marlene was hesitant to reply since practice just started. She did say that the team will be competitive and there are many freshmen fighting for positions.

Marlene's most memorable event this season, and there are many, was shooting a 73 at Hickory Ridge Country Club to break the course record.

Marlene was an All-American golfer her sophomore year. She felt the pressure to repeat this feat her junior year and to a disappointing spring, she just missed it. She came back strong and confident this year and it showed. Nothing is in her way en route to what seems like certain All-American honors.

Commenting on her future, Marlene would like to continue playing golf and to get into more tournaments. She may go to California where she has some relatives and the climate is better suited for a longer golf season than New England.

Her terrific play has established her as one of the finest women golfer in UMass history and she is sure to find success wherever she goes.

Stukes leads UM defense

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

"She's got some talent that I recognized in tryouts," University of Massachusetts women's soccer coach Kalekeni Banda said about sophomore fullback Lori Stukes.

She's got some talent, all right. She's done a "tremendous job defensively, and now she's doing it offensively too," according to Banda.

Stukes, who is from Hillside, New Jersey, came up to UMass in the spring of her senior year in high school to try out with the team. It turned out to be a major factor in her decision to come to UMass.

"I came up for the day and played with the team to get to know the players," she said. "As soon as I came up I knew I wanted to come here."

In high school, Stukes played softball, basketball and soccer. She was a New Jersey All-State player in soccer, the sport which she enjoys most and wants to do her best in.

When she came to UMass, she didn't stop improving. As a freshman, she was on the All-New England college soccer team and the All-Eastern Region college Division team.

"She really stood out in the incoming freshman," Banda said. "She's a highly competitive person, daring to be better, a complete kind of soccer player."

Offensively, she is the only fullback on the team to score a goal besides Jackie Gaw. So far this season, Stukes has had two goals, four assists.

To keep in shape and to keep improving her skills, she plays indoor soccer in the winter and spring soccer. She feels she's improved a lot since last year just from playing during the winter and spring.

She got "very good support at home" when she almost decided not to come back to school this year.

"She called me up in August and said 'I'm coming back,' " Banda said. "It was the happiest thing I could have heard."

It was a good move for the team as they head into the first round of the NCAA tournament on Saturday. Stukes said if the squad can "play our game and work as a team" as they have been for most of the season, things should fall into place.

Stukes is a "very intimidating player," according to Banda. "Other coaches say 'who's that number 29?,' she's very intimidating."

The whole team is willing to make sacrifices for the team and individually, and no other player is more willing than Lori Stukes.

UMass' Judy Morgan drives downfield during the Minutewomen's 2-0 win over BU yesterday at NOPE.

By JENN KUPPER
Collegian Staff

The last words screamed on the NOPE field before the opening whistle yesterday came from an optimistic Boston University team. "Good Afternoon UMass — BU MASSacre!" And it was a good afternoon, although not for BU, who not only did not massacre the University of Massachusetts, but did not even jilt the UMass varsity field hockey team. The stickwomen sent the lady Terriers home with a 2-0 defeat.

Although UM did win, they did not play a top level game. Coach Pam Hixon attributes this to yesterday's heat.

"We were a little sluggish due to the heat. We also were not able to mentally click, without that we don't play top level," Hixon said.

Yesterday's game saw a lot of midfield play. In the first half UM's midfield used their skilled stickwork to go around BU and feed the ball off to the offense. The first goal of the game came in what is becoming a habit, a Megan Donnelly drive off a corner play. Patty Smith fed Donnelly the ball, and in her usual fashion, the freshman stickwoman wound up and hurled the ball right past BU goalie Judy Courtney. This goal came seven minutes into the game.

Between that goal and the next UM goal (which was in the second half) both UMass and BU lost a player due to injury. Massachusetts' Tish Stevens left the game when her right knee gave out at the 23 minute mark. Stevens, an integral part of the team, will hopefully be back for the UConn game Saturday. Boston University lost starter Charly Haversat with five minutes left in the first half, when a UM stick smashed into her left hand.

The Minutewomen scored early in the second half, upping the score to 2-0. Judy Morgan in her third game, since returning from a knee injury, scored the number two goal all on her own, with a diagonal shot cross the net and into goal. Although the stickwomen failed to score again, the second half belonged to them.

Not only did four separate offensive players get good shots off, but the midfield and defense kept BU out of scoring territory and aided goalie Patty Shea to another shutout. Shea had no shots on her, due to the UM defense.

The statistics columns once again show the story to yesterday's game. UMass had eleven shots, thirteen corners, and no saves. BU on the other hand, had no shot, one corner, and nine saves.

Yesterday's game was a must win game according to Hixon. Saturday the women travel to UConn in an exciting closing-season game. Last year, UMass tied Connecticut in regular season play and lost to them in the national championship game.

"This is the game for both teams," said Hixon. "The pressure is on UConn, we can relax. Yes, it will be an emotional game, but our intelligence must prevail."

Hixon feels that the pressure is on UConn for a number of reasons. One, they wouldn't want to lose at home. Two, the Huskies lost earlier in an upset to Springfield College, while UM has not lost to any New England team, and three, the UM losses were to two of the top four nationally ranked teams.

The Saturday field hockey event will be at 11:30 in Storrs, Connecticut. The jv's will play their closing season game following the varsity.

Football notebook: Thoughts on the UMass surprise moves

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

When the defensive changes that moved Tom Murray and Jerry Gordon to the defensive line and the announcement that freshman Jim Simeone would start the first game of his career at quarterback came over the UMass press box sound system, more than one head turned as if to ask, "Did you know that or am I the only dummy here?"

"Hey," they thought, "That's a freshman starting his first game and that's two offensive players playing defense. That's something I should know."

Not if no one tells you.

"We made the decisions during the week," UMass head coach Bob Pickett explained after the game. "We didn't want to tip anyone off and plus I wanted to keep Jimmy (Simeone) away from you guys. He was nervous enough."

"I think we will," pondered Pickett. "I think we will keep this defense. We have to."

Pickett also indicated that the makeshift Massachusetts defense will remain intact for this weeks game.

The defense held UConn to only 14 points, and forced nine Husky turnovers but at the same time surrendered 341 total yards.

As far as Simeone is concerned, he's back for another starting assignment this week, this time against Doug Flutie and the Boston College Eagles.

The 6'2" 225 pound freshman was only 1 for 11 passing against UConn but at times displayed a shotgun for an arm. The very first play from scrimmage for the Minutemen was a flea flicker (another secret) and Simeone overthrew brother Bob Simeone in the enzone, cranking the pass some 65 yards in the air.

Pickett had indicated earlier in the week that there was a possibility that he would redshirt Simeone this year, thus saving him a year of eligibility.

"We just didn't want to throw him in a game that we were losing or winning big because that really wouldn't help him," Pickett said. "We wanted to use him in a realistic situation.

Pickett explained his decision to start Simeone again Saturday against BC.

"He's a talented football player," Pickett smiled. "Besides, he's 1-0."

Offensively, it was a one man show Saturday at Alumni Stadium. UMass tailback Garry Pearson set a UMass single game record for most carries in a game with 38. He also went over the 1000 yard mark for the third straight year, and now has 1088 yards rushing this year and will be going after Dennis Dent's single season rushing record of 1139 yards against the Eagles.

"I don't think our offense was devastating," said Pickett. "We just controlled the football and scored points."

The NBA season preview: The Central Division

By BRIAN C. MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is the second of a series of four NBA divisional previews.

In the NFL, the league prides itself on its parity. In the NBA Central, the division is full of parody (pretty cute, huh). The Milwaukee Bucks can once again run away with it, the closest thing to watch in this division is who pulls up the cellar, Cleveland or Indiana.

Predicted Order Of Finish — Milwaukee, Atlanta, Detroit, Chicago, Indiana, Cleveland.

Milwaukee — For the last two years, this team has come so close, yet so far. To try to get over that hump, Don Nelson went out on the limb and acquired Dave Cowens. Public reaction has been fairly negative because Quinn Buckner was thought of as an essential to the team. But Cowens, even if he is close to his potential, is a heck of an addition to this team. Bob Lanier is getting old and his knee warranty has given out. Marques Johnson is playing sensational, and the forwards are Mickey Johnson, Junior Bridgeman, and Cowens. Alton Lister will spell for Lanier, with Cowens chipping in at center on occasion.

The Bucks are hurting at the guard position. Buckner is gone, Brian Winters is being plagued by back problems, so the pressure is on Sidney Moncrief. To help out at the other guard spot, rookie Paul Pressey from Tulsa might have to jump into the picture real soon. Charlie Criss is also available when they need him.

The Bucks problems are simple, can someone help out Moncrief, and can this old, aged team (five players are over 30) keep it going through May and June?

Atlanta — If Atlanta can stay healthy, which they haven't been able to do in the last few years, they can be a tough ballclub. Dan Roundfield, who might be the best power forward in the league, has Tree Rollins and Mr. Shotblocker himself, George Johnson, who was acquired from San Antonio. Tom McMillen is a steady role player, and Rudy Macklin is good too. Throw in a Dominique Wilkins, who was picked up from Utah, and Keith Edmonson, and you've got some talent. Eddie Johnson and Wes Matthews will team up with Edmonson to fill out the backcourt. Look out goliaths.

Chicago — Chicago will definitely not be the same team as last year. Gone is Artis Gilmore, and in exchange the Bulls picked up Dave Corzine and Mark Olberding, the original Bruise Brothers. David Greenwood, Orlando Woolridge and Dwight Jones are all capable coming off the bench. The guards have lots of talent. Reggie Theus and Quintin Daily can play with the best of them. Ronnie Lester, when healthy, has a lot of potential. Tracy Jackson is the swing man. If new coach Paul Westhead can mesh all this talent, the Bulls will make some rumblings.

Indiana — They're in trouble. First round draft choice Clark Kellogg of Ohio State has to make immediate contributions. Herb Williams, another OSU grad, will have to play as good as he did last year, plus a little bit better. Billy Knight will have to fill it up to keep the Pacers close in any given game. Johnny Davis is a quality guard, but he doesn't have anybody with him. The loss of Louis Orr hurt badly, and the Pacers will be looking over their shoulders, to make sure Cleveland is still behind them.

Cleveland — Poor John Bagley. He got caught in the worst organization in basketball. The Cavs just got a new coach in Tom Nissalke a week before the season opened up. How much can you teach a team in less than a week? James Edwards is one of their big names, as is Bobby Wilkerson, Cliff Robinson, and Scott Wedman. The worst part of their season is, they don't have a first round pick for next season.

Marques Johnson of the Milwaukee Bucks will be a vital cog in the team's drive to a Central division title.

Lame-duck King adds four Regents

Collegian File Photo

Once the only black woman on the Board of Regents, Elizabeth Rawlins was not reappointed to the Board by Governor Edward J. King.

By KEVIN BOWE
And JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

In the biggest shake-up of the Board of Regents since its creation, Governor Edward J. King appointed four new members to the fifteen member board.

Reactions to the appointments have drawn criticism concerning the lack of professional educators on the board and praise for the quality and "sensitivity" of the appointments.

Appointed on Monday were James M. Howell, senior vice president and chief economist of the First National Bank of Boston; attorney Gerald F. Doherty of Charleston; Nicholas Boraski, a vice president with General Electric Co. in Pittsfield, and Edward Sullivan, business manager of Local 254 of the Service Employees International Union, AFL-CIO.

The appointments replace Arnold Friedman, a Springfield newspaper editor who resigned in September; Elizabeth B. Rawlins, an associate professor of education and humanities at Simmons College who served as Chairperson of the Academic and Student Affairs subcommittee; George Hazzard, retired president of Worcester Polytechnic Institute who served on Rawlins' subcommittee; and George Ellison, an insurance agent who served as the Chairperson of the Regents Labor Relations and Affirmative action subcommittee.

WHO THEY ARE

Howell is widely recognized in the business community as the leading economist for the New England region. He is currently chairperson of the Commission on Higher Education and the Economy of New England which last year issued a report warning that the decline in higher education resources in the region will adversely affect the industrial development of the area.

Doherty was a member of the state legislature in the fifties and sixties. During this time he worked with Governor Foster Furcolo to create the Community College system and with University of Massachusetts Trustee Judge J. John Fox to insure proper spending authority for the University of Massachusetts. Both Furcolo and Fox are present members of the Board of Regents. A practicing attorney, Doherty and his wife Marilyn contributed the legal maximum of $2000 to King's re-election campaign.

Sullivan is the first member of organized labor to be appointed to the Board. Since its creation in 1980 a great deal of pressure has been applied to mandate by law the appointment of a labor representative. Sullivan's Local 254 contributed $5700 to King's campaign.

Boraski is a UMass graduate and general manager of General Electric. GE is widely known for its contributions to the higher education field, said UMass chancellor Joseph Duffey.

THE POSITIVE REACTION

Chancellor of Higher Education in Massachusetts John B. Duff said he is impressed with the new appointments. "There is obviously great versatility, talent and expertise among the incoming Regents," Duff said in a press release

Black ex-Regent lambastes Governor King, says her dismissal is disgraceful development

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

The Board of Regents of Higher Education may have lost an important viewpoint when Gov. Edward J. King chose not to reappoint the board's only black member.

Elizabeth Rawlins, a black woman whose term on the Board of Regents expired in August, was not re-appointed to the board.

"It's a disgrace," Rawlins said, adding that a board responsible for all higher education in the state should have representation from the black community.

"They have written off the involvement of people of color in higher education," said Acting Director of the Office of Third World Affairs Gary Lee.

"I am extremely upset by that development," Lee said. "They (the Board of Regents) don't have all the viewpoints they need to make rational decisions about public higher education."

To fulfill the goals of the Board of Regents as mandated by Massachusetts state law, Rawlins said the board needs representation of different perspectives.

"The combination that came from me is no longer there," Rawlins said. "It could have come from me or someone else black."

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph Duffey cautioned that the board needs to balance its membership to become more representative of minorities. "It is clear that this board and several others in the state are fitting targets for affirmative action initiative in the future," he said. "I praise Governor King for the appointments, but I hope in the future we will see some redressing of the imbalance."

Rawlins said she was not surprised by King's decision because she had not received any communication from him regarding her re-appointment when her term expired in August.

Because King was running for re-election, "politics would enter into it in a way it ought not to," Rawlins said.

The removal of Rawlins leaves one woman on the board, Sister Janet Eisner, president of Emmanuel College.

Neil Westerman, a spokesman for King, said, "The governor is very proud of his record of appointments of women to state government roles." He said the Governor has appointed two women to cabinet positions in the King administration.

"He has an outstanding record for hiring minority employees," Westerman said. Westerman named two minority appointments made by the King administration: Leon Brathwait, director of affirmative action for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and Arnette Waters, director of the Private Industry Council.

Tailgate parties a testimony to UMass fans' love of beer

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

For some people it is the pre-game warmup, for others it is the post-game wrapup, and for still others it is the game itself.

It is the tailgate party in the parking lot of Alumni Stadium on Saturday home football games and, since the banning of alcohol in the stadium last season, the party has increased to parties, and some fans have decided they would rather stay outside and play themselves rather than watch the team play football.

"A lot of times we come down here (the parking lot) to have a few beers before the game and the next thing you know, it's almost halftime," said Andy Corrigan, a junior. "We have so much fun out here, sometimes it's hard to get motivated to go inside."

The various groups of afternoon tailgaters were each equipped with all the essential ingredients for their own ideal party.

The more refined tailgaters, the older graduates and parents, were well stocked with cocktails, beer, a grill and the basic barbeque staples such as hot dogs and hamburgers.

The middle of the road crowd is made up mostly of fans that have travelled to Amherst to support the visiting team. They all wear T-shirts bearing the name of their team and tend to look more like hard core

Lebanese troops advance to disarm Christian militia

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Lebanese troops and armored vehicles entered east Beirut yesterday to disarm Christian militiamen, but U.S. Marines delayed their patrols into the area for at least 24 hours.

In its first action to control the area since the 1975-76 civil war, the Lebanese army threatened to arrest Christian militiaman who refuse to lay down their arms. Phalange militia spokesman Fadi Hayek said his men would cooperate with the army, but he would not say if the Christiaqs would surrender their weapons.

"This is a decision to be taken by the president of the republic. Until this date we haven't received such a decision," Hayek said, referring to President Amin Gamayel, a Maronite Christian with close ties to the militias.

Four jeeps with 12 Marines had been slated to move into east Beirut yesterday afternoon, but at nightfall they remained at the international airport in Moslem west Beirut. Their expanded role was ordered Monday by President Reagan at Gamayel's request.

Marine spokesman Lt. Col Jon Abel said the first daily patrol was rescheduled for this afternoon. Another Marine spokesman, Capt. Dale Dye said the leathernecks "have absolutely no plans" to patrol the area after dark.

Abel said that "no execute order was received" because "there were decisions to be made at higher levels." He would not elaborate, but the decisions were believed to concern the area the Marines would cover in their patrols.

In Washington, Pentagon officials said there were no policy hitches or any major problems connected with the delay. They said the decision on deployment was being made by the Marine command in Beirut.

Pipeline dispute may be over

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is ready to present to its West European allies a new formula for restricting technology transfers to the Soviet Union, the Italian prime minister announced yesterday. The formula would be designed to end the dispute over construction of the Soviet natural gas pipeline to western Europe.

Emerging from a meeting with President Reagan, the prime minister, Giovanni Spadolini, said "a solution is very near" in the pipeline dispute. He said the new U.S. formula would be presented to western European ambassadors tonight.

Although Reagan did not go into details, an administration official said the revised U.S. policy would remove from a Commerce Department blacklist firms that aided in construction of the pipeline under existing contracts.

The official said that the revised sanctions would seek to prohibit new deals, and that the United States and its allies would work together to deny the Soviets easy trade credits.

Reagan called his meeting with Spadolini productive and said it confirmed the broad range of cooperation between the United States and Italy.

Stop the arms race; Pope

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Pope John Paul II implored scientists yesterday to call a halt to the nuclear arms race by refusing to fashion new instruments of death.

"It is a scandal of our time that many researchers are dedicated to improving new weapons for war," the pope told a gathering of Spanish professors and intellectuals at Madrid's Complutense University.

"Consciences must be awakened," he declared. "Your responsibility and the possibilities of influence on public opinion are immense. Make them serve the cause of peace and the real progress of man."

The 62-year-old pontiff was only four days into his 10-day tour of Spain, the first by a pontiff, but he acknowledged he was tiring.

"Your fatigue and mine are interrelated," he replied, grinning, when a reporter asked if he was tired.

The pope skipped several pages of his address to Spanish priests Tuesday evening and went to bed early, aides reported. But he was up early as usual for a crowded schedule that included meetings with local representatives of other Christian churches, with 200 members of the Polish community and with a delegation of 12 Sephardic Jews.

In the afternoon, he celebrated Mass for 50,000 people in a working-class neighborhood, and in the evening he led a prayer service for young people who packed a 130,000-seat soccer stadium.

Herald workers delay strike; press to roll

BOSTON — Typographers at the Boston Herald American decided yesterday against a strike that would have clouded the future of the Hearst daily, a union official said.

Henry Vitale, president of Local 13 of the International Typographical Union, said management asked workers for more time because it was trying to sell the financially troubled morning newspaper, one of two Boston dailies.

Typographers have been without a contract for 19 months, and workers have given union officials authority to call a strike anytime, Vitale said.

"When it comes down to a sale, we're looking to protect the workers," Vitale said. "We have to make sure if it is true, and if it is, we'll have to take a different course of action."

He declined to say what that action would be.

The talks delayed typesetting at the paper, but deliveries were expected to be on time today.

An editor at the paper who asked not to be identified said management had no comment.

Reaganomics benefits Kennedy and Frank

BOSTON — Reaganomics was a potent campaign target for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and the 10 Massachusetts Democrats in Congress as they hammered their Republican opponents in the off-year election.

Kennedy breezed to victory Tuesday with more than 60 percent of the vote, while all of the Democratic congressional incumbents, including House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill and brash freshman Barney Frank, also won handily.

"President Reagan's economic program was ill-advised and ill-conceived," said Kennedy. "I took that issue to the people of Massachusetts and they responded."

Most of the Republicans lost by more than 20 percentage points in the Democratic rout.

The only GOP winner was in the 1st District, where U.S. Rep. Silvio Conte was unopposed for a 13th term in his Berkshire stronghold. Conte now becomes the lone GOP w[illegible] the state's congressional delegation.

Kennedy, 50, faced one of his toughest Republican opponents ever in businessman Ray Shamie, who spent more than $2 million in hopes of denying the Democrat a fifth term.

"The American people want to alter the course," declared Kennedy, who seemed to campaign as much against Reagan as he did against Shamie.

Abortion clinic battle hits state Appeals Court

BOSTON (AP) — A legal battle over a Worcester abortion clinic, the first of its kind in central Massachusetts, reached the state Appeals Court yesterday.

The three-judge panel took under consideration arguments by John W. Spillane of Worcester, lawyer for a citizens group, that the state Public Health Council did not have proper jurisdiction to issue a determination of need certificate. The certificate, issued Sept. 3, 1980, was the first step in granting a license for the proposed Planned Parenthood Clinic of Central Massachusetts.

The certification was upheld in August 1981 by Worcester Superior Court Judge Andrew G. Meyer, and the Public Health Department issued the clinic a license to operate on Oct. 26.

"There are no legal restraints to begin operations now," said Barry B. White, attorney for the Planned Parenthood League of Massachusetts, Inc., which would operate the Main Street clinic.

However an adverse ruling by the appeal panel, headed by Chief Justice Allan M. Hale, could result in a revocation of the license.

White said it was not known when the appeals court would rule on the case.

Shamie's name to reappear in politics

BOSTON — Massachusetts voters may see Republican Ray Shamie's name again on an election ballot, the businessman said after holding Democratic Sen. Edward M. Kennedy to his lowest percentage win in 20 years.

Shamie, a 61-year-old self-made millionaire, also said yesterday he felt his uphill campaign against Kennedy was drowned by a "tidal wave of concern over Reaganomics."

"I think we did it right," Shamie said in a telephone interview from his Walpole home, where he was preparing to resume his business career today.

"I can't fault our overall strategy, advertising, my performance in the debate, the speeches I made or the field work."

Complete but unofficial results showed Kennedy received 1.24 million votes, or 61 percent Tuesday. Shamie, who was making his first bid for public office, received 784,062 votes, or 39 percent.

Capital punishment law may start immediately

BOSTON (AP) — Newly armed with a constitutional amendment allowing it to pass a death-penalty law, the Legislature was expected to start work on one this month before Michael Dukakis, a foe of capital punishment, becomes governor.

Outgoing Gov. Edward King has filed a bill to reimpose the death penalty. The state has been without a capital punishment law since 1972, when the U.S. Supreme Court threw out death-penalty laws throughout the nation.

The death-penalty amendment was one of five statewide referendum questions on Tuesday's ballot. It is up to the Legislature to create a law specifying which crimes are punishable by death.

The amendment was approved Tuesday by 1,125,653 to 746,733 with all but two of the 2,192 precincts reporting.

Massachusetts voters also decided Tuesday to keep their new law requiring deposits on beverage cans and bottles; to reject more state aid for private and parochial schools; to ask President Reagan to begin negotiations for a nuclear weapons freeze, and to adopt a law requiring voter approval before any low-level nuclear waste dumps or new nuclear power plants can be built in the state.

With 91 percent of the vote counted, the bottle law was supported by 59 percent of the voters, the nuclear freeze by 74 percent, the nuclear waste disposal and plant construction limitations by 67 percent and the rejection of more state aid for non-public schools by 62 percent.

Max Stern, chairman of the Campaign Against Restoration of the Death Penalty, said the capital-punishment amendment is not "a mandate to begin executions in the state.

Faculty Senate to vote on SCERA team's final sexual harassment draft

BY MICHELLE MURRAY
Collegian Staff

After two years of haggling, writing and re-writing, the Sexual Harassment Grievance Procedure will be voted on by the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate today and some of those involved in developing the procedure said they are hopeful it will pass.

"The procedure has taken two years from when SASH (Students Against Sexual Harassment) first began working on it, so we are all breathing a sigh of relief — rather we are saying finally," said Jane Zbyszynski, activist in SASH, the now defunct branch of the Women's Issues Team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA).

Louis Fischer, associate to the chancellor called the procedure a "workable document which provides adequate protection to victims of sexual harassment and adequate due process to those accused of sexual harassment."

"I think it's a very good procedure," Zbyszynski said. "It is comprehensive, (and) allows for all the constituents on campus to file through it. I am pleased with it. I just hope the Faculty Senate will be just as pleased."

"We've reached a workable compromise that upholds the law," Fischer said. "I hope and trust the (Faculty) Senate will approve it." He added that there are certain sections of the proposal which are controversial and could possibly block its passage.

The role of the Ombudsperson in the procedure and the question of what to do with grievance files are some of the controversial aspects of the proposal, Fischer said.

Title IX, the Equal Educational Opportunity Act, passed in 1972, mandates a sexual harassment grievance procedure for any institution receiving federal assistance for its educational programs or activities, according to UMass Legal Services Staff.

Fischer said if passed, the procedure would probably be implemented within a few weeks but that would depend on the chancellor. Several offices on campus including the Ombudsman's Office, the Everywomen's Center, the Affirmative Action office, and the Human Relations Office would take part in the implementation and education campaign.

The procedure states that persons with sexual harassment complaints should address them to the Ombudsman's Office. Individuals are encouraged to try to resolve complaints on an informal level. If the complaint cannot be resolved by informal procedures, an individual may file a complaint and request a formal hearing. A hearing panel of 13 individuals comprised of faculty, staff, student and administrative members, will be appointed by the chancellor according to the policy.

"The procedure has taken two years from when SASH (Students Against Sexual Harassment) first began working on it, so we are all breathing a sigh of relief — rather we are saying finally," said Jane Zbyszynski, a SASH activist.

The appointees will participate in a sexual harassment training workshop to sensitize them to the issue. A sexual harassment violation "shall be found only where there is a preponderence of evidence," the grievance procedure policy states. After the Hearing Board's decision either party may request a review of the decision by the vice-chancellor. A party dissatisfied with the vice-chancellor's decision may petition the chancellor for reconsideration.

Writer, poet and recording artist Nikki Giovanni spoke and read samples of her poetry to a Bowker Auditorium audience last night.

Noted writer Giovanni espouses human rights

BY GUS MARTINS
Collegian Staff

The first function of human life is human beings, said a noted black poet last night at Bowker Auditorium to a crowd of about 400.

Nikki Giovanni, 39, writer, poet, recording artist and lecturer spoke in behalf of Black Homecoming week here at the University of Massachusetts and shared some poetry and some keen social perception with a fully enthusiastic audience.

"If we are not concerned with human beings what are we concerned with?" asked Giovanni. "Handguns kill people, but we have the right to own a gun and yet women can't have the right to abortion."

"There is something very wrong with the level of intelligence in this country. If we functioned like a jungle at least we'd be civilized," Giovanni said. "We have a brain, sometimes even a heart, but what we don't have is the ability to communicate — to talk," she said.

"Most of us are afraid to make changes in our life, people are afraid of happiness. We're so wrapped up in other things, the truth is most of us will be lucky if we succeed in leading our own life," Giovanni said.

In her address, Giovanni attacked several of the political issues that are now hot topics. "We spend so much money on a missile we can't even shoot," Giovanni said. "When John Kennedy was president he talked about our nuclear capacity only having the potential for about 10 times overkill. The only response I had to that was that I wanted to die the first time you killed me," Giovanni said.

She also said people are afraid to dream: "I think it's nice to dream, and the best part of it is finding someone to help make those dreams come true."

Giovanni said she was saddened about the little girl in Ohio who is very ill and in need of a kidney transplant. While the girl is white and her father has shown concern searching nationwide for a donor, she said black children die at a rate of 3 to 1 to white children.

"I'm sorry about that little ill girl, but when are you gonna be concerned with all children in America," Giovanni asked.

Giovanni later read some poetry. Among her work read was a piece about growing old, and another that concerns the riches of Africa, entitled "I Am the Congo."

She concluded with a piece she wrote in the memory of John Lennon, and said how she was profoundly saddened by his death.

"When a friend of mine phoned me while I was in Ohio to tell me that John Lennon had been killed, I wondered, what's next? Now they've killed a man who's attempted to reach out and touch everyone from all walks of life; however, it did seem an appropriate way to begin the eighties," Giovanni said.

Private school aid would have hurt public institutions

By MATTHEW BERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The annual budget appropriated by the state for the University of Massachusetts could have been adversely affected had Question one on yesterday's ballot been passed by the state's voters.

The question, asking voters whether the state constitution should be changed, was defeated with 62 percent of the voters voting against the measure and 38 percent favoring it. If passed, the referendum would have allowed the state to grant aid to private and parochial schools. Such aid is currently, and will remain, against the state constitution although aid is permitted by the U.S. government.

On the UMass campus, several administration and student officials yesterday said they were relieved the measure did not pass, since it could have had a negative impact on the University.

"If you have a finite amount of money and not raising taxes, then the money that would have gone in to a new program would have to come from somewhere," said John L. DeNyse, acting vice chancellor for administration and finance.

"It would have added more fighters to the game," said Student Government Association President Jim Murphy. "In the whole context of a budget, when money goes somewhere, it doesn't go somewhere else."

Private school officials, however, disagreed over the merits of the measure and said they were disappointed it did not pass.

"I think the defeat is due to a lack of information," said Father DuPre, chancellor of the Springfield Catholic Diocese, who said the amendment prohibiting state aid was added to the constitution about 100 years ago as the result of anti-Catholic sentiment sweeping the country at the time.

But others at UMass said they, too, were glad to see the measure fail.

"If it had passed, the next thing we would see are state funds going to Amherst College," said Jim Budreau, a member of the Public Policy Team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA).

Bottle law effects may inconvenience some retail outlets

By MITCH ZEMEL
Collegian Correspondent

As UMassPIRG members celebrated the long sought victory of the bottle bill, local package store and grocery store owners expressed problems with storage, sales and increased wholesale prices.

"People with small stores will have to add on storage space. Prices will probably go up thirty cents and another ten for handling," said Peter Watroba, owner of Watroba's Deli and Package Store.

MassPIRG has been fighting for the passage of the bottle bill since 1972, the beginning of the bill's existence. The bill was passed by a 59 percent state-wide vote and will take effect Jan. 17.

While many package store owners believe the bottle bill will help clean-up the environment, they also believe it will raise the price of beverages sold in cans and bottles.

"It won't affect sales because students will still party, but the wholesalers will jump prices because of increased handling costs," said William Russell, owner of Russell's Package Store.

The package stores will also have to raise their prices because of the need for more storage space and increased handling costs.

In the long run, most of the larger stores do not think the bottle bill will affect their sales.

"We all voted for it," said Maureen Coughlan of Four Seasons Liquors. "At first people get angry and sales go down for a week, but then things will pick back up."

But, some of the smaller stores expect the passage of the bottle bill will hurt their sales.

"It will hurt our sales. People don't want to spend more money than they have to," said Anne Shackett, manager of the Jane Alden Dairy Store.

Many of the local stores declined to comment on the bottle bill.

"On the whole, it may be more detrimental to the students. There is a good chance that they will not return the bottles if they are partying in the dorms," said Russell. "The passage of the bill really doesn't matter to us. The increase in prices will pay for any extra costs that we incur."

SGA Escort Service floundering at present

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) Escort Service has been unable to get started as of yet this semester because organizers of the service claim they have no place to work from.

The SGA Escort Service operated last year as a student-run organization which accompanied students from dormitories to libraries and bus stops, from 7 to 12 p.m., Sunday through Thursday nights.

"The purpose of the Escort Service was so no one would have to walk alone," said Ann Maynard, co-coordinator of the service.

The Escort Service was not in abundant use but in general, people felt better knowing it was there, Maynard said.

"The police felt it helped them. Not as many people will be committing crimes, if they know someone is there to report them," she said.

Last year the Escort Service operated out of the SGA President's Office. Maynard said this year she was told the service would receive office space.

However, the Escort Service has been unable to begin operations because it has not secured office space or has received furniture until just recently, Maynard said.

Jim Keller, space coordinator for the Board of Governors (BOG), said he informed the Escort Service it had been assigned "incubator space" in room 415 of the Student Union in a letter he sent out Sept. 10.

"A group is assigned to incubator space, if we don't know whether the new group will continue," he said.

Maynard said she was upset when she learned the Escort Service had to share office space with five other organizations. The service presently has 125 active members who staff the office a minimum of 40 hours a week, she said.

However, Keller said, "The Escort Service hasn't been active at all this semester."

Keller said he never sees Escort Service members in the office. Although the space was open for the service since early Sept., they just moved in two weeks ago, he said.

Ron Keefe, director of the BOG felt the Escort Service was no longer active judging from their use of their space."

The Escort Service was considered by the BOG a developing group. That was why it was assigned to the incubator space in room 415 of the Student Union, Keefe said.

The BOG is subject to bureaucracy. It must evaluate which organizations require what types of equipment on the basis of their past success, Keller said.

Keefe said the placement of the Escort Service in room 415 was the next logical step for the service.

"I know other groups have been taken care of," he said.

The Escort Service is expected to become active before finals time so it can move right into next semester. "But we keep running into such a stone wall," she said.

issued this week.

Duff cited Howell as a continuous supporter of higher education noting Howell's insistence that higher education is one of the state's most important resources.

Duffey also praised Howell's appointment: "He has an appreciation not only of needs in science and technology, but of the broad cultural resources whose development will be a part of New England's future."

Duffey described Doherty, whom he has known for over 10 years, as "a man of great sensitivity. He will be generally interested in students and their needs as well as economic issues."

Duffey said he is looking forward to meeting Sullivan. He said he spoke with AFL-CIO officers in Washington D.C., who "speak very well of him."

THE NEGATIVE REACTION

The removal of Rawlins and Hazzard leaves only two Regents on the Academic and Student Affairs subcommittee.

"It puts a limitation on the deliberations when you have fewer and fewer academics", said Rawlins, noting the amount of Regents with experience in the higher education field has been cut in half.

The remaining higher education officials on the Board of Regents are Sister Janet Eisner, who serves as chairperson of the long range Planning Committee and Father Francis Nicholson who serves on the Regents Fiscal subcommittee.

Duffey discounted the lack of practicing educators on the Board of Regents.

"I don't think that is necessarily a shortcoming (the lack of practicing educators)." These are people (the new appointments) who have demonstrated a record of sympathy for public higher education," Duffey said.

The shake-up in the Board comes one month after the state Legislature increased the members of the Board of Trustees at the state colleges and universities by two members each. A spokesperson for King indicated the appointments will be made before Thanksgiving.

football fans than the average "UMie." The party is usually more portable, since these people must be ready to travel, so coolers stocked with plenty of beer is the norm with this crowd.

After these two groups, the rest is a blend of fraternities, sororities and various other groups who have decided to pitch their money together and purchase a key (or two) of beer.

In this last group, the center of activity is the tap. Beer flows pretty easily and on a sunny afternoon, such as last week's game against the University of Connecticut, as many as 20 kegs are dispersed throughout the area.

"It's a good way to relax after a week of school work," said Rick Doherty as he helped himself to another cup of brew. "And drinking beer sure beats studying."

Student Senate mobilized voters

By ANNE CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

At last night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting, student senators were congratulated on their efforts to mobilize students to vote in Tuesday's elections. An unprecedented number of students who voted this year.

"We greatly increased the number of voting students in the town of Amherst. We've doubled the population of the number of voting students from the time of the primaries to election day," said Mike Ferrigno, acting student association director.

This year the elections indicated a major increase in the number of student voters. The large number of voters represents the importance of the student constituency.

"We're on the move now. We've increased the student voting population from 11,000 to 13,500. This shows that we represent a lot of power. We have really set an example. Members from both the Kennedy and Dukakis campaign thanked us for turning out so many students," said Ferrigno.

John Olver, the winner of the senatorial seat in Franklin County, thanked the students claiming his victory was a result of the overwhelming student vote, said SGA president Jim Murphy.

"I bumped into Olver on the street and he stopped me to thank me and the students. He very much attributes his victory to the student constituency. He realizes now that there is a whole constituency that has been left untapped," said Murphy.

The student votes, Murphy said, not only were a demonstration of the student support for Olver, but also of their interest in political issues outside of Olver's sphere.

"Olver attributed much of his victory to the student vote. Let us give ourselves a pat on the back," said Sharon Davies, speaker of the Student Senate.

Some students said the student votes will cause politicians from a number of political regions to be more attentive to the student constituency.

Tree climbing held at Orchard Hill

Students from the Stockbridge School of Agriculture and the University of Massachusetts put away their textbooks yesterday to flex their muscles in a tree climbing competition held at Orchard Hill.

Professional arborists (tree specialists) also participated in the competition, which required the participants to climb to the top of trees in a variety of different ways while racing against the clock.

Competitors hauled themselves into the air with only their hands and a rope, swung from branch to branch grabbing colored flags and tested their ability to toss a rope over a branch 20 feet in the air.

Robert Felix, the executive vice president of the National Arborist Association in Wantagh, New York, said the competition represents what arborists must do on the job.

"Stockbridge is the best school of its kind in the United States. Other schools in the country pattern their programs after it," he said. "Competitions like this help maintain the good quality achieved at Stockbridge."

Jack Denison, director of Stockbridge, said the competition was started about 30 years ago.

"By bringing in professionals from the outside world, we can show the students what's going on in the real world," he said. "Through the fun of competition our students develop a closeness with one another as well as with professionals in the fields."

"Some of these guys have come out here two or three days a week for the past five weeks training for this. Some have even come out everyday," said Scott Trask a senior Stockbridge student.

The big winner in yesterday's competition was Tony Medeiros, a senior Stockbridge student. Medeiros finished first in both the body thrust and rope pull competitions.

Health Services semester charge covers a great deal

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Half the seats are filled in the waiting room for those who came without an appointment. A woman holding a file walks out and calls one of the students into another room.

More than 20,000 University of Massachusetts students are enrolled in one of the health plans the University Health Services has to offer, but few realize how much the $81 semester fee provides, or how the service operates.

"It's self-supporting. The health fee covers salaries and supplies. The state provides the building, the heat and light," said Executive Director of health services Barry Averill.

In addition to University students, students from Hampshire and Amherst Colleges, students' dependents and members of the Valley Health Plan constitute about 27,000 users of the health services facilities. Additional funding from the state and federal governments provide the health services with about $6 million to provide medical and nursing care, dental and mental health programs, community education and environmental safety programs.

"The only thing that would affect the fee would be a change in enrollment if there are more students we increase the fee to increase services to meet their needs — or if we provide a new service or change in services, or just inflation," Averill said.

The Supplemental Health Plan, an optional 12-month coverage, operates under a separate system. Last year expenses under this plan which includes surgery, specialty care and services when a student is away from the university, used more than expected for emergency care, Averill said. Although the regular fee is not expected to increase this year, the supplemental plan will probably rise until the reserves where the extra expenditures came from, are replenished.

Outpatient services have increased proportionally to enrollment — about eight percent since 1979. Visits to physicians numbered over 34,000 by university students alone. Over 5,000 students used the dental health program, and more than 1,500 used the mental health services. Utilization of the nursing services exceeds the rest at nearly 39,000 visits by university students in 1981 through 1982.

A 1980 Student Affairs Research and Evaluation (SAREO) study found that 88.4 percent of students surveyed were satisfied with services the health center offers. The only problem Averill cited as outstanding at the health services is "a whole lot of people at one time coming in." He said studies are being done to determine how to arrange staffing for the fastest service, but that appointments are the only way to guarantee being seen quickly.

"That's the biggest negative," Averill said. "People must understand, considering how long you have to wait sometimes at the University."

"We're just trying to help students help themselves to get the most out of college, physically and mentally," he said.

Averill added that the service's staff is "highly trained, and puts in more than a normal work week."

"We provide top-level care," he said.

The whole University has changed but a certain barber remains the same

By LISA CANTWELL
Collegian Correspondent

The past 49 years have been host to numerous changes for the University of Massachusetts. One person's role however, has remained a constant part of the campus scenario — the barber's. From the Depression to the Nuclear Age, Nelson Major, 72, has cut hair for university students.

"It's a beautiful place to work," Major said. "I love being surrounded by young people."

Major has considered retirement, but said the students have kept him from leaving. "I love to meet all kinds, especially the young people. They have so much philosophy and optimism in them; they keep me here."

Barbering is a family tradition for the Adams, Mass. native. Both his father and grandfather cut hair. Major began his apprenticeship under his father in 1929, working after high school classes everyday.

Haircut styles have fluctuated through the decades. The 1930's saw crew cuts and flat-tops as the leading trends. In the 1940's, the government, due to compulsory Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) service, determined the trend. "I had to cut all the boys' hair military style, which was short with no sideburns," Major said.

In the 1960's "it was not very popular to get a haircut at all," he said. It was, in fact, so unpopular that Major's barbering business declined a considerable 66 percent.

"I had seven barbers plus myself at the beginning of the decade," said Major. "By the middle of the 60's I had cut my help back to myself and three others." The hair preference is now short, Major said.

"The campus in 1982 is quite a bit different compared to 1933 when Major began his barbering career here, he said. Currently working in the Student Union building three afternoons a week, he started in a now extinct North College mens' dormitory, where Whitmore now stands.

"When I first began," Major said, "UMass was changing from a mostly agricultural school to a state university. We had a dairy building; Bartlett Hall was up; and the basement of the Old Chapel was used as a library before Goodell was built." At that time about 1,150 students attended UMass, he said.

Northeast was the main residential area for men and women occupied the Abigail Adams House, located where Graduate Research Center now stands.

"Rooming houses were an off-campus alternative for those times," Major said. "Fraternities were popular, about half the men joined frat houses. I guess they liked the food home-cooked better than cafeteria style."

The University's policies have also changed over the past 49 years. "Every Tuesday at 11:00 a.m.," he said, "freshman and sophomore students, dressed in their formal clothes, would attend what they called convocation. This was a lecture given by administration people about the rules and regulations of the university."

Consumption of alcoholic beverages in the dorms was against the rules, but Major said like college students of today, they managed to break regulations. "The boys would hide a bottle of something, sneak into the dorms and have a little party anyway," he said.

Major said he feels students have not changed much over the past 49 years. "Kids are still kids, most good, happy and full of vitality." But he describes today's students as "brighter" and said for their age, "they have been around more, know more about life" than students of the past.

Major said the most important thing young people today should do is "just plain be themselves," adding with a smile that "students could probably give me some good advice."

Poster destruction must stop

To the Editor:

It has come to my attention that there has been a poster war waged on campus, in particular against the Student Alliance for Israel who cannot put up one piece of literature without having it torn down. The Student Alliance for Israel is a group concerned with Political and Social issues. It is apparent there are many factions committed to the destruction of the State of Israel who manifest themselves on campus; however, I am confused why they tear down posters advocating weekly Israeli dancing. Do these antagonists perceive our dancing as a threat? Unfotunately I believe this is a combination of blind hate and intolerance. When one finds a huge Swastika over a poster of a distinguished speaker such as Martin Peretz (who recently spoke on Israel and the Media) the ridiculous mentality of these cowards is clear.

It is not at all ironic that these opponents who detest the democratic State of Israel also show their clear rejection of basic democratic principles. Thus they are consistant when they deny the Student Alliance for Israel the right to Freedom of Speech. I believe it to be far more respectable to disagree openly with someone than to destroy posters secretly like a spineless vandal. As a person who is committed to democracy I would like to teach those opponents of the S.A.I. a quick lesson in democracy.

Perhaps Voltaire stated it best, "I may not agree with what you have to say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Stop tearing down our literature!!!!!

Index unsatisfied with UPC

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to Billy Prichett's letter concerning UPC complimentary tickets for the Index. I too see no rational behind having two photographers at every concert. However, as the 1982-1983 Fine Arts Editor, I recognize a need for two tickets; one for a photographer and one for someone from my staff to write a review of the event. Adequate coverage of any event on campus will be limited as long as this one complimentary ticket policy remains in effect. Our job is to publish a complete record of fine arts production on campus throughout the year. Responsible journalism goes further than just supplying the buyers and graduates with a picture book. Many of the events that UPC and other organizations bring to campus deserve recognition beyond mere pictures. Although space does not allow for copy concerning every production, there is a need to capture and present highlights from sell-out performances and special guests. This will enable the graduates to look back in their yearbooks in years to come and have more than just pictures to jar their memory.

The Index is often distributed across the country, has won top publication awards over the past years, and most importantly remains as one of the strongest and most positive public relations medium for the University of Massachusetts. If UPC and other groups on campus would try and work in cooperation with the Index staff, all our experiences would be more rewarding for ourselves and those we serve.

Senator denies assertions

To the Editor:

Much has been made of the recent decision by the Student Senate to endorse State Senator John W. Olver for re-election. I will not address this issue as much has already been discussed and argued. In the end, though, a clear majority of the Student Senators decided the matter.

Unfortunately, some people have attempted to undermine the effectiveness of the Senate by continuing to oppose the decision of the majority. In Monday's Collegian column, Tim Rudolf argued that the Senate is an irresponsible body. He does not really explain why he feels this way, except to point out his disagreement with one decision. Maybe his confusion is due to his inexperience. He has only been a Student Senator for one meeting, yet he feels qualified to call the Senate an "irresponsible and more than ineffectual institution."

The Student Senate is an institution that originated over 25 years ago. Since that time it has grown and matured until today where it legislates over the entire Student Government Activities System. It budgets and coordinates a 1.8 million dollar trust fund. It supports such groups as the Union Program Council (UPC), which brings us fantastic performances, and the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), which has a national reputation for its student advocacy work. There are over 400 Recognized Student Organizations involved in this system. Student Controlled Businesses have been supported and now generate over two million dollars in revenue. While the Senate can not claim credit for the activities of student groups, it is a major force in allowing these groups to develop.

One final point to consider, though, is Mr. Rudolf's statement, "work with to accomplish, not against to disrupt." While the Senate may not be perfect, let us all work together so we can do the most to help students. I question the motivation behind attacking the Senate and caution against "working against to disrupt."

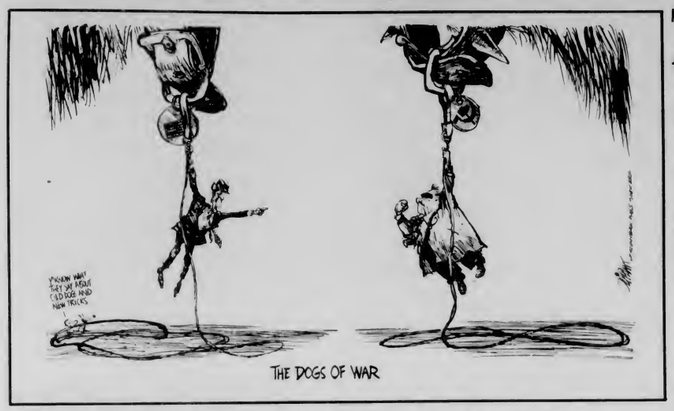
EDITORIAL/OPINION



Irish history doesn't support the I.R.A.

The IRA (Irish republican Army) is a terrorist organization which must be stopped. Their savagery against the people of Northern Ireland is an offense to Human Rights. It's shocking to see that we Americans contribute so much money to the IRA, which they in turn use to purchase communist weapons. Their claim of sovereignty over Northern Ireland and their violent actions are wrong, and we must realize this and stop supporting this terrorist organization.

Ulster (Northern Ireland) is today a distinct British Entity. Even in Prehistoric times, georgraphical circumstances gave Ulster a distinct identity seperate from the rest of Ireland. Modern North America and particularly the USA was populated as part of the same great movement of population which sent people from England and Scotland to Ulster. Ulster today is the same as either Scotland or Wales, a national component of the United Kingdom. The process by which modern Ulster was created can no more be put into reverse than that which created the United States.

David Knower

When the Irish Republic seceeded from the United Kingdom in 1921, Ulster stayed loyal to the United Kingdom. The loyalty in Ulster was strengthened by the fact of the Republic's lack of success in many areas. In a lot of ways the Republic is a failed political entity, and the need to focus attention away from these problems has brought about the Republic's attacks on Northern Ireland. Except under British rule, there has been not time, in any modern sense, when the Republic and Ulster have been politically united. When Ireland seceeded from the United Kingdom in 1921, the union of the two countries came to an end.

Because there was controversy about the demarcation of the frontier between the Republic and Ulster, a tripartite agreement was signed in 1925, ending the controversy. The agreement was signed by Northern Ireland, the Irish Free State and the United Kingdom and was registered with the League of Nations (Now the United Nations) and was also approved by the legislatures of the three signatory countries.

In 1932, the Government of Mr. DeValera came to power. His Government unilaterly broke this and other agreements to which his country had been pledged. The Government went so far as to adopt a constitution in 1937, in which they claimed sovereignty over Northern Ireland. This of course was in breach of several previous undertakings.

A referendum, asking whether the people of Northern Ireland wanted to remain part of the United Kingdom or be joined with the Irish Republic outside of the United Kingdom, was voted on in 1973. The outcome of the vote was 98.92 percent in favor of staying with the United Kingdom. Why do the people of Northern Ireland want to remain part of the United Kingdom? As previously stated, Northern Ireland is a distinct British Entity, and not a part of Ireland as the Irish claim. Why doesn't Portugal join with Spain or Sweden with Norway?

The claim of sovereignty over Northern Ireland stayed in the Republic's constitution although, in several subsequent international agreements, such as the Treaty of Rome, the Government of the Republic gave full formal recognition to "the United Kingdom of Great Britian and Northern Ireland" implying the invalidity of its own claim. This claim to sovereignty over Northern Ireland, which for a large part are directed and organized in the Republic. After committing a terrorist crime, be it a bombing, murder or any other crime, they can come back to the Republic where they will be given protection and not sent back to face trial in Northern Ireland. In 1981, there were 600 persons at liberty in the Republic whom the Northern Irish police wanted to question.

"Terrorism strikes at the rule of Law, a deliberate attack on Society." If the IRA would like to see a change in Northern Ireland, why can't they do it peacefully? There are democratic elections, such as in 1973 and those which have recently been held, and there is also a referendum on the border so that those who would like to see a United Ireland, could go about it peacefully. The IRA, however, does not attempt to get people to vote for them, but rather try to get their way with violence. This type of violence must be stopped by society.

The tired ins and outs on the heartbreak of waking up

The idea sneaks into the back of your head when one eye pries itself open to see what time it is in the morning.

The thought grows. It grows as you throw the alarm clock across the room, squeeze your head with your hands, curse the morning and roll over in bed. It will not leave you alone.

You play with the idea and smile devilishly as you float back to a blissful sleep. Maybe this time it will leave you alone.

But, just when you think you had it easy, guilt meets the foe half-way across your brain and a war erupts. The battle fluctuates between guilt and delight, and you find it hard to return to a sound sleep. Through this relentless war of endless voices in your mind, the question you must face, as you do every day, keeps pushing its way to your mouth. You fight the question. You refuse to answer. You will not let it take control of your senses. Today you have to win.

Finally, after minutes that seem like hours, you pull the covers from your sweating body. Nerves shot, you try to resist. Your attempt seems futile. Then, hit by a waft of cold morning air, you find the strength to fight the voices one more time. You dive back under the covers to safety and warmth. But, you hear the sounds once again. It's not worth it. It's just not worth it. The guilt trip begins.

They have beaten you again, it's no use. Time to give up.

You wipe your face and the voices become unbearable. There will be no more fighting. No more guilt. The war is over. You try to regain your posture. You whip off the covers-accept defeat and scream, "Alright, damn it. I'll go to class."

Jeff Potter hasn't been seen recently in his eight-o'clock class.

Town critic turns crier

On voting day, I was still Q-tipping the Halloween sky out of one ear and the yellow moon out of another, when it dawned on me that the face in the mirror should have been among the candidates for State Office (or at least, Town Critic).

My purpose in office would be first to open up a shovel factory so we could be better equipped to push the bullshit aside. I would then begin to abolish various departments that always seem to be around, even though we never voted for them:

1) The Department to Change Things Around. This department is often funded by Money Which Must Be Spent Quickly or Else the Government Will Take It Back. (Ever hear of a more stupid way of allocating improvement grants?) One example of this department's handiwork was the pavement job through town last year, which gave motorcyclists lovely cobblestone islands to get shipwrecked on during left turns.

This mysterious organization was at it again this year, with the Changing of the Hasbrouck Bus Stop. I think most commuters will agree that Hasbrouck was a fine place to park a bus, and to park one's butt, while waiting in the snow or rain for a bus. It was a good terminal for everybody, even the handicapped. It had light, warmth and a certain je ne sais quoi. One would think it was fine enough as it stood.

Steve Masse

But Noooooooooooo! This department had to go fix something that wasn't broken. The terminal is now on the far end of Hasbrouck. This means more people will be stomping over the pine roots at the side of the building to get to the Campus Center. More people will catch their death of pneumonia at this most-used bus stop (which now has no benches for people who must wait sometimes an hour for a bus). Also, more wheelchair riders will be run down because their ramp is six feet away from the crosswalk!

I can't imagine why the crosswalk wasn't painted between the handicap ramps, or why handicap ramps are so narrow. There must be an unwritten rule that says walking people need curb stones to climb up, either for health or so they will have something to trip over when they're tired, whereas wheelchair riders need ramps but not necessarily crosswalks.

Perhaps the bus stop was put where it was for "symmetry" with the one across the street. Great for snowball fights between the North Siders and the South Siders, but other than that, I don't think airplane riders will laud the Department to Change Things Around for this atrocious planning.

2) The Department of Phantom Vandals. Now I can't entirely hate the Department to Change Things Around for transplanting the Hasbrouck bus stop, without also excoriating those odious vermin who delight in ripping bathroom stalls off the walls, who knock out light bulbs, who place wads of chewed gum in strange places, and who abuse doorways and glass. If it weren't for the Department of Phantom Vandals, then there might never be an excuse for moving the bus stop, if indeed anybody might give that reason. (Efficiency be damned, if there's going to be a service, then provide the service to the people who use it, not to the efficiency "experts"!)

3) The Department of Stupid Questions. One night I was stricken after dancing by what I thought was a heart attack. I asked my friend to drive me to the UMass Health Services. Before I was checked out okay with exhaustion or hyperventilation, I was asked the following questions:

"What's wrong?"
"I can't breathe."
"Are you on the Valley Health Plan?"
"No."
"Are you on the student Health Plan?"
"No, I'm not taking courses this semester."
"Then why did you come here?"

Alas, voting day has come and gone. I am neither Governor nor Town Critic, but one citizen with open eyes and a flaming pen, writing with hopes that people will always remain the most important issue within any book of rules.

Only one of these pens is thin enough to draw the line below.

It's the extra-fine rolling ball of Pilot's remarkable new Precise Ball Liner Pen. (If you haven't guessed which one it is, look at the top photo again. It's the trim beauty on the bottom left.)
But unlike the others, the real beauty of Pilot's Precise Ball Liner is the extra-fine line it puts on paper. It glides smoothly across the page because its tiny tungsten carbide ball is held securely within a needle-like stainless steel collar.
A collar that makes the Precise Ball Liner the most durable, trouble-free rolling ball pen you can buy.
It's letter-writer's joy. An artist's dream.
A scribbler's delight.
One more fine point: the Pilot Precise Ball Liner doesn't have a big, fat price. It's just a skinny $1.19.

Black colleges survive despite economic burden

By DR. MANNING MARABLE , "FROM THE GRASSROOTS"

All educational institutions mirror the racial and class dynamics of the larger society. Black higher education was designed neither to promote the intellectual development of black youth, nor to advance the material prospects for black working class and poor people. Education for blacks, as first advanced by the white majority, was to maintain the structures of inequality within both the political economy and the culture and society as a whole.

Thus, black students and faculty who attended and taught at majority black colleges have always faced a very different set of problems than those which confront progressive minded whites at predominantly white schools. From their beginning after the Civil War and Reconstruction periods, these colleges were directly the products of racial segregation. Black scholars like W.E.B. DuBois, who graduated from Harvard with honors in 1895, were not hired to permanent posts in white universities simply on the basis of race.

The historically black college is largely the direct product of racial segregation. Ninety-one of the 107 black colleges were established before 1910. Generally underfinanced and inadequately staffed, black higher education was permitted to exist only in skeletal form during the long night of White Supremacy. As late as 1946, only four black colleges, Howard University, Fisk University, Taladega College and North Carolina State, were accredited by the Association of American Universities. In the school year 1945-46, black undergraduate enrollment was 43,878 in the black colleges. Less than eighteen hundred attended black professional schools; only 116 were then training to become lawyers. Even after the passage of expanded educational legislation, the number of Afro-Americans who were financially able to attend universities was pitifully small. By 1950, 41,000 "minority" men and 42,000 "minority" women (blacks, Asians, etc.) between ages 18-24 attended colleges, about 4.5 percent of their total age grouping. That same year, by way of contrast, 1,025,000 white males between 18-24 years old attended college, 15 percent of the total white age group. The function of the black college was, at least from the view of white society, to train the Negro to accept a "separate and unequal" position within American life.

Despite these institutional barriers to quality education, the black schools did a remarkable job in preparing black youth for productive careers in the natural and social sciences, in the trades and humanities. A brief review of one black college, Fisk University, provides an illustration. Fisk was the home for a major number of black intellectuals during the era of segregation: DuBois; historian John Hope Franklin; sociologist E. Franklin Frazier; artists/novelists James Weldon Johnson, Arna Bontemps, Sterling Brown, Nikki Giovanni, John Oliver Killens, and Frank Yerby. A number of Fisk alumni joined the ranks of the black elite in the twentieth century as decisive leaders in public policy, representing a variety of political tendencies: U.S. Representative William L. Dawson; Marion Berry, mayor of Washington, D.C.; Wade H. McCree, U.S. Solicitor General during the Carter Administration; U.S. district judge Constance Baker Motley; Civil Rights activist John Lewis; Texas State Representative Wilhelmina Delco; Federal judge James Kimbrough.

Other Fisk graduates moved into the private sector to establish an economic program for black development along capitalist lines, such as A. Maceo Walker, president of Universal Life Insurance Company. One out of every six black physicians, lawyers and dentists in the United States today are Fisk graduates. A similar profile could be obtained from Atlanta University, Morehouse College of Atlanta, Spelman College of Atlanta, Tougaloo College of Mississippi, Tuskegee Institute of Alabama, Howard University of Washington, D.C., and other black institutions of higher learning. My point here is not that these schools ever developed a clear pedagogy for black liberation, nor that they were organically linked to the daily struggles of the black masses. The conservatism of many black college administrators, as represented by Tuskegee's Booker T. Washington, is almost legend among black people.

These schools operated under the rigid constraints of race/class tyranny, and often suffered under benign-to malignant administrations imposed by white trustees and state governments. But despite these and other contradictions, the black universities have on the balance been much more open to progressive and liberal faculty — particularly during the period of the Cold War of the 1940's and 1950's. They created the intellectual and social space necessary for the development of militant political reformers, dedicated public school teachers, physicians, and other skilled professionals within the black community. Without such institutions, the nightmare of Jim Crow might still exist, and the material conditions of the black ghetto and working class would unquestionably be worse.

The Civil Rights and Black Power Movements, combined with a political shift of the U.S. government under the Johnson Administration toward implementation of some affirmative action guidelines within white civil society, accelerated this educational process. By 1970, 192,000 black men and 225,000 black women between ages 18-24 attended college.

Passage of death penalty has Mass. voters to blame

By PHILLIP JENNINGS
Collegian Staff

The results of Tuesday's elections were fantastic. Dukakis is in and King is out. We voted to send Kennedy back into the senate which is helping to take seats away from the Republicans, who only seem to believe that nuclear arms and sky high unemployment is good for the people and the economy.

Overall, the voters of Massachusetts did a great job of restoring some kind of sanity to our troubled society, or did they.

Editor's Commentary

The Death Penalty was passed by the voters of this state because they assumed it would deter crime. The death penalty is not a deterrant to crime.

Massachusetts has always been a progressively minded state. Politically we have led the nation in our policies and acts of legislation. However, by voting YES to the death penalty, the voters of Massachusetts have passed the most racist, discriminatory piece of legislation in decades.

The reason I say the passing of the Death Penalty is racist is academic. Essentially those who will be sentenced to die will be poor people. The majority of the poor people in this country, comparatively speaking are minorities, blacks and Hispanics. So the scenario becomes clearer.

It seems ironic that people who voted for a nuclear freeze, to preserve peace on a world wide scale, would vote in favor of a law to kill.

What gives the state the unquestionable right to kill and play GOD! An eye for an eye is not the best way to deter crime. It's not a punishable crime for Nixon to be directly involved in scandles within the United States government? Or it is not a crime to supply arms to a fascist dictatorship like El Salvador so that they may slaughter thousands? If these are crimes shouldn't Nixon and Reagan be sent to death row?

The civic right to vote is an important part of American democracy. It is so important that White folks invented crucial laws to prohibit Black folks from voting. Laws like "The Grandfather Clause" which only allowed Blacks to vote if their grandfathers did, were instituted as a means to keep Blacks from voting. Really, what Blacks back in 1870 had a grandfather that voted?

The passing of the Death Penalty is a most untimely occurrence. Right after we sent Governor King packing, we are left with one of his most devasting plans that he seemed so hard up on getting passed.

So now that we've made this mistake, how long will it take for those doing the sentencing to follow through and make a similar one?

We as natives of this state have much to be proud of. From a political standpoint we continue to be the leaders when it comes to progressive legislation.

But this time we can take no credit, and in fact we only have ourselves to blame.

Miller High Life
Player-of-the-Month

October's Miller High Life Player-of-the-Month award goes to Marlene Susienka. Susienka, a senior exercise science major, spent October juggling a schedule of tournaments for Jack Leaman's women's golf team and practice for the women's basketball team.

Marlene was already regarded as one of the best women golfers ever to participate in the sport at UMass prior to this year. As a sophomore she was named to the All-American team.

This year, and particularly during October, Marlene further engraved her name in the UMass record books when she won three tournaments and set a UMass home course record.

Susienka's Triple Crown:
- Yale Invitational
- AIAW's Eastern Championship
- Mount Holyoke Invitational

Knaack without the flak

DONALD KNAACK
Tuesday, November 2
Bezanson Recital Hall

BY PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

Tuesday night marked the world premiere of percussionist-composer Donald Knaack's most recent composition, "Inside the Plastic Lotus." Knaack, who has played with the Louisville Orchestra and the Buffalo Philharmonic, treated the audience to an evening of works for performer, tape, and film. Two of the three pieces he performed involved at least four different types of media, making the concert almost more of a happening.

The pieces were performed in chronological order. The first, "...For John Cage," was played on a prepared vibraphone. The prepared vibraphone is an ingenious invention of Mr. Knaack's based on John Cage's prepared piano. Instead of the paper clips, washers, and rubber erasers that Cage used, Mr. Knaack uses blocks and bells attached to different bars of the vibraphone. The composition, which consisted of three two minute pieces, sounded very simular to Cage's. Each piece used rhythmic and tonal patterns for its structure, drawing on classical motifs.

The second piece, "Dance Music I and II," was a chronology of dance music from the beginning of time until the present. It featured Mr. Knaack on percussion, a tape accompaniment, a film, and a number of inflatable objects, that he inflated with a bicycle pump. It was really great. He used the hiss of the bicycle pump as part of the aural texture. There were three "inflatable objects." The first was inflated in the form of a person meditating, with chimes from the tape in the background. The next two resembled black Romper Room punching bags with hands, one of which was inflated while accompanied by the tape. The other bag was to the tune of the tape as well as a film. The film, made by Tom Busch, was a projection of light and dark brown shapes opposite each other. The screen was in constant motion splitting down the middle, from top to bottom, left to right, and then diagonally. It was very effective, in that each division of the screen registered its own particular tone in the mind of the viewer. This made for a three-part percussion section: the film, the tape, and Knaack.

"Dance Music I and II" was written for the 1980 Warsaw Autumn Festival. There was no problem in the interaction between artist and tape or tape and film. The tape, which consisted mostly of dance music from throughout the ages, was doctored electronically so that the rhythm and feel of very disparite pieces of music blended together into a rhythmic collage of sound. All the different elements of the composition fit together quite nicely. The piece really worked well.

The featured piece of the evening, "Inside the Plastic Lotus," was the result of Knaack's five year stay in Los Angeles. It was designed to "reflect a transient society in which desires have become an obsessive reality." The piece is "dedicated to children of all ages in hope that one day they will grow up." The piece consisted of slides of Los Angeles with drum and vibraphone accompaniment. Again there was a tape playing in the background. It was less dominating than the dance music's soundtrack.

Knaack alternated between playing and standing up in front of a microphone as he pointed ironies in American life. "We're so busy shaking," he commented, "we forget to bake." Another part of the piece found him sitting on a chair behind a small table speaking about business deals with the words "cash flow" being sung in the background. At one point, he sat on the chair reading the horoscope from a newspaper while in the background voices asked "what's your sign."

"Inside the Plastic Lotus" was a very entertaining piece. It is vaguely reminiscent of Philip Glass' Einstein on the Beach. While I thought that some of Knaack's phrases were a bit too campy, it didn't detract from the piece. But then so is a better portion of American culture. The piece was well thought out and clearly expressed. Knaack's message is that consumerism is the opiate of the American masses.

As a composer, Knaack is really quite good. While I'm not sure that what he does is really all that new, the compositions never fall short in conveying their music and message. Knaack is a very fine percussionist, playing accurately and with great attention to detail. His performance on Tuesday night was realy enjoyable: music that was light and deep at the time. He seemed to have fun performing and the audience seemed to have fun as well.

The heart of Ireland

SIAMSA
The National Folk Theatre of Ireland
Tuesday, November 2
Fine Arts Center

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

The word "siamsa" means "merry-making" in Gaelic, and that is probably the best way to describe the energetic performance of the National Folk Theatre of Ireland at the Fine Arts Center. This multi-talented group of dancers, singers, mimes, and musicians treated Tuesday night's audience to a bright and engaging rendering of the lifestyle and traditions of old rural Ireland.

The concept of Siamsa was born in 1968 and has been growing ever since. Siamsa's creator, Father Patrick Ahern, wanted to preserve some of the magic of "his" Ireland — the tradition-steeped countryside — from the ravages time. The result is a series of musical sketches that revolve around the central theme of daily life in an old-fashioned Irish village. The dedicated work of all those involved in the Folk Theatre convinces one that, indeed, the heart of Ireland is to be found in the countryside.

Act I — "Samhra" or Summertime — illustrated a day in the life of a simple Irish homestead. From sunrise to sunset, this bittersweet existance was deftly portrayed through mime, dance, and Gaelic songs. All of the evening's songs were sung in Gaelic, but the mime and dancing alone were clear enough to carry the simple storylines. Of the many talents showcased in "Samhra," the playing of traditional instruments and the dancing were by far the best. In this act and throughout the show, the jig dancing in particular was outstanding.

"Cois Teallaigh" and "Casadh an Sugain," the scenes in the second act, continued in the same manner. The skill and grace with which the company handled intricate group songs and dances underlined the family spirit that allows these people to perform so well together. The troupe's sense of comic timing was perfect, and the witty mime scenes needed no words to translate.

"Siamsa an Fomhair," or "A Harvest Merrymaking," concluded the show. In the piece were both the worst and the best moments of the performance. The nightmare sequence, in which the thresher dreams of corn shocks come to life, consisted of clumsy choreography, silly costumes, and insufficient lighting. One could sense the audience's attention slipping away. This dream was followed by an ensemble Harvest Festival Dance that was fantastic. It seemed that Siamsa worked best when it adhered to its original object of illustrating village life.

The National Folk Theatre's performance was followed by long and enthusiastic applause from a delighted crowd. But the highest compliment paid to Siamsa's troupe and their marvelous show was found in the clicking heels of the departing audience trying out the dances for themselves.

Siamsa, the National Folk Theatre of Ireland, performed Tuesday night at the FAC.

The UMass Department of Music and Dance will present a concert of original American Music by Laura Klock, horn, and Nadine Shank, piano, at 8 p.m. on Friday, November 5 in Bowker Auditorium. Admission is free.

SPINAL SCREENING

AT THE

Amherst Chiropractic Center

November 1 - November 15

1. Head tilt
2. High shoulder
3. Low scapula
4. Spinal curvature
5. Low hip

Potential Danger signals of Irritated Nerves:

- Headaches, dizziness, blurred vision
- Neck pain, tight muscles, spasms
- Shoulder pain, pain down arms, numbness in hands
- Pain between shoulders, difficult breathing, abdominal pains
- Lower back pain, hip pain, pain down leg

Amherst Chiropractic Center is offering spinal check-ups and postural analysis for early detection of back problems.

TIME magazine says 75 million Americans have backache, and with each passing year, this astronomical fugure grows by 7,000,000.

Backache has become a catastrophic issue with the insurance companies and with our national economy. It is one of the top claims for disability. In addition to this, arthritis and rheumatic complaints affect 77 percent of our adult population, and every year millions sustain severe neck injuries from automobile collisions.

With the use of a few simple painless tests we will be able to determine the condition of the spine. Early detection of back problems is the best prevention for future back ailments.

The spinal screening will be offered without charge or obligation, at the

Amherst Chiropractic Center

190 University Dr., Amherst, MA

Doctors will be available for answering questions on treatment and prevention of back problems.

Homecoming sparks spikers' victory

By GERRY DESIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts womens volleyball team travelled to Southern Connecticut State yesterday and came home victorious thanks to fine home state performances by freshmen Sally Maher and Sue Mudry.

Mudry, from Fairfield, Connecticut paced the women in their first game, 15-3 romp. UMass jumped out to an early 8-1 lead thanks largely to Mudry's five aces. Mudry then finished off the overmatched Southern Connecticut team with two spikes to end game one.

The second game saw the Minutewomen hit a concentration lapse and Southern Connecticut managed a 7-4 lead. After falling behind 10-6 the mistake prone UMass team got its act together with senior Patti Philpin leading the way with two spikes.

Maher, from North Haven, Connecticut, and sophmore Karen Gottesman combined on a series of spikes and serves to bring the Minutewomen all the way back for a 15-11 win in game two.

After winning so handily in game one, it appeared as if UMass would walk over Southern Connecticut the rest of the night, but it just didn't happen that way.

"It's a hard thing not to do," said UMass head coach Elaine Sortino, explaining her team's emotional lull in game two. "We tend to fall asleep."

But boredom wasn't the only problem UMass had in game two.

"The problem was with serve reception," explained Sortino. "The team was slow to make the adjustment but I was pleased that they did adjust and won the game."

The Minutewomen had little trouble the remainder of the night with Southern Connecticut, taking the third and final game by a 15-6 score.

Again it was the homestaters making the primary contributions. Both Mudry and Maher were exceptional in game three with Mudry finishing off a good night's work with an ace to win the match.

Philbin and sophmore Patty Grant also played well helping UMass to get off to a comfortable 9-2 lead in game three.

But clearly Mudry was the player of the game. She had an exceptional night both serving and spiking.

Everyone played well," commented a happy Sortino.

It could be that the Minutewomen are now reaping the benefits of a tough regular season schedule, which included tournaments in Delaware and Maryland which pitted the young Minutewomen squad against some of the best women volleyball teams in the East.

With Philbin being the lone senior on the team and only two juniors, Joanne Siler and Julia MCMurtie, the Minutewomen appear to have a bright future in front of them.

As long as Maher and Murdy are around Elaine Sortino knows that at least they'll beat Southern Connecticut every year.

Walker, Dickinson, Elway lead Heisman race

By STEVE FITZ
Collegian Correspondent

As the end of the college football season approaches many sports fans wonder who will win the most coveted collegiate award, the Heisman Trophy.

There are several possible candidates for the award this year, but no one is dominating the college football scene like Marcus Allen of USC did last year running his way into the NCAA record books.

The one thing about the Heisman winner is that they are primarily running backs. In fact, the last quarterback to win the award was Pat Sullivan of Auburn, in 1971.

One of the most important qualities of being a Heisman candidate is playing on a top twenty team. The press tends to overshadow those outstanding players on unranked teams.

Leading the Heisman pack in the race this year is none other than the power packed Herschel Walker from Georgia. At the start of the season Walker was a sure bet to win the award. He had two fantastic seasons as a freshman and sophmore in which he led his team to a national title the first year and a top ten ranking consecutively.

Plagued by injuries earlier in the year, Walker hasn't been up to par. The 6'1", 225 pound junior uses his awesome world class sprinters speed, along with incredible strength to outmaneuver the opposition. He has broken the SEC career rushing record in only three seasons, and is sixth in NCAA career rushing.

Walker is being challenged this year by SMU's running back Eric Dickerson. Dickerson is second in the nation in rushing, while Walker is fourth, and Dickerson faces a harder schedule.

Dickerson and Walker come out of the same mold, both big, powerful, quick backs playing for two of the top teams in the country.

Averaging over 165 yards per game, Dickerson combines with teammate Craig James to form the so-called "Pony Express", one of the top backfields in the nation.

There are several quarterbacks in the running for this year's award. As expected, Stanford's senior sensation, John Elway, is having a spectacular season. He has broken several PAC Ten and NCAA records so far, and has led his team over previously unbeaten Washington. Elway is considered the leading candidate in the West.

The race for the Heisman is even so far, with Walker, Dickerson, and Elway leading the way, but with a few games left in the season, anything could happen.

AP Laserphoto

A leading player among the top 20 football teams is powerful running back Herscel Walker. He is a prime contender for the highly coveted and prestigious Heisman Trophy.

Despite this season's injuries which have limited his performance, his speed and agility have helped him break the SEC career rushing record in just three seasons. He is also sixth in NCAA career rushing.

Booters shoot down Indians, 2-0

Looking for .500 season

By GUS MARTINS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team recorded its sixth win of the season with a 2-0 victory over Springfield College yesterday at Boyden field.

In what was a perfect day to play soccer, the booters started slowly and confidently, and built up enough firepower to defeat Springfield, who was anything but exciting.

Much of the game action was centered around the Springfield goal. The kickers moved the ball fairly well but couldn't find the right combinations to score more goals.

Coach Gettler was pleased with the team performance, but wished the team could have put the finishing touches on a couple more of the many scoring opportunities they had.

"I thought we played well and we created many chances, but unfortunately we could only score two goals," Gettler said.

"Overall I was happy with the team's play and we scored twice in the first half. That's something we've only done on three other occasions this season," Gettler said.

The game's first goal was scored by Mike Gibbons at 14:57 of the first half. It came off a breakaway and Gibbons beat the Springfield keeper low on the short side, exactly where a youth soccer coach might teach a young player to put it.

But the real beauty of the goal came on two touches that preceded it. Defender Lenny Margolis cleared an oncoming ball to midfielder Peter Vasiliadis, who then sent a lovely through pass between the Springfield defense for the score.

Goal number two wasn't quite as scenic, but it did feature a step over the ball "fake you out of you're jock strap move" by UMass forward Kayvan Khatami. Khatami then centered the ball from the right corner to midfielder Tom Ushock, who then took what appeared to be a shot on goal. The ball was deflected in by freshman Mathew Dowd for the second and final score of the game.

Although the Minutemen were clearly the better team, at times it appeared that they should have slowed their pace. The Springfield team tried to rely on long passes and sheer strength.

The only problem was that their long passes created little if any good scoring chances, and they just weren't that strong a team.

The win brought the kickers season record to 6-7-1. The final home game for the Minutemen will be Sunday at 1:30 against the Black Bears of Maine.

Gettler expects that Maine will be similar to Springfield in style and ability, so expect the Minutemen to get the 500 plateau with a victory.

The booters close out the season next Wednesday with a match against the Harvard Crimson at Cambridge. A win there will ensure the team of at least a .500 season. If they do defeat Maine on Sunday they will have met their pre-season objective of a winning season.

Zulu and Zoo Disc looking to Nationals

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Both the men's (Zoo Disc) and women's (Zulu) ultimate frisbee teams from the University of Massachusetts are advancing to the Northeast Regional championship round of ultimate frisbee this weekend after strong performances in the New England championships this past weekend.

The women's team took top honors in its field when they defeated the defending women's national champs, BLU, in the New England finals last week by a score of 12-11.

The men were eliminated for a chance at their championship when the tournament's eventual winners, the Boston Hostages dropped them in the quarterfinals semifinals by a score of 16-12.

The Hostages won the title by beating the Rude Boys in the final 19-16.

Zoo Disc finished in third place overall, one spot ahead of Harvard. All four teams qualified to go to the regionals which will be held on the Boyden fields this weekend.

The Zulu team's finish was a surprise to everyone but themselves. They passed their way through Tufts, Brown and a Boston based team called Survival en route to their date with BLU.

For both ultimate teams, a top effort will be needed this weekend as competition will be much stiffer. Only the top two teams in each division will qualify to go to the national championships which are being held in Austin, Texas this year.

In the nationals, the top two teams from each of the four regions will vie for the title.

The NBA season preview: The Midwest Division

By BRIAN C. MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is the third part of a four part series previewing the NBA season.

The NBA Midwest Division isn't much to get excited about. The highlights of the division are the Iceman and the Denver Nuggets with their unending search to see how many points they can score and still lose. Dallas is up and coming, Houston will be rocketing downward, and Utah will challenge Denver for the offensive stats. Basically, this is a ho-hum division.

PREDICTED ORDER OF FINISH — San Antonio, Denver, Dallas, Kansas City, Utah, Houston.

San Antonio — The Iceman, George Gervin, has some players to work with. Artis Gilmore wil now fill up the middle for the Spurs, and Mike Mitchell can fire in some points from the forward position. Gene Banks will have to do as the power forward, even though he's small (6'-7"). Bill Willoughby, who signed as a free agent from Houston, will spell the forwards. Joining the Ice in the backcourt will be Johnny Moore, with Mike Dunleavy coming off the bench. The Spurs biggest problems are their lack of a legitimate power forward, and their bench is weak.

Denver — Denver set two NBA records last year. They were the only team to score over 100 points in all 82 games, plus they averaged 126.5 points per game. The frontcourt, Dan Issel, Kiki Vandeweghe, and Alex English combined averaged 70 points per game. If only they could get some help from their backcourt. First round draft choice Rob Williams from the University of Houston will fit into the run and gun system nicely. However, he had contract squabbles and came into camp late and overweight. Until he gets back into shape, the guard load wil fall on Bill McKinney, who lit it up in preseason. The bench features Rich Kelley and Dave Robisch, but not much else. Doug Moe will have to have patience, his team will be fun to watch, but nerve wracking to coach.

Dallas — They've got a lot of kids who just might open a few eyes. Up front they've got Mark Aguirre, Jay Vincent, first rounder Bill Garnett of Wyoming, and veteran Pat Cummings. The guard corps has been strengthened with the addition of Kelvin Ransey, who will be the point guard along with Brad Davis. Rolando Blackman and Jim Sparnarkel will be the shooting guards. Dallas went from 15 wins their first season to 28 last season. They could get it up to 35 wins this year and are only a center away from playoff contention.

Kansas City — Goodbye Phil Ford, hello Ray Williams. Williams will be expected to put some points up on the board, and along with Larry Drew will form the Kings backcourt. Up front they have some big boys, LaSalle Thompson, last years NCAA number 1 rebounder, and Steve Johnson. Throw in Kevin Loder, Mike Woodson, and Brooke Steppe and you've got a good foundation. Reggie King was a big disappointment last year, but is working hard to regain his old form. Nothing to get rattled about though when visiting K.C.

Utah — Adrian Dantley and Darrell Griffith have been the only two players that have kept this franchise above the Division II NCAA level. The Jazz acquired John Drew from Atlanta along with Freeman Williams, which should create havoc for scorekeepers. These guys can do some serious scoring. But their whole organization is a joke. To back up this point, they signed 7-4 Mark Eaton of UCLA to a five year guaranteed contract, and he didn't even start at UCLA.

Houston — They're hurting without Moses. Now they have the Jones' brothers, Caldwell and Major, Elvin Hayes, and Wally Walker up front. The guards will be Alan Leavell, Calvin Murphy and rookie Terry Teagle. Gone are Moses, Bill Willoughby, Mike Dunleavy and Robert Reid, who retired to devote more attention to his church. Houston will need a lot of prayers this year, so keep them in mind Robert.

The Houston Rockets will surely fall to the bottom of the Midwest Division without Moses to show them the way.

NCAA playoff action for women booters at home

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

It's going to be one top women's soccer game tomorrow, according to UMass women's soccer coach Kalekeni Banda, when the fifth ranked women kick off against the 10th ranked University of Rochester in the first round of the NCAA championship tournament.

UMass, which finished its season with a 14-3 record, will host Rochester, 12-3-1, at Boyden field with a 12:30 p.m. start. The game promises to be exciting and aggressive as the two teams face each other for the second time in as many years. Last year, UMass and UR met at Boyden field in the first round of the tournament and it was the Minutewomen who came out on top 2-1.

UMass had an outstanding season. Their only losses came in close games to first ranked Connecticut, 12th ranked Brown, and 20th ranked Cortland State, all away from home. The women are currently riding a nine game winning streak. All of the squads 14 wins have been shutouts and the team has not yet surrendered a goal or a loss at home.

"We can only get better," Banda said.

"We've got the talent and the talent needs to work hard. We've got freshmen who were superstars in high school, and now we've got 26 superstars on the team and only one ball. Someone has to work."

Christine Taggart was the leading scorer for Massachusetts this year with six goals and six assists. Taggart is an aggressive forward who always has many potential scoring chances. She is a threat around the net and should bear watching in tomorrow's game.

Freshman Debbie Haracklewicz, who also scored six goals, is another one to watch on Saturday. Banda has had a lot of praise for the forward who never stops hustling and going after the ball.

Other top goal scorers for UMass, which scored a total of 59 goals, were Natalie Prosser, who is usually found hovering around the net ready to put a loose ball in, Nina Holmstrom and Stacy Fionis. Also, Jamie Watson, who will run over any opponent on the field who gets in her way, Paula Stashis and Susan Bird, all scored five goals each.

Faculty Senate approves plan for campus grievance procedure

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

After nearly two years of proposals and counter-proposals, the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate yesterday approved a Sexual Harassment Grievance Procedure.

After nearly 30 minutes of heavy debate, the senate approved the procedure by a unanimous vote.

"Sexual harassment is not just an institutional problem, but one of the entire campus community. It goes beyond how it affects the institutional structure. It will be a very prudent move and a large step forward for you to pass it," said Jim Murphy, president of the Student Government Association, in a speech at the close of debate.

The sexual harassment grievance procedure provides recourse for an individual who feels he or she has been sexually harassed. The procedure also provides due process to those accused of sexual harrassment.

Trevor Robinson, a biochemistry associate professor, said the grievance board, which would be set up by the policy, would have more power than any group on campus because they could take disciplinary action against a faculty member with little recourse given to the accused.

Robinson proposed an amendment calling for the board to send their written decision on the sexual harassment case not only to the accused and the accusor, but also to the appropriate vice chancellor, allowing review of the decision.

The amendment was approved by the senate.

Now having been approved, Chancellor Joseph Duffey, who is charged with the procedure's implementation, said he expects to initiate it by the end of the semester.

According to the Grievance Procedure, "Unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors and other verbal or physical conduct of sexual nature constitute sexual harassment when: (1) submission to such conduct is made either explicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment or academic work, (2) submission to or rejection of such conduct by an individual is used as the basis for employment or academic decisions affecting such individuals, or (3) such conduct has the purpose of creating an intimidating, hostile or offensive working or academic environment."

The procedure states that anyone with a sexual harassment complaint should address it to the Ombudsman's Office. If that office fails to find some informal resolution to the problem, then formal papers will be filed with the Hearing Panel, which then appoints a hearing board to review the complaint.

Both the alleged victim and the accused will have the opportunity to present their cases to the board.

After the Hearing Panel's decision is made, the case will go to a vice-chancellor. A party dissatisfied with the decision may petition the chancellor for reconsideration.

The policy was passed by the Undergraduate Student Senate two weeks ago. The Faculty Senate first discussed the proposal at their last meeting on Oct. 21, but voted to table it until yesterday's meeting.

The adverse tide against higher education in Washington, D.C. has been "turned around" after two years of threatened cutbacks, said University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp in an interview last night.

"It's hard to predict...but I've been told by congressmen...that the attitude toward higher education has been turned around. Modifications will be made in some programs, but not the downward turn we feared a couple of years ago," he said.

Knapp cautioned, however, that even with the defeat of 27 Republican congressman in Tuesday's election, the higher education community can not expect the fiscal support government provided in earlier decades.

"I don't think we're in for the promised land returning," he said.

One of the major factors for this turn around is the recognition that education is a vital ingredient for a prosperous economic growth, especially in a time when the economy is radically changing, Knapp said.

"We're in a new stage in the economy of the nation. It will be more knowledge intense, and we're really only seeing the first stage of it now. The computer revolution will be succeeded by other kinds of research and development. The universities (nationwide) have got to get ahead of the game," he said.

Knapp was critical of the slowness of the higher education community's response to the changing nature of the world economy. He suggested the business community has a better grasp of what is needed to maintain society's growth than the higher education field.

"We're (higher education) somewhat slower in terms of thinking of the future. We've got to get ahead on that. The high technology industry understands more the importance of education than the higher education community," he said.

One of Knapp's primary responsibilities is to secure proper funding for the three campuses of UMass and to insure proper upkeep of the buildings.

Knapp expressed support of the budget recommended for UMass by the Board of Regents, but expressed concern about the need for increased funding to pay for expected collective bargarining increases for University employees.

"The regents recommendation for the University is very much in line with what we requested. The unknown quality is what's going to happen in the personal budget," Knapp said.

The authority to bargain with the faculty and professional unions has been delegated from the Chancellor of Higher Education (John Duff), to the UMass Trustee's, Knapp said. It has not been determined as of yet whether the Board of Trustees or Duff will have authority to bargain with the contract of classified employees, whose negotiations begin in December. Knapp said he will oppose the consolidation of the classified employee contracts on a statewide basis.

Knapp also outlined a possible solution to the lack of building maintenance that has been prevented because of past budget short falls.

"There is a proposal before the Board of Regents for funds in the capital outlay budget to step-up deferred maintenance," Knapp said.

Knapp's staff is currently preparing a systematic plan that they expect will pinpoint which buildings are in need of what repairs at what time and how long the repairs will take.

Knapp is looking for alternative ways to fund the deferred maintenance of the academic buildings, including private donations. Knapp has proposed that renovation of the Curry Hicks Cage be partially funded by students fees, but said it may not be necessary, hinting there was some support in the State House to fund the Cage fully with state money.

Iranians rally to honor hostage-taking

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Tens of thousands of well-disciplined schoolchildren cursing the "Great Satan" in Washington, paraded at the former U.S. Embassy yesterday on the third anniversary of the seizure of the American hostages.

The noisy but orderly crowd was much smaller than the masses that turned out spontaneously to jeer the United States during the 444-day hostage crisis.

Five-year-olds carrying posters they weren't old enough to read and teen-age girls draped in traditional black robes chanted "Death to America!" "Death to America!"

Inside the 27-acre compound and around the perimeter, scores of Iranian Revolutionary Guards armed with Kalashnikov automatic rifles patrolled the walls and walkways.

A small group of American journalists was allowed onto the grounds — the first such visit since the hostage crisis.

An American flag was burned atop the wall and then Moslem clergyman Mussavi Khoeini, spiritual mentor of the youths who seized the embassy, exhorted the youngsters to follow their elders' example.

Taking over the "spy den" was "a victory of oppressed people over a superpower," he told the students, many of them barely toddlers when Iranian militants stormed the compound on Nov. 4, 1979.

A large painting depicting the "heroic students" scaling the embassy walls on that date was held aloft by some demonstrators. Other banners and posters claimed "All our troubles are because of America" and "The U.S.A. is condemned to death."

Possible successor to Soviet president presumed retired

MOSCOW (AP) — The portrait of Andrei P. Kirilenko was missing from a gallery of Politburo members unveiled yesterday for celebrations of the Russian Revolution, apparent confirmation he has retired.

Soviet sources said the man once viewed as a potential successor of President Leonid I. Brezhnev was asked to step down from the country's ruling body.

Kirilenko's departure would reduce the number of voting members on the ruling Politburo to 12 men. There was no word on any successor.

A full member of the secretive Kremlin body since 1962, Kirilenko, 76, hasn't been seen in public since Aug. 31, when he welcomed Brezhnev back from summer vacation.

He reportedly has been in ill health for many months.

First word of Kirilenko's retirement was leaked late last month to Communist diplomats in Moscow, who in turn told Western correspondents on condition their identities not be reported.

Brezhnev's portrait led the lineup of Politburo members whose portraits were unveiled on Prospekt Mira Boulevard in advance of Sunday's celebrations of the 65th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution.

Huge portraits of the rulers will be displayed at other sites in the city for the weekend festivities, commemorating the Oct. 24, 1917 — Nov. 7 under the Julian calendar then in effect in Russia — Bolshevik storming of the czar's palace.

The portrait of Brezhnev, who turns 76 in December and is in ill health, was placed alongside one of Vladimir I. Lenin at the center, a place of honor.

Statewide crime rate declines dispite 2½

BOSTON — Serious crime in Massachusetts fell 9 percent in the first six months of 1982 compared to the same period last year and violent crime dropped 9.5 percent, the Department of Public Safety reported yesterday.

Public Safety Secretary George A. Luciano said the drop showed that the state's police chiefs have continued to provide good service, despite the cutbacks mandated by Proposition 2½.

"Like all of us in government, they have learned to do more with less," he said.

The figures showed that statewide, murder was down 2 percent over the same period last year, with 96 homicides reported for the first six months of 1982.

Forcible rape was down 10.2 percent, robbery was down 14.2 percent, burglary was down 14.5 percent, aggravated assault was down 5.8 percent, larceny-theft was down 6.1 percent and auto theft was down 7.2 percent.

Of the seven most serious crimes, larceny-theft made up the largest single percentage of the total, 44.4 percent.

The report showed that a hefty percentage of the serious crimes took place in the state's six largest cities and that 26.8 percent of the total of serious crimes occurred in Boston.

Of the five other large cities, 3 percent of the serious crimes occurred in Cambridge, 2.1 percent each in Fall River and New Bedford, 4.8 percent in Springfield and 4.3 percent in Worcester.

But the report showed that with the exception of Boston, where serious crime was up 1.4 percent over the same period in 1981, the crime rate was down in major cities.

Cambridge showed a 12.9 percent decline in serious crimes, Fall River a drop of 0.1 percent, New Bedford a drop of 5.3 percent, Springfield a decline of 6.9 percent and Worcester a reduction of 5.3 percent.

Invasion of privacy alleged in court suit

SPRINGFIELD — Jurors toured a nursing home yesterday as a trial began to determine whether Earle Spring's privacy was violated by medical staff during the Spring family's 1980 courtroom battle over his right to die.

Spring's widow, Blanche, 78, of Montague, has filed an $80 million civil suit against the Holyoke Geriatric and Convalescent Center, its administrator and several nurses and nurses' aides who treated Spring from Nov. 7, 1978 to April 6, 1980.

Mrs. Spring alleges in eight counts that the defendants violated her husband's privacy as a patient and caused her emotional distress by releasing confidential information about his health and finances.

Federal court blocks R.I. Christmas display

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — A federal court ruling that blocks Pawtucket from sponsoring a Nativity scene helps keep "Christ in Christmas," the head of the state American Civil Liberties Union said yesterday.

"One thing that needs to be remembered was the city argued in court that they should be entitled to sponsor a Nativity scene because it had lost all religious significance and had become secularized," said Steven Brown.

Wednesday's ruling by the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston came on a lawsuit filed by the state ACLU chapter.

"All the people concerned about keeping Christ in Christmas, they should be extremely upset and outraged at the city's position. The principle of separation of church and state was designed to protect religion as much as government. I think this decision does that," he said.

Brown said the decision marked the first time a federal appeals court has found a government-sponsored creche unconstitutional.

The two-year legal fight began when state social worker Daniel Donnelly complained about the display erected annually by the city for 40 years on private property.

Donnelly has since left the region, Brown said.

A U.S. District judge in Providence ruled the display unconstitutional a year ago. The city sold the tableau depicting the birth of Christ to a private group headed by former mayor Dennis M. Lynch while the ruling was appealed.

The group erected the display on private property last Christmas.

Iranian hostage's father thankful rescue failed

NEW BEDFORD — The father of former hostage Gary Lee say he thanks God that the attempted hostage rescue failed in the Iranian desert because it would have cost the lives of the 52 men held in Tehran.

The Rev. Earl G. Lee said his son told him "We'd have all died" if U.S. commandos had come over the embassy walls as planned in the 1980 raid.

He said each hostage had an armed Iranian guard nearby, and the guards would have killed the hostages and then themselves. "I think the hand of God intervened," the minister said.

Yesterday was the third anniversary of the start of the 444-day ordeal for those caught in the United States embassy in Tehran under the regime of the Ayatollah Khomeini.

The senior Lee, a native of Fairhaven is now a minister in Pasadena, Calif. He commented in an interview with the New Bedford Standard Times Wednesday night before a talk to the First Church of the Nazarene in the town where he grew up.

The minister said he believes that in the first hours of the crisis the United States should have given the Tehran regime 36 hours to free prisoners in the former American embassy or face military retaliation. He said he believes that had that been done, "they'd have been freed no matter how radical the Ayatollah Khomeini is."

Williams students start alternative newspaper

WILLIAMSTOWN — Williams College students upset with conservatism have launched a newspaper that calls their exclusive school an assembly-line producer of businessmen and a supporter of South Africa.

The Germinal — its name inspired in part by the title of a French novel about the labor movement — was published this week in response to a conservative student paper, the Republican, Germinal editor Joel Hellman said Thursday.

"With the growth of conservatism on campus, the progressive view was really lacking in publications," said Hellman, 19, of Brooklyn, N.Y.

Students wanted a progressive paper before, but the student council refused to subsidize it, Hellman said. But conservative students, financed by alumni and other sources, printed the Republican, which ridiculed feminism and other liberal causes in its debut last spring.

"People were eager to provide money after the Republican," Hellman said, adding that each paper received about $3,000 from the student council to publish this semester.

Hellman and 13 other students shared the editing duties on the first Germinal, a 12-page tabloid. Among the paper's advisers is professor James MacGregor Burns, a Pulizer Prizewinning author who ran as a Democrat against Republican Silvio Conte when Conte first was elected to Congress in 1958.

Education proposal updated for Faculty Senate

By ANNE CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

At yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting, Professor Charles Hutchinson, a member of the Ad Hoc Committee on General Education and professor of electrical and computer engineering, presented an update to a proposal which has the possibility of radically altering the current state of general education at the University of Massachusetts.

"General Education at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst," a proposal designed by a special committee of faculty members and students, was implemented last semester in order to address problems in the current structure of general education at the University.

"The preliminary proposal, which was initally presented in May, started with a basic idea to set up a committee to look at general education on campus and to identify problems. We wanted to make a proposal to remedy these problems that were identified by students and faculty," Hutchinson said.

The proposal is designed to add greater depth to courses that students are required to take outside of their major. It also suggests these courses be integrated through tutorial sessions in order to relate non-major to major courses.

"The current courses in the humanities, social sciences and physical sciences will be more extensive in content and form. There will be more breadth and integration to these courses through the tutorials which will be set up," Hutchinson said.

The proposal states that the courses will be worth four credits instead of the usual three. The courses will more demanding because they will be set up in a workshop form in order to facilitate hands-on experience, Hutchinson said.

"Every course in breadth and knowledge should have a practical component. All students should have hands on experience. They should be able to actually do something in class in order to learn more. That is why there should be four credits," he said.

The proposal on General Education is a flexible proposal that is broken down into three components: Skills, Breadth of Knowledge and Integration of Knowledge.

The skills component will emphasize more creative and quantitative writing, according to the proposal. The Breadth and Knowledge component consists of six courses approved by the General Education Council, which will be interdisciplinary in nature. The suggested types of courses brought forth by faculty and students are: Continuity and Change; Expressive Culture; The Individual Societies and their Institutions; The Biological World; and The Physical World. There will be a choice of courses in each area.

The Integration of Knowledge component is the area which stresses an advisory role, according to the proposal. This area consists of a Freshman Tutorial and a Senior Seminar.

"The faculty proposal is extremely flexible. There are many possibilities for how it would be implemented. It is a general proposal that is open for change," said Rob Thayer, a member of the Academic Affairs team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy and of the student subcomittee on General Education.

Students as well as faculty are extensively involved in the proposal. Although the student subcommittee was formed after the faculty committee, they are currently working very closely with the faculty to institute this plan.

"It is important for students to know that there are students involved. We are encouraging students to become involved with this project because it is a very important issue," Thayer said.

There are currently 12 working groups set up to research and develop each component of the proposal. The working groups each consist of one student representative, four or five faculty members and one representative of the Faculty Ad Hoc Committee on General Education.

UMass students praised for voting in record numbers on Tuesday

An increase in the amount of students registered to vote in Amherst coupled with a higher percentage of student voter turnout indicates that students at the University of Massachusetts could increasingly become a stronger political force, said Michael Ferrigno, acting state student organizer and campus organizer for the voter registration drive held during September.

Ferrigno called voter turnout "phenomenal" because between 1978 and 1982 election voter registration figures, students were registered in larger numbers and the percentages of those numbers also increased. In 1978, Amherst registered 10,789 voters for the state election and 6,719 of those people voted. This Tuesday, 13,748 people were registered and 9,211 of them turned out to vote.

During the one month voter registration drive, nearly 6,000 UMass students registered to vote, Ferrigno said.

"This is a tremendous victory, I think, for UMass," he said. "Every student who voted should be congratulated."

Ferrigno said the success of the drive and the good voter turnout are evidence that the negative reputation of the University is undeserved. UMass is frequently depicted as a party school, Ferrigno said, where individuals are immature and irresponsible. But, he said, student registration and student voter turnout proved that UMass students are mature and responsible.

The registration drive, which ran from Sept. 9 to Oct. 5, "was the most successful drive in the state and probably in New England," Ferrigno said.

Estelle Matusko, Amherst town clerk and ex-officio clerk of the board of register's, said the day ran smoothly in spite of the fact that people had to sometimes wait up to an hour to vote.

"Everyone was calm and courteous," she said.

The wait probably prevented many people from voting and the voter turnout would have been greater if there had been more voting machines, Ferrigno said. He added that by waiting in line to vote students proved they are not apathetic.

Matusko explained it is not the number of voting machines but the preparedness of the voters which causes long lines. She referred to a study done which indicated that the majority of people polled waited until they were in the voting booth before they decided how they would vote. This makes the voting process time consuming and creates long lines, Matusko said.

In Amherst, of the 13,748 voters registered by Oct. 5, 9,211 voted on Tuesday. This was a 67 percent turnout.

In precincts three and four, which are considered "student" precincts since most UMass dorms are encompassed by them, there was a 58 and 61 percent voter turnout, respectively.

Vendor policy reaffirmed by BOG in face of opposition

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Correspondent

By standing behind its rules and policies the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) has been trying to make order out of chaos on the concourse regarding vendors and vendor policies.

The BOG last night voted down two appeals for rule waivers from a Campus Center concourse vendor concerning BOG vendor policy.

Last week, flower vendor Susan Garner's "privilege" to sell flowers in the Campus Center was revoked by John Furbish, BOG vendor certification coordinator, based upon what he determined were several fraudulent actions violating provisions of the vendor policy. Furbish said Garner misrepresented her status of vendor privilege to the senior clerk for the purpose of setting up a vending table.

BOG Chairman Ron Keefe said Furbish's decision was in accordance with Vendor Table Space Policy and Procedures. Thus, when the full board denied her appeal to get her license back, they were reinforcing BOG policy which applies to everyone, Keefe said.

The BOG also denied a motion for a waiver from Section V of Vendor Table Space Policy and Procedures, which states that a person registering for a table must "appear in person and hold a current Campus Center Craftsperson Vendor I.D." The motion was a waiver on this rule to a full-time student with a schedule conflict to allow a substitute to sign-in for her or him.

Keefe reiterated his previous position that the BOG does not want to set a bad precedent concerning vendor policy because then "everyone" would want to appeal for rule waivers.

"We have a good and stable Vendor policy and we have to stand behind it," he said.

Also at last night's weekly meeting, a group of Campus Center concourse vendors expressed concern to the BOG regarding a bill that has been proposed involving consortium alliances on the concourse. This bill would identify a consortium as two or more people believed to be actively working together and would limit them to representation through one vending license.

Keefe said the Vendor Review Committee is dealing with all problems addressed to the attention of the BOG relative to the concourse rather than specifically addressing them individually.

Yesterday, in apparently an unrelated move, Garner "voluntarily withdrew" her $1,200 lawsuit against Furbish.

Board of governers proposes CC computer terminal room

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Board of Governors (BOG) last night in their weekly meeting voted to recommend an amount of space in the Campus Center be used as public computer terminal area.

The BOG said it will recommending to the Campus Center administration that Room 178 be a terminal center for the use of students in the electrical and computer engineering (ECE) department.

Recently, the ECE department received a budget increase of $200,00 to purchase and install new computer terminals on campus to accommodate the increased student demand for computer and information science (COINS) courses. The state Board of Regents of Higher Education requested the increase in the University of Massachusetts' Computing Center's budget for fiscal year 1984 last week in its budget recommendations to the governor.

With the addition of the new terminals, the next step is locating space where these new terminals can be operated.

BOG Space Allocation Coordinator Jim Keller said there is a real need for more computer space on campus. The problem, he said, is that there are always long lines among students to use the computers for homework in the existing computer centers. People have been known to wait in line until 4 or 5 a.m. for a chance to use a computer to do their homework, Keller said.

Stigma of poison will stay with Tylenol says professor

By TRICIA YACOVONE
Collegian Correspondent

It will be many years before the Tylenol Corporation is able to recover from the bad publicity resulting from the seven Chicago deaths due to cyanide poisoning after they took Extra Strength Tylenol, according to a University of Massachusetts professor.

Marc G. Weinberger, a UMass marketing professor, said his studies have shown threats to health or safety caused by leading brand name products result in plummeting sales and a loss of consumer faith.

Because Johnson & Johnson, the producer of Tylenol pain relievers and cold remedies used "line-extension" strategy to assign a series of different products the Tylenol name, all forms of Tylenol and Co-Tylenol tablets and capsules will suffer under the onus created by the fatal poisonings, Weinberger said. He added that these negative effects will not even be affected by the official absolution of guilt of the firm.

"If these and other Tylenol products had different names, the harm would have been much less," he said. "Now the negative effect will carry over."

In the face of such negative publicity, Weinberger advises the firm to take immediate steps to make medication packages tamperproof.

"Johnson & Johnson must establish absolute, impeccable credibility with product packaging," he said. "The drug reputation has always been built on safety and quality...It must be made truly tamperproof...It may be years before full faith in the pain reliever in capsules can rebound."

Weinberger said he based his advice on several studies examining products ranging from those connected with proven threats to health or safety, to products which are victims of rumors and deliberate smear campaigns.

One study Dr. Weinberger conducted concerned the reaction of the public to negative information about popular products. In the study, he said he played fabricated news reports about health hazards connected with Budweiser and Lone Star beers to a group of people. Not realizing the reports were associated with the study, people's beer preferences were evident in their answers to Weinberger's questionnaire, he said. Budweiser received an overwhelmingly negative response, he said, while Lone Star received only a small amount of ill-reaction.

Dr. Weinberger said his belief that bad publicity has an adverse effect on name-brand products was reinforced through the findings in the study.

Department of Public Safety proposes changes to tighten enforcement of parking laws

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Correspondent

Several changes regarding towable violations, the collection of parking tickets and appeals at the University of Massachusetts including the possible use of the "Denver Boot," have been proposed by the Department of Public Safety.

"The final approval of these changes will come from the Board of Trustees during their next meeting in December," said Gerald T. O'Neil, director of Public Safety. "If the public follows these rules and parks only in designated areas, I see no problem accommodating everyone."

Steps taken to increase enforcement include the hiring of persons to monitor parking meters on campus from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. and the giving the head of the parking garage authority to issue tickets and have vehicles towed.

"The main reason for these changes is to increase the collection of tickets," O'Neil said. The money collected is given to the Scholarship Fund, he said, to which more than $100,000 was donated last year.

On Jan. 1, 1982, a Massachusetts law went into effect which took the responsibility of ticket collection away from the county court system and turned it over to local authorities.

The law allows municipal government to find parking violators and use various methods to ensure collection of those fines. Since the law's passage, most towns have turned ticket collection over to professional computerized ticket collection companies.

Fines not paid within 21 days are subject to a $5 surcharge under the law. Failure to pay fines may lead to a loss of drivers license. The law also permits the use of the infamous Denver boot.

"The courts could not afford the extensive amount of time and work involved," explained O'Neil. "They just weren't collecting payment. They have divorced themselves from the responsibility of enforcing the payment of the fines."

Computer Emporium of Boston will be using a sophisticated computer system to keep track of parking violators at UMass.

Amherst man plans comeback after his rabbits killed in dog attack

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Correspondent

It's time for Joseph Prusnal to start over again.

Prusnal, 63, of 227 West St., Amherst, has raised rabbits for 27 years. But when he went out to feed the animals Tuesday morning, he found they had been ripped apart by a dog, their mutilated bodies strewn limp on the ground and in demolished cages.

"The first thing I noticed was one adult rabbit laying on the ground dead," he said. "There was a hole in the first cage. I looked in that cage and the rabbits were dead. I looked in the cage across the way, and those rabbits were dead too."

"I was stunned. I couldn't believe it," he said. "I was hoping one was still alive, but they weren't. I suppose I'll get over it, but I'll miss them."

Prusnal said this isn't the first time a dog has attacked his animals.

"We've had rabbits killed before, but never this bad. This was a slaughter." he said.

Prusnal said yesterday it is still hard for him to realize his rabbits are gone.

"It was a habit with me to go down and feed and water them. Today, I went down there to water them, and then I said to myself, 'What am I doing,' " he said.

Prusnal said he had considered giving up raising rabbits, but changed his mind.

"I was wondering, 'Why should I quit?'," he said. "The kids (Prusnal's grandchildren) enjoy the rabbits. They go down there and pick them out as pets, and then I can't touch them."

"We'll start out again with a buck and two does," he said. "That's what we'll start out with, but they usually multiply pretty fast."

Prusnal said he raises rabbits "for our own use, you know, for meat. Sometimes, we'll sell a bunny is somebody wants a pet, but we're not in it for the money."

Prusnal said at times he has had to retaliate against the dogs attacking his rabbits.

"I've shot some dogs down there," he said. "If they're molesting or attacking your livestock, you have the right to shoot them."

Amherst dog officer Jim Lennox agreed that Prusnal has this right.

"You can shoot a dog attacking livestock," Lennox said.

Police placed the value of the rabbits at $150, but Prusnal said including the demolished cages, he lost $215 in the attack.

Lennox said dog attacks on livestock happen "five to six times a year," although they normally aren't this severe. He also said an Amherst leash law states a dog must be on a leash or under voice control at all times.

Speaker says international sexual slavery is pervasive

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Although the term "trafficking women" is a euphemism in this country, the problem itself is very real and very serious, throughout the world, said an author of a book on sexual slavery last night in a lecture at Mount Holyoke College.

Kathleen Barry, a professor of sociology at Brandeis University, received a standing ovation after she lectured to about 200 people on "Female Sexual Slavery."

"The definition (of sexual slavery) I used in my book and still use is 'any woman who is in a situation she cannot get out of (in other words she has to escape) who in this situation has been sexually exploited and physically abused," Barry said.

"Trafficking women is a euphemism in this country. I found people saying 'that's over with' or 'that was in the 19th century,'" she said.

"The conditions that lead to the trafficking of women are different in many countries," she said. "But the trafficking itself is very similar."

For example, Barry said, the Japanese Mafia recently recruited 300 to 500 girls in the United States through ads offering them opportunities to sing and dance in night clubs in Japan.

"The girls are given one-way tickets, and found themselves expected to perform prostitution," Barry said.

Some of those girls escaped and tried to take refuge in the American Embassy in Japan and they were refused assistance, she said.

"The (U.S.) government's response has been consistently they (the mafia) broke no laws," she said. "Yet, we have laws against pimping."

Barry used incentives offered by Japanese businesses as examples of trafficking women across international boundaries.

In Korea, "there is considerable business in sex tourism. Incentives are given for selling the most computers," she said., Packaged sex tours to Korea given to where "the women are more submissive" than Japanese women. In 1978, 667,000 Japanese visited Korea. Ninety percent of those tourists were men, she said.

"We assume most men found their way to women who were more exploitable," Barry said.

"It is important for us as feminists to make it clear that sex is not an automatic right of men," she said.

In areas of extreme poverty, direct purchase of young girls is used, she said. But in the United States and Europe, the most frequent method used is feigned love and friendship. Pimps hang around places where runaways gravitate to in cities and pretend they want to help.

Barry said the first step in stopping the trafficking of women across international borders is to make prostitution legal.

"First get the laws off the women's backs. Decriminalize prostitution and increase the criminalization of pimping," she said. "What has never been tried before is the simultaneous decriminalization of women, the increase of prosecution of pimps and having a massive set of support services for prostitutes.

"That hasn't been tried becausc of the double standard morality which says we can have prostitutes and punish them too," she said.

"We've got a very big job ahead of us and no one told us it will be easy, but it is certainly worth the work," she said.

Displaced professors offered a haven by local program

By TRICIA YACOVONE
Collegian Correspondent

Because the present economic situation affects even the most qualified of our work force, Five College, Inc. has developed The Associates Program to aid "academics who for one reason or another find themselves between jobs, or who are working independently without being connected to a college or university," said Pat Murphy, Five College coordinator.

The Associates Program, a developing project of Five College, Inc., could be called "a halfway house" for Ph.D.'s, Murphy said. It is especially important at this time when there are high tenure ratios and difficulties in attaining job relocations for college faculty, he said.

The program, which offers appointments of up to two years, buffers the effects of economics on the scholars by providing them with an academic affiliation which heightens their chances for receiving grants or employment.

Most grants are given to scholars who are affiliated with an academic institution, regardless of their qualifications, Murphy said. For example, Barbara Osborne, a Five College associate and researcher, recently moved here with her husband, who received a teaching position at Amherst College. Amherst College cannot accept grants for spouses of its faculty, such as Osborne, which would result in the end of her research due to lack of finances. Fortunately, the Five College Associates Program provides the academic affiliation Osborne needs to secure a grant.

Murphy said the program is also "psychologically important" for the eight scholars in the Five College program who are qualified but are having difficulties in finding the right job. He said the scholars often feel displaced without an academic affiliation. The Associates Program provides the academic affiliation which sustains morale and increases the chances of securing a job for the associates.

The program is different from a Fellowship in that it offers no stipend. Associates, for the most part, are spouses of Five College faculty.

In just its beginning stages, the program has already been awarded a Certificate of Achievement and $5,000 from the Academy for Educational Development.

Five Colleges, Inc. provides the associates with the entire third floor of the Five College Center on Spring Street in Amherst, complete with file cabinets, a typewriter, office supplies, a photocopier, secretarial services and a telephone.

The eight associates selected for the program were nominated by each of the Five College institutions and were selected finally by a Deputies/Deans committee. All live in the Five College area.

Women's center helps women face sexist society

By CAROLYN ASSA
Collegian Correspondent

Women intimidated by society because of their sex turn to the counseling services offered by the Everywoman's Center (EWC) at the University of Massachusetts for help.

Many women have eating problems and low esteem because of pressures to conform to what they feel society expects them to be, said Suzanne Slater, a therapist and counselor at the Center.

"Women that come here seem to chose it because of the issues they're confronting and because they are female," Slater said.

Slater said she feels the things that have made the counseling services so successful are the sensitivity the therapists have towards women's issues and feminism, and the free cost of services. These services are offered free of charge for women in the local community as well as those on campus.

"I feel it (counseling services) offers unique service different than others in the area," Slater said.

The EWC's counseling service similar to that offered by the University Health Services. There is a "good working relationship" between the two, Slater said, although the two offices refer back and forth, the records at the Everywoman's Center are separate from Health Services', and are private. The main difference between both services is that the counselors at Health Services are doctors, while those at the Everywomen's Center are social workers, she said.

"We offer personal counseling, individual, family and couple counseling, and in addition, we offer support groups," Slater said. This service has been in operation for ten years. The counseling staff is comprised of three people; Slater and two therapists whom she supervises, she said.

"There's always more we can do in public relations, but we get many, many more requests from women than we can talk to."

Counseling is only of seven services offered at the Everywoman's Center. Slater said the thing that makes the Everywoman's Center so successful is the way the staff approaches women.

"We are all feminists here," Slater said.

Women's counseling spurred by increased violence

By ANNI GARDNER
Collegian Correspondent

With rape being one of the fastest increasing crimes nationally and wife battering occuring once every 18 seconds, there is a need for Counselor/Advocates.

Counselor/Advocates provide one of the only rape crisis centers to serve Hampshire and Franklin Counties, said Cathy Roach, coordinator of the Counselor/Advocates Program at the Everywoman Center at the University of Massachusetts.

"The primary experience of women who have been assaulted is one of isolation. We can help to offset that. Recovery depends upon a strong support system, and upon believing, not blaming the victim," Roach said.

Services provided by the Counselor/Advocates include sharing information with women regarding legal and medical procedures so each woman may make her own decisions regarding what action to take. Support groups, short and long term counseling, referral, and training sessions for medical personnel to sensitize them toward sexual assault issues, and advocacy are also offered, Roach said.

Last year, Counselor/Advocates provided 172 people with confidential individual and group counseling. Roach said there are primarily two groups of women who call Counselor/Advocates. The first group is women who were raped or battered within a few days of the call, and the second are those women who were assaulted sometime in the past and wish to deal with issues surrounding the assault which are continuing to affect their lives, she said.

Students interested in pursuing a non-traditional major find recourse through the flexible BDIC program

By BOB STACK
Collegian Correspondent

Students who feel conventional majors are not tailored to their own unique interest have an alternative to normal university curriculum.

The Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) program is designed to give University of Massachusetts students an opportunity to study in their own particular area of interest.

"The program is good for students with a specific need," said Diane Schneeberger, a 19th and 20th Century Art and Literature major from Boston. "It is for students who want to devise something for themselves and are not satisfied with the traditional major."

BDIC offers qualified students the opportunity to design their own interdisciplinary program of study under faculty guidance. The process calls for a personal academic design called a "Proposal."

In the Proposal, students outline their background; future goals; prospective courses related to their concentration, which may include limited amounts of field experience and/or independent study; and the rationale behind course choices.

Once this proposal is completed, it must be approved by a faculty member in a related department and then by a BDIC supervisor.

Schneeberger, who said she was recommended to BDIC by a professor, said the program provides an alternative.

"I liked Art History and English but I didn't want to limit myself to one," she said.

Ira Kitmacher, a senior from Pittsfield, said he discovered the program in the first semester of his junior year. He was a College of Arts and Sciences major interested in Business and Communications but was seeking something more individual. His major is now Human Resources Administration and he is a peer advisor in Business and Law in the BDIC office.

"The opportunities for practical experience in BDIC are very good," Kitmacher said.

BDIC is for everyone, not just a certain few, as programs range from Mass Media in the Third World and Biological Illustration to Human Sexuality Counseling.

Eligibility requirements include full-time student status, four semesters in the BDIC program, and completion of the University core and graduation requirements.

Eighty percent of BDIC graduates are either working at jobs related to their concentrations or enrolled in graduate study, according to their 1975-78 alumni surveys.

WFCR seeks to offer its audience diversity and an alternative choice

By PAM MADNICK
Collegian Staff

Broadcasting that offers diversity and alternatives reaches the ears of radio listeners who tune their dials to WFCR 88.5 FM. Dedicated to serving the community, WFRC is the Five College public radio station operated from Hampshire House at the University of Massachusetts.

Acting Programming Director John Montanari said the role of public radio is "to provide alternative programming to what's available elsewhere on the dial. That's both in music, news and information. We don't have to break up our programming with commercials."

Over half of the programming is classical music. Five College Radio also broadcasts weekly six hours of jazz music and several hours of folk, two hours of radio drama, half an hour of children's programming, four hours in Spanish, one hour in French and several in-depth news programs. In addition, the station has "minority interest" programs which feature public affairs, talk shows and music.

"We are not required to carry any specific programming," Montanari said in explaining the station's affiliation with National Public Radio (NPR). He said four or five programs at any one time could be picked up from a satellite to be used live or taped for later use. These programs come either from NPR in Washington, D.C. or radio stations that produce large scale programs. No more than 35 to 40 percent of the programming is done in Hampshire House.

Staffed by 13 full-timers, nine part-time employees and many volunteers and interns, WFCR's broadcasting range reaches from Putney, Vermont in the north to Southern Connecticut in the south direction, and from Worcester in the east to the Berkshires in the west.

Five College Radio is funded by listener support, government funding, corporation underwriting and by other means. In a listener support pledge drive held last week, the station raised $55,000, which will pay for half the station's expenses during fiscal year 1983.

About one of every ten listeners contributes, Montanari said, with the average pledge being $35. But, he said, most students put $10 towards their membership.

Montanari said his original hopes were to raise $70,000 during the drive. At midweek, the station stopped announcing the original goal, having decided their aim was too high for a college community-based station.

"Essentially, it (financial support) all comes from the public," Control Board Operator John G. McDonald said.

The peak of the drive came Friday and Saturday when the station raised $10,000, bringing the total to $46,000 early Saturday night, McDonald said.

Student I.D.'s are crucial

To the Editor:

The UMass I.D. card. Your key to everything on campus. Well, almost everything. It seems that the importance of presenting an I.D. card gets lost at certain places on campus. These places are the recreational facilities at Boyden and NOPE. For some strange reason, UMass students, faculty and staff do not feel the need to show an I.D. when using these facilities.

The reason I know this is because I have worked as a Recreational Activities supervisor over the past two years. Yes, I am the person who asks for your I.D. And you are the one who tells me, "I forgot it;" my dog ate it;" "I didn't know we needed it;" the list of excuses goes on.

I'm the one who gets hassled because I dared ask you for your I.D. It seems kind of ironic that I should get the abuse. I'm only trying to protect you. I bet you'd be the first person to complain if all the squash courts were taken up, and two people playing didn't go to UMass. You see, that's what happens when people without an I.D. still get to use the facility.

Have you ever tried to cash a check at the Campus Center without an I.D.? They'd laugh in your face. Or tried to eat at the D.C. without it? They'd let you starve. Ever try and take a book out of the library with no I.D.? You haven't got a prayer.

My point is, don't lose sight of the purpose of having an I.D. It's for your benefit. And don't assume that the recreational facilities can do without your I.D. They can't the people who ask for your I.D. are only doing their job. Don't make it difficult for them. If a picture's worth a thousand words, you could save a lot of explaining by presenting your I.D.

Weekender turns a stomach

To the Editor:

If you have to pay two dollars or one dollar extra for chicken and pasta then what kind of food are the rest of the students getting on the weekend?

I've payed for a meal plan, and that's what I would like on the weekend. I'm not rich and I shouldn't have to shell out extra money for halfway decent food.

Also, there is no excuse why vegetarians must starve on the weekend. The choice every weekend lunch and breakfast have been eggs, meat, or some dried up cheese pie. In the evening it is vegetables thrown together with meat. We are humans not animals.

Coke machine needs change

To the Editor:

I consider myself quite tolerant, but I find technology's latest in beverage vending machines absolutely unbearable. Sitting across from the Mini-Store, the talking Coke machine ruins what was a most comfortable and conducive studying and leisure reading atmosphere in the Cape Cod lounge. Now, from any seat in the lounge one is forced to hear that monotonous pseudovoice superimposed over an abhorent and unmusical rendition of "Greensleaves" of all melodies; the giggles of titillated customers consistently follow. Those occasional few who know the machine well keep it in suspense by putting in a nickle at a time while those of us in the Cape Code lounge are treated to eight choruses of "you need to put in more money." Personally, I can't believe people allow themselves to be patronized by this insulting contraption. I wish more soda drinkers would take pride in their intelligence by putting in correct change without computer assistance and muzak accompaniment — while restoring peace to the Cape Cod lounge.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Who will win the battle of the burger?

"This couldn't be happening," I thought. Like Alice in Wonderland, I searched my brain for lists of things to be consumed and things not to be consumed. No, no problem there. Reality was the only remaining alternative.

Looking up at me from the intellectual wasteland of the TV, and with big, baleful eyes at that, was an irate little girl of about eight who asked me with childish perturbation, "Do I look twenty percent smaller to you?" Twenty percent smaller than what? An average sized Real person? My 1959 hand-me-down "Midge" doll?

Mary Beth Hebert

An even worse Reality hit. This was no ordinary munchkin customarily touting cereal during the Family Hour. Instead, this juvenile, with a face somewhat distorted by a wide-angle lense, was spearheading a national smear campaign for Burger King against McDonald's and Wendy's. Unbelievable.

As the weeks went on, things just kept getting worse. Almost every one of my favorite, Moral Majority approved TV shows were interrupted by smirking actors posing as Burger King employees. Listening to these people extol the virtues of charcoal broiling over frying and the "Whopper" over the "Big Mac" and Wendy's "Single" was making me lose my appetite.

I was at a loss to figure out why a nationally recognized fast-food chain was making a direct frontal assault on its competitors. It's not like they're starving or anything. And I thought that this sort of slingshot campaign was indigenous only to those second-rate companies with nothing much to lose. (How many people drink C&C cola by choice?) You see, like many other capitalist pigs, I grew up with the notion that somehow it just wasn't right to overtly employ the name of the competition in a derogatory advertisement. And that it simply wasn't proper to come right out and say that. It's pretty damn rude to talk down about someone in front of millions of people.

Meanwhile, October headed on its yearly path toward November and Election Day. You know, Election Day. The day when more than half of the registered voters exercised their constitutional right not to vote. Politicians rich enough to pay their way through the primary were planning on spending their way to the office of their choice. In some hotly contested races, candidates had to go to other measures to win these coveted seats in our nation's capital.

And what to my wondering eyes did appear? No miniature sleigh with eight tiny reindeer (although I'm still hoping). Political candidates pulling the same sleazy moves that Burger King was. Charges flew over the media. This candidate is in favor of prostitution and pornography. That candidate provided a "forum" for "bigotry and hatred." Another lived in rent-free apartments supplied by wealthy businessmen. Instead of responsible people wanting to serve their states and towns, they were like a group of malevolent children snitching on their platmates. Sounds reminiscent of the Burger King tyke, doesn't it?

"Sticks and stones may break my bones but names will never hurt me." Despite their devilish insinuations, Margaret Heckler, Ray Shamie and Jerry Brown all lost their races. And I'll never eat a "Whopper" again.

UMass and reality - one view

To the Editor:

Recently I have been impressed by the quality of two undergraduate UMass women's columns on university life. Only by interacting with and personalizing meaningful dimensions of this experience can one move toward actualizing his or her unique potentialities.

Not to minimize the often excruciating search for identity, it seems upward mobility and its bothersome inverse, alienation, are accepted as the fundamental, if often antagonistic world views (Weltanschauungs) at the university. Yet, is not a rejection, of say, materialism by some of the intelligentsia, but another, albeit trendy, construction of an "Us and Them" schism with all the lost possibilities for interaction and sharing among groups that this entails? Psychologically, belonging is important but the contemporary student must strive to transcend artificial barriers between human beings due to their membership in out-groups.

Is not the pervasive hedonism simply another mythology? As a distorted drive for solidarity, idolizing the primacy of the flesh, it is irresponsible given the predicament of the world.

The age we are entering invites a communion of human beings in creative and courageous ways. As Thomas Merton states in the 1960's, to be called "well-adjusted" in this world is not flattering. Does society offer its "well-adjusted", its passive followers, vinegar or hemlock to quench their thirst?

Put the blame where its due

"Rapist's wife blames wine!" That is the headline from an actual news story, and not a story-line from the editors of the National Lampoon. The article went on to say that an Edwardsville, Illinois man, "downed a bottle of wine and then raped a neighbor." The man was convicted of rape and received a sentence of 10 years in prison. The wife of the convicted man, "claiming the wine caused the attack," is suing the wine company for $10 million.

Doug Brassard

While the wife's claim is a little more original than "the devil made him do it," it would be ironic if she received a $10 million payment for her husband's commission of such a vile crime. But that is what her winning of the suit would amount to. It would also set a dangerous precedent for manufacturers to be held liable for the actions of individuals. Imagine a convicted murderer claiming that "Kojak" was reasonable for that crime; or consider the possibilities if Lizzie Borden had claimed that the ax manufacturer was the culprit.

It is in this same light then, that it seems strange that U.S. firearms manufacturers might be held liable for the actions of individuals who use their product illegally, or unsafely. Firearms manufacturers in the U.S. for the most part use extreme care in the manufactur of their product. Think of how often you have seen recalls made on U.S. automobiles, but when was the last time you heard of a U.S. made firearm being recalled for any reason. Safety and quality are key concerns of any manufacturer. Firearms manufacturers such as Smith and Wesson, and Colt have been in business since the middle of the last century, you don't stay in business that long making junk.

Contrary to what many people may believe, the sole function of a firearm is to send a projectile down it's barrel. Whether that projectile is discharged by a police officer at a dangerous felon, or by a target shooter at a distant paper target, or by a felon in the commission of a crime, is an individual matter. Certainly the felon should be punished for committing a crime, especially with a firearm. But should the target shooter be punished for the simple pursuit of his sport? Should the many legal owners of firearms be punished because of the criminal actions of the few illegal owners?

This last question brings to mind an observation made recently by Mark Russell, the Washington columnist. He noted that several communities across the country were banning certain dictionaries from their public schools. The reason being, that these dictionaries contained several "objectional" words. Mr. Russell felt that it was a shame that because of the few "objectionable" words, all the good words would also be banned.

And so it is in this country that certain groups would seek to ban the rights of the many, because of the misdeeds of the few. F.B.I. statistics show that less than 0.19 percent of all firearms in the U.S. will be criminally misused in any given year, or to put it another way 99.8 percent of all firearms in the U.S. are not involved in a crime in any given year. In fact, a recent study done on this campus finds that, "There is no compelling evidence that private weaponry is an important cause of...violent criminality."

Isn't it time that we put the blame where it's due? We should lobby for legislation against the criminal users of firearms, and not against the legal, peaceful owners of firearms.

One of the reasons the Senate put off voting on the policy at its meeting two weeks ago was because of a misunderstanding of how the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) felt about the policy. Robert Jones, a history professor and MSP spokesman, clarified the MSP position yesterday. The organization believes the policy to be "the best policy we are likely to get," he said. "Therefore we accept it."

Chancellor Duffey must now appoint the 13-member Sexual Harassment Hearing Panel. The Hearing Panel will be made up of two faculty members, two members of the professional staff, four classified employees, two undergraduate students, two graduate students, and one administrative representative.

The procedure has been approved by all necessary groups — the Board of Trustees, the Undergraduate Student Senate, and now the Faculty Senate.

The final section of the policy, which makes it clear the current policy may not be the final version, states, "It is understood that these procedures will be reviewed after a one-year implementation period and modified as necessary upon consultation with interested groups on campus."

Communications theory has various applications

By TOM SEXTON
Collegian Correspondent

A new communications theory is currently being applied by a University of Massachusetts professor to everything from parenting to marketing.

The theory, Neuro-Linguistics Programming, utilizes the interpretation of body language and speech inflections to provide an interviewer, salesman or professor with the best way to address an audience.

"Basically, NLP is tailoring your approach to the reaction of your subject," said Dr. Larry Rosenberg, associate professor of marketing in the School of Business Administration.

NLP grew from the work of two researchers at the University of Santa Cruz, Calif.: John Grinler, a linguist and Richard Bandler, a psychologist, Rosenberg said.

The name is a merger of terms from the behavioral sciences and computer language. "Neuro" refers to the function of the nervous system, and "linguistic" to speech patterns. "Programming" implies the attempt to control a situation.

He said they sifted through the techniques used by some great communicators and came up with three basic devices common to all of them: "building rapport with the subject, understanding where the subject is coming from and using a communication style that is elegant and at the same time persuasive."

Having studied NLP for two years at the New York Training Institute for Neuro-Linguistic Programming, Rosenberg said he feels NLP can be applied to virtually any field.

"NLP is a model of how effective communicators operate. Wherever there is a need to communicate, NLP can be applied," he said.

As a professor, Rosenberg said he finds NLP useful in the classroom.

He said, "We're too inclined to say a slow student has a learning problem. NLP places the responsibility on the teacher. A teacher has to find the best approach for how a person learns."

Applying NLP to sales and marketing, Rosenberg said, "In selling, we can't accept that some 'get it' others don't. We have to single out the problem areas and do something about our approach."

The success of the techniques employed NLP is easily measured. Increased sales, higher exam grades, and closer parent-child relationships achieved by Rosenberg's former clients and student indicate NLP is effective.

"I want to stress, however, Rosenberg said, "that NLP, like hypnosis, can't be used to talk a person into doing something against his will."

• Pain between shoulders, difficult breathing, abdominal pains
• Lower back pain, hip pain, pain down leg
Amherst Chiropractic Center is offering spinal check-ups and postural analysis for early detection of back problems.
TIME magazine says 75 million Americans have backache, and with each passing year, this astronomical fugure grows by 7,000,000.
Backache has become a catastrophic issue with the insurance companies and with our national economy. It is one of the top claims for disability. In addition to this, arthritis and rheumatic complaints affect 77 percent of our adult population, and every year millions sustain severe neck injuries from automobile collisions.
With the use of a few simple painless tests we will be able to determine the condition of the spine. Early detection of back problems is the best prevention for future back ailments.
The spinal screening will be offered without charge or obligation, at the Work perfect for play

MEN AT WORK
Tuesday, November 3
Agora Ballroom, Hartford

By SAUL NATANSOHN
Collegian Correspondent

Once in a while you're lucky enough to catch a band that's just recently become a hit, before the aspects of stardom have gotten to the members' heads, before the profits from T-shirt sales start rolling in, and before their name becomes a household word. At this point, a band is totally unselfish in its attitude towards their fans, visibly enjoying themselves rather than just going through the motions. Today's band at the threshold of stardom is called "Men at Work," and they are destined to become one of the most talented groups in music today.

Men at Work is an Australian quintet that has its own blend of airy, danceable pop that is unlike anything this hemisphere has to offer. Their show Tuesday night was flawless in execution, and the crowds enthusiasm stimulated them to go on and just have fun with their instruments. The playful stage antics of singers Colin Hay and Greg Ham were complemented by the musical synthesis of Ron Strykert, Jerry Speiser and shy John Rees into a well-oiled musical machine.

There is nothing at all mechanical about the band's refreshingly spontaneous style, however. Highlights included "Down Under," a song with a raggae-like tempo and an upbeat flute solo that had the standing room only crowd swaying with delight. "Who Can It Be Now," the band's first American single, started off with an intense, sizzling guitar solo by Ron Strykert with Ham's distinctive saxophone cutting in triumphantly. Strykert is an amazing guitarist by anyone's standards, and his leads were a potent part of the band's inherent togetherness. Jerry Speiser attacked his drum set with an eager vengeance, and his duet with funky John Rees on bass affirmed the bands truly wide range of talent. Add to this Colin Hay's high, clear voice and you've got a band that has true potential to become a big name act.

With the success of Men at Work's first album comes the task of cutting a comparable follow-up; rock history is filled with bands that haven't succeeded in this respect. Let's hope that they attain that stardom, they keep that innovative energy which flows when they get onstage. With the talent they've got, it would be a pity if they lost it.

The musical transformations of the Pat Metheny Group will come to Smith's JM Greene Hall next Friday.

Metheny is released

By TOM FAISON
Special to the Collegian

"Friday evening, November 12, at 8:00 PM, the JM Green Mall on the Smith College campus will be the site for musical transformations of the Pat Metheny Group."

Can you believe that sentence?!!! The Smith College part isn't so bad but that "musical transformations" bit is outrageous. Over the years, in their attempt to find new adjectives for the same musicians, publicists have really gone out on a grammatical limb with their press releases. A group called "Music in the Air" which is currently representing Pat on his current tour, is no exception.

Just try some of these press release phrases on for size:

"He has performed straight-ahead jazz ("80/81")..."

(as opposed to what? Vacillation jazz? Round the corner jazz? Dirty closet jazz? I've had this album for years and straight ahead is the last thing that comes to mind when you hear it.)

"Music imbued with rock"

(Why couldn't they just confuse us with the word fusion?)

"quasi-classical Impressionism showcasing the full range of his technical vituosity"

(Isn't that great? That is some phrase. Anyone who can figure it out should come to the Collegian Arts Desk for free tickets to the next Joe Spinnel Film Festival. I myself am a fond admirer of post-impressional classicism.)

The rest of the press release was okay for the most part because it limited itself to details of who Pat will be playing with: (Lyle Mays, Steve Rodby, Dan Gottlieb and Nana Vasconcelos) And where one might find tickets if one was so inclined to buy one (Platterpus Records, Food For Thought, Ticketron and of course lovely Smith College itself.)

After all I shouldn't get too mad at these people because Pat's music is hard to explain to anyone who hasn't heard it; and his career probably has been restricted because his inability to break into the mainstream (although he is probably one of the most successful Jazz musicians today) through image problems or just the specific nature of his music.

Other first rate musicians touring today all suffer from the originality of their music. For instance Joan Armatrading has been labeled "a black act", "a country act", "a rock act" and of course "a jazz act." Since her records are sold in record stores in any one of these sections her records are sometimes hard to find. But fortunately, critics and fans are starting to accept her style as strictly her own and her records can now be found in just the "A" section.

Canada's Bruce Cockburn also suffers from this classification dilemma. When he played in New York last year he was promoted as little more than a folk singer so the only people who went to see and hear him play were previous fans, groundlings and critics from The Rolling Stone.

The reason why I write about this at all is because these people will be in the area soon and it would really be a pity if they were again catagorized by those who hadn't know them and denied the opportunity to widen their audiences. I know it does sound trite but The Pioneer Valley does offer the chance to hear different groups and Pat Metheney is a good place to start.

Sal Baglio of the Stompers, who will be at the Blue Wall along with the Valentines tonight.

If you're like myself, you're probably somewhat nauseated at the prospects of another weekend of the Valley's best: the Atlantics plodding through the same uninspired songs you've already heard a zillion times (in the same order, no less), Max Creek recycling Dead tunes you considered pretty lame the first time you heard them, and the Neighborhoods hosting another crash and bash slam-fest (who cares if they've got a new bassist). So maybe this isn't Kenmore Square, but cheer up; you've just got to look a bit harder, that's all.

At the Blue Wall: yes, you've heard it right folks, the hardest working band in the entire world — the Stompers — have finally landed a recording contract on the Boardwalk label. And God knows they've just about toured themselves into oblivion trying to get this far. They'll be playing tonight along with the Valentines.

At the Rusty Nail: the, ulp, Atlantics will be playing along with Justin. Need I say more?

At Sheehans in Noho: tonight it's the contemporary jazz-fusion sounds of Urban Renewal.

The Scientific Americans will be making a rare local appearance at the Hangar this Sunday night. Better check out their sensibility-smashing brand of Kraftwerk-esque technopop before they become big stars and move to NYC. You might want to give a listen to their newest effort, Load and Go! on the ROIR cassette-only label before you head over.

Aw nutso: The English Beat's November 16th performance at the Campus Center Auditorium is officially sold out. Hey, wait one second. It seems WMUA, in their infinite generosity, has decided to give away not only a pair of tix to the English Beat, but also a pair of backstage passes and dinner for two at Plumbley's to top it all off. What's the catch? All you have to do is come-up with a rap with the title of a Beat song repeated twice therein. Just call WMUA at 545-2877 Tuesday and give them your rap over the phone. They'll put it on tape and broadcast the winner Wednesday afternoon. Gee, it looks like I won't have to stay home Friday night and watch the Dukes of Hazard after all.

Jazz-rock fusion artist, Pat Metheny, will be performing at 8 p.m. on November 12, at John M. Green Hall, Smith College. Tix are $8.50 and $9.50. Despite the woefully uncomfortable seats at Green Hall, this should prove to be an exceptional show. I suggest you just bring something soft to sit on.

Outer Limits: Missing Persons, November 16 at the Agora, West Hartford... Greg Allman Band, November 16, at Flatt Street, Brattleboro, VT... Jerry Garcia Band, November 13 at Bushnell Auditorium, Hartford... Aerosmith, November 9 at the New Haven Coliseum... Billy Joel, November 17 at the Centrum, Worcester.

Outer outer Limits (or "In Case You're in Boston Visiting Your Grandmother"): Oh, no! It's Devo, November 11 at the Orpheum.. the Pat Metheny Group, November 12 at the Orpheum... George Thorogood, November 23 at the Bradford Ballroom. And I can't help but plug the Channel: tonight, it's the Fleshtones. Next Wenesday, the Gun Club.

Best bets on home-grown vinyl: the debut EP by the Boston-based Young Snakes, Bark Along with the Young Snakes (Ambiguous) is hot stuff as is Mission of Burma's debut LP, Vs. (Ace of Hearts). If you thought their EP was a punch in the stomach, this one will totally bowl you over.

And speaking of vinyl, there will be a record convention — the Northampton Record Show — from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. this Sunday at the Elks BPOE Lodge, 43 Center Street, Northampton. "From Beatles to Buzzcocks to Blues to Broadway," says the press release. Sounds interesting enough.

Tamasaburo Bando as Princess Shirayuki in Demon Pond.

Demon Pond all wet

Demon Pond
Directed by Massahiro Shinoda
Pleasant St. Theatre

By ELAINE SENAY
Collegian Staff

Massahiro Shinoda's Demon Pond is throughly enjoyable until you get to the end; the special effects people for this film should be taken out and shot.

Other than this small detail, Demon Pond is brilliant mainly due to the performance by the kabuki actor, Tramasaburo Bando. Bando is an onnagata, an actor in the kabuki theater who specializes in female roles. Here he plays two roles, that of the heroine Yuri and the Princess Shirayuki.

The story centers on the area around Demon Pond. Yamasawa, played by Tsuramu Yamazaki, is a scholar who has come to the region to see this Demon Pond. He finds that the village below the pond has suffered from drought for the past 2 years. He is astonished to find a house with a river right next to it.

Yuri and her husband Akira, played by Go Kato, live in this particular house just above the village. She tells him that the source of the river is Demon Pond.

Legend has it that a Dragon God lives at the bottom of the pond and if the bell that Akira tends is not rung 3 times a day, the village will be inundated by a flood. Eventually Yamasawa discovers that Akira is his long-lost brother and the two are reunited.

Slowly the audience is drawn into an almost film within a film when night falls and all the supernatural creatures inhabiting the area appear. We are taken to the abode of the Princess Shirayuki who is a beautiful emobodiment of the Dragon God. These scenes in this mystical land are delightful as a change of pace. The audience isn't provided with a straight plot, instead director Shinoda uses this sub-plot as a way of providing the audience with more information. This helps the audience to appreciate the legends and characters more.

Demon Pond is a rich film in terms of the story and the performances by a truly capable cast. But when the film reaches its climax, the film begins to wallow in melodrama of the sappiest kind. Yuri is to be sacrificed by the villagers who believe it will bring rain. Akira and Yamasawa arrive just in time to save her. But Yuri soon realizes that harm will come to all of them if she doesn't kill herself. When she does commit suicide to save the two brothers, Akira decides not to ring the bell and destroys everything. Thus we come to the ending that was a real disappointment: the flood.

All I could think of when I watched this flood sequence was the old Godzilla movies that you used to watch on television as a kid. Remember how you used to be treated to the destruction of Tokyo every week? Well you can relive those days again at the end of this film. I didn't believe for one minute that these ignorant villagers were being swept away by the flood waters.

Demon Pond is a fine film as far as it goes. Unfortunately, the mood was wrecked by a poorly coordinated ending that causes the film to lose its credibility. It falls down at the climax where the story really could have made an impact on the audience.

Superman of the cloth

Monsignor
Directed by Frank Perry
Hampshire 4 Theaters

By ADRIENNE WOLFF
Collegian Correspondent

"Forgive me father, for I have sinned. I have killed for my country, I have stolen for my church, I have loved a woman, and I am a Priest."

So goes the storyline of "Monsignor," the saga of a young American Priest portrayed by Christopher Reeve. The film, directed by Frank Perry, is the story of Father John Flaherty, an army chaplain who is drawn from the European battlefields of World War II, to the Vatican. It is here that he becomes involved in helping the church rise from its monetary depression.

Christopher Reeve, star of Monsignor.

Cardinal Santoni (Fernando Rey) appoints Flaherty to attempt to stabilize the Vatican's economic future. Flaherty draws the Vatican into the Italian Black Market. The contacts were arranged by his childhood friend, Lodo Varese (Joe Cortese), with mafia capo Don Appolini (Jason Miller).

Flaherty's romantic character is evoked when he meets Clara, a young nun who knows him only as an army lieutenant, a role Flaherty assumes during his dealings with the Black Market. Flaherty's internal conflict is demonstrated through the clash between his clerical vows and his human desires.

Although "Monsignor" had the potential to succeed through its excellent casting, the lack of organization contributes to its downfall. The story is laced with an inconsistent series of events. The element of time is poorly conveyed and the audience is often lost.

Above all else, "Monsignor" lacks interesting and climactic scenes, which makes it boring and monotonous.

"Monsignor," based on a novel by Jack Alain Leger, can be added to the list of "flops" directed by Frank Perry (David and Lisa, Mommie Dearest). As for Reeve, outrunning speeding bullets and leaping tall buildings seem more his style.

The University of Massachusetts Chamber Choir will perform a free concert at 4 p.m. on Sunday at Amherst College's Buckley recital hall.

trailers

By Andy Gordon

Following the recent trend to bastardize literary classics, writer Desmond Ryan is scripting Treasure Planet, a sci-fi version of Robert Louis Stevenson's Treasure Island. Animator Ralph Bakshi will direct the flick. It's his first live action production, and producer Albert Ruddy is betting 15 million dollars that it will make it big. Al, I'll take that bet.

One film series which American audiences have been denied is Israeli Director Boaz Davidson's Lemon Popsicle series, which deal with the trials and tribulations of teenage adolescence. Now Davidson has brought his talent to this country, where The Last American Virgin is being readied for release. The film has a fairly standard high school plot, following a group of boys and their preoccupations with love and sex. One difference is that almost all the main characters end up with social diseases. Bummer.

While we're on the subject of teen love, Liar's Moon has completed shooting. The film takes place in 1949 and features up and mumbling teen idol Matt Dillon, who also has starring roles in the soon to be released films, Tex, The Outsiders and Rumblefish, plays Jack, a young man who falls in love with Ginny, played by Cindy Fisher. Their parents don't want them together, so they elope. Then there's all sorts of conflicts and the film culminates in an explosive climax, which whoever wrote the press release felt compelled to tell me.

Armand Assante tears onto the screen as Mike Hammer in I, The Jury. The third remake of Mickey Spillane's violent classic also stars Barbara Carrera and Laurene Landon. The film opens with a prostitute being savagely killed and continues with dozens and dozens of brutal murders. Detective Hammer tracks it all down to a ritzy sex clinic headed by Ley Carrera. Should be out next month sometime.

Richard Pryor and Steven Spielberg are probably two of the busiest men in Hollywood today. Pryor has finished Superman III and The Toy and will begin The Charlie Parker Story and The Man Who Would Make Miracles. The latter is a contemporary comedy based on an H.G. Wells story. Spielberg, meanwhile, is wrapping up The Twilight Zone and will then begin Raiders II, which is set three years earlier than Raiders of the Lost Ark. Spielberg will then move on to E.T. II, which reunites its original cast.

Mike Nichols will direct Silkwood, the biography of Karen Silkwood. Meryl Streep will play the title character, Kurt Russell plays her boyfriend and Cher plays her best friend.

Local Best Best: Hands down, the Amherst Cinema is the place to go on Sunday, Monday or Tuesday night. Diner will play on a double bill with American Graffiti. Until then, The Calvin, which has switched over to a $1.50 admission policy, will show Fast Times at Ridgemont high, which has been called sexist and exploitative, but I thought it was great.

TRAILERS TRIVIA: in between Sean Connery and Roger Moore, another actor starred as James Bond. Name the actor, the name of the film and the soap opera he now appears on. Answer to last week's question: Actually, last week's question was a joke. Abel Gance never made a film called The Balladeer of Diablo and I wouldn't know who the second unit gaffer was even if he did. The answer to the trivia question is Once Flew Over The C...'s Nest, in which Tatum Christopher Lloyd Danny DeVito played Tabar... Martini, respectively.

Meryl Streep will play Karen Silkwood in Mike Nichols' upcoming Silkwood.

UM women swimmers open season tomorrow

By BOB BROCK
Collegian Correspondent

When the University of Massachusetts women's swimming team travels to the University of Vermont tomorrow to open their 1982-83 dual-meet season, they should be more than ready for the crack of the starter's gun.

Third year head coach Valerie Turtle has had the women swimmers training daily in the NOPE pool since September and has had them out of the water in the weight room three times a week.

Turtle, who has previously coached at Springfield College and Mount Holyoke, is looking forward to improving last year's record of 7-4.

"I'm really optimistic for a good season this year," said Turtle.

A big reason for the optimism is probably due to the amount of depth that the Minutewomen possess this year. This season's roster has 26 names on it compared to only 15 last year.

Turtle said the added depth this year allows her to play around more during meets, that is, she can insert swimmers in certain events to pick up valuable points during the course of a meet. She is also quick to point out that her team was not really affected by graduation, and that this year's squad is blessed with many fine freshmen.

These freshmen include distance freestyler Martha Samsel and breastroker Laurie Keen. Turtle feels that both will help the team out a lot this year. This year's squad will be led by senior captain Jennifer Black, a backstroker and junior captain Caroline Freitas who specializes in the individual Medley and freestyle.

Last season's M.V.P. Jenn Nicolai suffered a back injury in pre-season but Turtle assures she will bounce back and be tough to beat in the freestyle and I.M. Other swimmers who look to be tough are junior butterflyer Rosalie Nataupski and sophomore freestyler, Elizabeth Feinberg.

The divers, seniors Jean Bushee and Gina Perrone, look to be strong in New England competition. They are instructed by diving coach, Tony Chmel who did an excellent job last year with the progress of Bushee and Perrone, according to Turtle.

The schedule the Minutewomen are facing this season is a tough one. They face such local competition as Smith College, Amherst, Mt. Holyoke and Springfield College. Besides these Western Mass. schools, the swimmers face the University of Connecticut, Clark University and the tough ones, Boston College and the University of New Hampshire.

"Boston College and the University of New Hampshire will be the toughest, "Turtle said, "Especially U.N.H. since they have a really good scholarship program," she added.

Turtle does have a few goals in mind for her squad this season.

"I would like to have a winning season and to improve on last year's 7th place finish at the New England championships that are held at Springfield College in February," she said. " We want to qualify as many people as possible for the New England's."

Although the schedule lists only one home meet this semester (against Smith) there are many home dates when classes begin in February. All home meets are held in Boyden Pool.

Jayvees lose

By GEORGE MARTINS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts junior varsity soccer team suffered their first loss of the season yesterday at the hands of Springfield College by the score of 1-0.

The Minutemen went into the game with a record of 4-0-2.

Springfield scored the lone goal of the game with only five minutes left in regulation time. The game appeared headed for overtime when disaster struck.

Tom Lister scored for Springfield on a misplayed ball by UMass. Lister found himself alone for a "can't miss" goal. He was assisted by Tom Cole.

Bad weather conditions plagued the contest from start to finish but UMass coach Dave Saward gave no excuses.

"They aren't the best team that we have played, we just didn't take advantage of our chances," said Saward.

UMass played better in the second half but never could put one away. Chris Gift and John Metzger had good scoring chances but both drives went over the crossbar.

"We just didn't play well," said Saward. "We say we are going to one thing in practice and then we do something else in the game."

In better news, UMass won their game Saturday at Williams College 3-2. The game was tied, 2-2 in overtime when Itaru Kato scored the game winner. It was Katos first goal of the season.

The team will look to offset yesterday's loss when they face the Boston College Jayvees on Saturday. The team will wrap up their season on Monday when they will travel to Harvard.

Fraternities prevail : It's Theta Chi and Delta Chi

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

Dave Baldenbrini kicked two clutch field goals late in the fourth period to send Delta Chi to the intramural football playoffs against the defending champions, Theta Chi.

Amidst sloppy field conditions and a constant drizzle, Delta Chi battled it out against Beta Kappa Phi, spotting them an early 7-0 lead. Andy Shaw scored for BKO to give them the early advantage.

The first half belonged mostly to Delta Chi, however, as a Kelly MacDonald pass to Butch LeBlanc, followed by a MacDonald toss to Dave Armadellos for two points, gave Delta Chi an 8-7 lead. Delta Chi had other chances to score, but tough defense by BKO kept it at an 8-7 game at the half.

While the third quarter didn't add too much to the scoreboard, it was filled with fine defensive plays from both teams. BKO's defense scored the only points of the quarter as their pass rush caused MacDonald to throw the ball away in the end zone, resulting in a safety. The two teams swapped interceptions and the third quarter ended with BKO on top 9-8.

With their backs to the wall, ten minutes away from extinction, Delta Chi made its move. Using short passes and some fine running by MacDonald, Delta Chi drove slowly down the field, setting up the first of two Valdenbrini field goals to give them an 11-9 lead they refused to yield.

The defense of Delta Chi flexed its muscles as they stopped BKO for the second time. They again drove slowly down the field and Valdenbrini got the call to kick another field goal. The second one was as pure as the first and gave Delta Chi a 14-9 lead. BKO was forced to throw it up for grabs but came up empty, making the final 14-9, Delta Chi.

Theta Chi had a much easier time of it, easily handling the Six packers 28-5. On the first play of the game, Ralph Froio intercepted a pass and scampered 15 yards to give Theta Chi the early lead. A two point conversion by Ted Flaherty made the score 8-0 Theta Chi.

The Six packers did come back early in the second period as a 25 yard field goal and a safety narrowed the Theta Chi lead to 8-5 at the half.

The second half was all Theta Chi, ALL Theta Chi.

Late in the third period, a controversial pass interference call in the end zone gave Theta Chi first and goal from the two. Jim Firch hit Jeff White with the easy touchdown pass to give Theta Chi a 14-5 lead. The momentum that Theta Chi obtained from this carried over into the fourth quarter. Tim Leary scored the next Theta Chi TD as Firch rolled out and hit him wide in the end zone.

With the score 20-5 Theta Chi kept the pressure on the Six Packers and forced them to give the ball up once again. Firch threw his third TD pass of the game, this time hitting Bill LeBlanc with the score, and Jeff White with the two point conversion.

The 28-5 lead was all Theta Chi needed as they ran out the clock for the victory.

Monday night's game should be a contrast in styles, as Delta Chi relies on the ball-controlling-type offense while Theta Chi depends on the big play. Theta Chi will be seeking to hold onto the intramural title they won from Phi Sigma Kappa last year. Theta Chi will also be placing their three-year win streak on the line as they take to the Southwest Playing Fields under the lights.

Delta Chi got to the semis by beating Doors 2 19-8, and a last second field goal by Jim Firch gave Theta Chi a 14-12 victory over the BMF's. Other quarterfinal action included a 23-8 victory by the Six Packers over the Misters, and BKO was led by Mike Woodrow, who scored all 9 points to lead BKO to a 9-3 victory over the MahFah's.

So, if you're looking for some more football action, if you are suffering from withdrawal symptoms over the NFL strike, if you are sick of football north of the border, where the end zone there is being sought by UMass as a new residential area, or if you're just in the mood to see something different, come Monday night at 4:30 p.m. and see Theta Chi vs. Delta Chi for the intramural championship.

UM women stickers head to UConn

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow the 14-2-1 University of Massachusetts field hockey team will be closing out their regular season with a game at the University of Connecticut. UMass and UConn have been rivals for as long as anyone can remember.

Last season, the stickers tied UConn in the regular season, and lost to the Lady Huskies in the national tournament.

This season, is different according to Hixon.

"We're not going to fear UConn. Their ranking (number 2 in the nation) doesn't intimidate us," Hixon said.

If anything, UConn's ranking might even help the stickers, if that seems possible.

"The pressure is always heavier on the top ranked teams," Hixon said. "But, when it comes down to playing both teams are evenly ranked...numbers don't matter on the field."

Hixon believes that her team has improved since the start of the season.

"The midfield: Megan (Donnelly), Carol (Progulske), Ro (Tudryn), Nancy (Goode), and Andrea (Muccini) are all playing really well," Hixon said.

"The midfield is the key to playing a strong game. They control the tempo of the game, stop the long ball, and gain possession," said Hixon.

According to Hixon, the stickers must be at their best against UConn.

"Last season this game was a must win for us, and now the tables have turned. This game is a must win for UConn," Hixon said.If the Minutewomen should come home from Connecticut victorious Saturday, UConn's ranking will no doubt drop significantly.

The stickers have no intention of making this an easy contest, not by any means.

"Field hockey is a game of inches, where precision and seconds can make a difference in the final score," Hixon said.

This is the game. "We have hung in there to win the tight games," Hixon said. "Our only losses so far have come from higher ranked teams. The pressure on Saturday will be on UConn," she said.

Hixon is not overconfident. She cannot afford to be: one of the sticker's starting forwards, Tish Stevens, suffered a knee injury against BU Thursday, and Hixon may have to juggle the line up.

"Losing Tish does disrupt the flow we've had in the forward line," said Hixon. "But I'm thankful for the new substitution rules this season. Each girl has had playing time, and I'm confident that whoever I call upon will be able to do the job well," she said.

Two stickers who were out with injuries have returned to action. Judy Morgan (knee) and Andrea Muccini (mouth) are back and Stevens might be back in time to see action in the national tournament.

"We are mentally prepared for this game. The national polls are separate from the tournament rankings, and I think since UConn will be feeling the pressure more than we will, we'll be able to play a more relaxed game," said Hixon.

That's what Hixon's team has been doing all season; playing their own game of field hockey, a good game.

Defensively, the women are in great shape. They are one of the best defensive teams in the country, according to Banda, and have proven it this season by only letting through five goals.

"The experienced players back there make it much easier," Banda said of the defense. "Thanks to Jackie Gaw and Debbie Pickett, they've made the goaltenders job much easier, and Lori Stukes has done a tremendous job."

Banda will start Tammie Easton in goal but said he would not think twice about using Laurie Webber when the time came. Easton has won 11 of the 13 games she has played in this season.

"Tammie has done her job well," Banda said. "I hope for the remainder of the season she will hang in there and rise to the occasion (on Saturday)."

The women have outshot their opponents by the very wide margin of 325-59 and have 148 corner kicks as compared to 28 for their competitors.

Some players to watch on the Rochester team, which has scored 51 goals, and allowed 11 to get by, will be Megan Mackenzie (nine goals, 14 assists) Molly Hayes (10 goals) and Sue Lathan (nine goals). Mackenzie, a 1st Team All American forward in 1981, has set Rochester career records for assists (30) and total points (49).

Some important factors that UMass needs on their side to come up with a victory tomorrow are playing their game and making things happen, a formula that has been giving them their wins all season long.

The women have "got something going," according to Banda, and it's going to be a "very good game on Saturday, one of those games decided by one goal, no more than two."

There will be a $1 charge to get onto Boyden Field to see the game due to an NCAA rule that stipulates that playoff games must have a charge.

Once again, game time is at 12:30 p.m.

Sugar Ray should stay away, it's not worth it

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Correspondent

The decision is scheduled to be announced November 9th. It has probably been made already, but now it's time to step in front of the cameras and make it official.

On that day, "Sugar Ray" Leonard will tell the world if he plans to resume his boxing career which was put on hold when a torn retina was discovered in his left eye.

As always, there are the plusses and minuses, but this time the minuses seem to have the upper hand.

You see, there is an interesting twist to this story that tips the scales even further. His name is Marvin Hagler, otherwise know as Marvelous Marvin, a bona-fide human wrecking machine.

Leonard has already said that if he comes back, it would only be to fight Marvelous Marvin and this would be a mistake.

Not that Leonard isn't a great fighter. He is and would be a favorite against anyone else. Hagler, though, is simply Hagler.

Marvelous is not just big, but the scary kind of big. Once he steps between the ropes one thing runs through his chrome-domed head, destruction of the man across the ring.

Any competitor knows that all friendship is tossed out the window when the bell rings. With Hagler it is worse. He protects the crown with an animal intensity that is unmatched. He has had to come too far and wait too long for it to be any other way.

And don't kid yourself into thinking that Leonard will take the fight lightly. He carries the same pride that Hagler does, and what a finish it would be to a great career to leave boxing with a title win off a comeback.

No way, no playtime here. It'll be knock-down, drag-out all the way.

If Leonard retires now, there would be no hard feelings. No catcalls would be heard. The decision would be accepted. He certainly doesn't need the money. He has millions now. He also says that he has learned to live without boxing and hasn't missed the sport much in his absence. Besides, how good can the eye be? Not 100 percent anyway.

One does not fight Marvin Hagler without the right desire or all the tools. The bout and the eyesight might be lost on a Hagler punch that can't be picked up quickly enough.

This time it should end quietly for Sugar Ray. Better to go out as champion than as the comeback kid who fought once too often.

The decision will be announced November 9th. For a change it is one that won't be made by a referee in a ring, or scorecard wielding officials. Ironically, though, this time, more will be at stake than ever before.

Playoff time for spikers

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It's that time of year again. The fall sports are winding down and it is playoff time. For the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team, it is state championship time. Tomorrow, the UMass spikers travel to Smith College for the Massachusetts state championships.

Coach Elaine Sortino's squad is ranked fifth in the six team tournament with a 22-24 record on the year. But the record is deceptive for the Minutewomen competed in two top flight division I tourneys earlier this season (at the University of Delaware and the University of Maryland). UMass picked up a lot of losses there, but also a lot of experience.

Massachusetts will open their tournament with a match against Eastern Nazarene College at 9 a.m. At 10:30, UMass will face the top seed, Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT).

"We have to go in hard and play our game," said co-captain Patty Grant. "We have to hit the ball hard and play tough defense. Everyone there will want to beat us."

If the Minutewomen can play the way they have of late, UMass will be a very tough opponent. UMass played their game and romped over Southern Connecticut in three quick games Wednesday night and they took second in a tough Queens College tourney last weekend.

The team has recovered from mid-season injury crunch and are healthy. Kirsten Smith, who hurt her foot again last week, will be ready to play Saturday.

Co-captain Patti Philbin will be set to go as will freshmen Sue Mudry and Sally Maher, who played superb in the Southern win. The team's depth on the bench will help the Minutewomen. With Mary Ellen Normen, Lesile Smith and Karen Gottesman coming off the bench, the Minutewomen can play with anybody at the tourney.

"We have the depth to win. Everyone knows that," said Grant.

MIT is the top seed followed by Smith, Holy Cross, Eastern Nazarene, UMass and Wellesley. There will be two pools of three teams and the winner of each pool will play in the finals. Last year, UMass placed third.

Minutewomen hope to go out and set the tone of the game. Against Southern, UMass jumped out quickly in the first game and romped. But, in the second, Southern jumped out to a quick lead and UMass had to come from behind. The fact that UMass successfully fought back, won and romped in the third game showed that UMass has gained some experience that was not evident earlier in the year.

With Smith hosting the tournament in Northampton, the Minutewomen hope to attract some fans for this statewide tournament. Smith and MIT are expected to have "hordes of people" rooting for them.

UMass game time again, is at 9:00 a.m. and 10:30 a.m. and if UMass gains the finals, they will play at 12:15 p.m.

"We have a strong bench and six strong starters," remarked Grant. "If we play well, we can win it."

Minutemen hope to clip Eagle's wings

Flutie must be stopped and Pearson must fly

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

This Saturday it is Ray Shamie versus Ted Kennedy all over again, or, if one wants to be optimistic, David against Goliath, as the University of Massachusetts Minutemen host the Boston College Eagles.

The teams are in different leagues, both figuratively and literally (BC is in Division I-A; UMass is in Division I-AA).

UMass coach Bob Pickett likens Saturday's game to last week's BC-Penn State encounter, in which the Nittany Lions were victorious, 52-17.

"They are a very good football team. Us going against BC is like BC playing Penn State. We have tremendous hope but we have to be realistic. The schools have different programs. We do have a chance to win, though," said Pickett.

So far, this has been a very successful year for the Eagles. Their record stands at 5-2-1, with the tie coming against Clemson, the defending national champions. That tie catapulted BC into the Top Twenty in both wire service polls for a spell.

UMass, meanwhile, has suffered through its worst start in years, and needs to be victorious in it final three games to have a winning season.

Doug Flutie this, Doug Flutie that, is all one hears when people talk about BC, and for good reason.

The Eagles' sophomore quarterback has been superb, passing for 2187 yards in BC's eight games. Last week Flutie was more than superb. He had the most yards of any college quarterback this season, 520, on 26 of 44 passing, while playing Penn State, a team ranked seventh in the nation.

Flutie throws to an excellent receiving corps, composed of four receivers with more than 300 yards. Tight end Scott Nizolek has 554 yards, both split end Paul Zdanek and flanker Jon Schoen have over 400 yards, and injured flanker Brian Brennan has 305 yards.

Tailback Steve Strachen and freshman Troy Stradford head a solid BC running game.

The UMass offense still starts and ends with tailback Garry Pearson. That is not too bad considering that Pearson gains 136 yards per game and is the number one Division I-AA back in the country.

Freshman Jim Simeone will start again at quarterback. He should be a week better.

On defense, offense will again be the name of the game, with fullback Tom Murray starting at middle guard and offensive guard Jerry Gordon at defensive tackle.

It will be interesting to see how the relatively light Murray, at 210 pounds, does against the huge BC offensive line. The Eagles' center, Jack Belcher, outweighs Murray by 58 pounds.

Free safety Grady Fuller, ECAC I-AA Defensive-Player-of-the-Week (Pearson was the Offensive Player-of-the-Week), will have to have another outstanding game, as will sophomore Chris Wood, who is expected to start at cornerback for the second consecutive week in place of the injured Dwayne Lopes.

"We've got to go to the University of Massachusetts for what will be looked at as a big game in New England college football. Massachusetts has an excellent running back in Garry Pearson, but we've just faced another good running back (Curt Warner) and we know what we will have to do," said BC coach Jack Bicknell.

"I have no doubts that Boston College will regroup after the Penn State game. I have difficulty finding a weakness on their football team. Still, we prepare for this game like any other; we work just as hard," explained Pickett.

Can the Minutemen pull off the upset? Did the New York Jets defeat the Baltimore Colts in Super Bowl III?

Realistically, it would be tough, but possible. The BC defense is vulnerable (at least they were when they tried to stop Penn State) and their potent offense does make turnovers. Still, every UMass player will have to have the game of his life in order for UMass to win. Stranger things have happened.

The chance for UMass students to see a Top Twenty caliber football team should not be passed up. Besides, Pickett's troops deserve and need the support of over 1600 wild, screaming fans.

The weather should be ideal for this early November spectacle.

Game time is 1:00 p.m.

The NBA season preview: the Pacific Division

Editor's Note: This is the final segment of the NBA preview.
By BRIAN C. MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

No team in the NBA has won back-to-back championships since the 1968-69 Boston Celtics. The Lakers were clearly the best team in the NBA last year, and they picked up James Worthy in the draft this year. They are simple the best team in the league.

PREDICTED ORDER OF FINISH — Los Angeles, Phoenix, Seattle, Portland, Golden State, and San Diego.

Los Angeles — Simply awesome. One through eight they have the most talent in the league. Kareem, Magic, Jamaal Wilkes, Norm Nixon, Worthy, Michael Cooper, Bob McAdoc and Kurt Rambis. (He does look goofy, but he can play!) Need more be said?

Phoenix — They have one of the best backcourts in the league in Dennis Johnson and Kyle Macy. Up front they have Alvin Adams, Maurice Lucas, who can be the best power forward in the game if he's healthy, and Walter Davis. Coming off the bench there is Larry Nance, David Thirtkill of Bradley, and Johnny High. The key to this team is a healthy Davis, and a rejuvenated Lucas.

Seattle — They quite possibly could have the most explosive backcourt in the league. Gus Williams is awesome, and if David Thompson is healthy, he can dominate any game. The big question here is whether those two can play compatibly. The big men are sound. Jack Sikma is in the middle, and has either Lonnie Shelton, Danny Vranes, or Greg Kelser at this flanks. Coming off the bench will be Downtown Freddie Brown. Seattle coach Lenny Wilkens is in for a good year.

Portland — The Blazers might be in some trouble this year. They lost Kelvin Ramsay, Billy Ray Bates, and Bobby Gross. In their place they picked up Wayne Cooper and Kenny Carr. Their lineup should be Mychal Thompson at center, Kenny Carr at the power forward, and Calvin Natt up front. Darnell Valentine has been given the quarterbacking job, and he'll be backed up by first rounder Fat Lever from Arizona State. John Paxson is a pure shooter and will probably be counted upon to score some points. Jeff Lamp will be the swingman coming off the bench. The potential is there, but Dr. Ramsay has to get it going.

GOLDEN STATE — Michael Ray Richardson has yet to show up since his trade from the Knicks. The loss of Bernard King hurt badly. The Warriors now have Purvis Short, Joe Barry Carroll, Larry Smith, World B. Free and it's anybody's guess who else is alongside Free. Michael Ray is needed desperately out there. He is one of the best players in the league when he wants to be, but until then, Al Attles is in trouble.

San Diego — When Once-A-Week Walton shows up, the Clippers might be able to play some serious ball. The big problem for this team is the "ifs." If Terry Cummings signs, if they can land a point guards. (Don't be surprised to see either Reggie Carter or Kevin Porter wind up in San Diego.) San Diego has some legitimate big men in Tom Chambers and Michael Brooks. Jerome Whitehead was one of the most improved players in the league last year, so he too will help out. Lionel Hollins is an immense help to a shaky backcourt. Al Wood might be moved alongside Hollins if no other quality people show up. The owner, Don Sterling, is on his way out so at least there will be some stability in the front office. When Walton shows up, they'll be descent, if Cummings shows up they'll be respectable. And if.....

High rents, loan payments may result in co-op closing

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

College Auto Repair, the University of Massachusetts auto co-op where students can gain hands-on experience repairing their own cars, may be closing down because of high rent and loan payments.

"CAR is the only student-controlled business that has to pay rent," said Tom Osborn, director of the Educational Development Office. The co-op pays $1200 a year rent to the parking office for their shop and four parking spaces in the Campus Center Garage.

The other co-ops, bicycles, sporting goods and photo, are located in the Campus Center-Student Union Complex.

"We asked Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance Jack DeNyse for a rent waiver last year," said Scott Cashman, former chairman of the Board of Governors.

"He refused to give CAR a waiver because the garage was running too large a deficit ($250,000)," he said.

"The garage can't afford to give free space to anybody," said DeNyse. "They have a bond issue to meet."

CAR has appealed to the Student Senate, the Board of Governors, and the area governments for assistance in paying rent, said Mike King, CAR president.

"They said, 'we're all for you, but we don't have the money.' Then they gave the TOC (Top of the Campus Restaurant) $41,000," he said.

In addition to rent, CAR also has the expense of a $5,000 loan from the Student Government Association. The loan was taken out last year to cover the deficit incurred by the Student Auto Workshop which had been operating since 1972. CAR took over the management of that organization upon the drafting of the loan.

Services offered at CAR include use of their equipment and assistance from their mechanics for $5 per hour. While the most common jobs done are tune-ups and brake jobs, more complex repairs are also possible.

"Most people are pretty positive (about our service,)" said Matt Jewett, a CAR mechanic. "They think they got their money's worth."

CAR hopes to begin offering a repair service for those who don't have the "time or knowledge to do it themselves," said Hans Helgeson, financial advisor of CAR. The new program would cost $8 per hour and will hopefully generate more revenue for the co-op.

Comparable service at gas stations costs $25 per hour and up, King said. "(Our mechanics) are just as competent as men who work at gas stations," he said.

Anti-Klan demonstration 250-strong on Saturday

By MICHAEL FOLEY
Collegian Staff

To show their solidarity with weekend anti-Ku Klux Klan rallies in Washington D.C. and Montgomery County, MD., about 250 people marched through the center of Northampton Saturday shouting "Gay, straight, red, brown we'll stop the Klan the world around."

The anti-klan demonstrators marched slowly through a chilly wind and bright sunshine down Main Street from the Unitarian Church, turning on Center Street then following State Street back to Main. A Northampton Police care preceeded the protestors flashing blue lights while three officers directed traffic and walked with the march.

The march attracted the attention of Saturday shoppers and strollers along the downtown sidewalks, many of whom joined with the marchers.

The march was paced by Adrienne Rich, a feminist poet who lives in Western Massachusetts. Rich, recovering from a recent hospital stay, was walking with crutches.

"I am here as a feminist, a lesbian, a woman and a Jew and as someone who has struggled against racism," said Rich. "I am here because of everything I am."

"In this part of the country — I know for me — I felt the Klan was something down south," she said. "I know the Klan is here and in Canada, and is not, quote, just a Southern problem," she said.

Rich noted incidents of Klan harassment at Florence Heights, a housing project in Florence, an area of Northampton. She also said she hopes to see more rallies like this in the future.

The marchers chanted "The KKK has got to go, everybody's got to know. "Gay, straight, black, white — same struggle, same fight" and "The people united will never be defeated."

They carried signs reading "Racism is a social disease," "No more genocide, no KKK" and "Take a stand against the Klan."

The march ended on the steps of the Unitarian Church where the crowd listened to speakers.

Danton Perez, a Chilean exile, spoke of political oppression in Chile and his own experience of being tortured by the military and held in a concentration camp for two years.

"In the USA this is possible. If you let facism grow, it will grow," he said. "The ruling class in Chile is the same as the ruling class and the KKK in the USA."

Tobia Saisia, a striking employee at Gnomon Copy in Amherst paralleled the racism of the Klan and the anti-unionism of the Klan. He said the Klan is a reactionary group that opposes all groups trying to, move forward.

Marta Tapia, of the Third World Women's Task Force at the UMass Everywoman's Center, said anti-semitism has been part of the KKK since its resurgence in the 1950's. As the newly visible minorities of gays, lesbians and feminists emerged they too have become targets of the Klan, she said.

"The struggle (against the KKK) is incomplete without all of us, she said.

One of the sponsors of the rally, the Gay and Lesbian Activists (GALA) declined to have a speaker. Instead a statement from the group was read. The statement pointed to attacks against lesbians, which the group says have been increasing in recent months.

3,000 rally in Washington against Klan gathering

By BROOKE STATES
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON D.C. — About 3,000 demonstrators, including 45 University of Massachusetts students, rallied Saturday against the Ku Klux Klan, while 25 Klansmen staged their own rally outside the city.

The KKK had originally planned to march in Washington, but failed to get the necessary permits. At the alternate rally site, at Wheaton Regional Park in Montgomery County, MD. Bill Wilkinson, imperial wizard of the Invisible Empire faction of the KKK spoke.

Wilkinson, of Denham Springs, La., spoke on a variety of subjects, from the need to have a death penalty for anyone convicted of killing a police officer, to the necessity for white people to organize and gain political power.

Wilkinson said "young white men" face the brunt of reverse discrimination. The Klan ideology was one of "segregation not superiority" he said.

"Segregation has been the law of the land for 200 years," he said.

The Denham Springs native claimed that segregation was the way of life since the founding fathers, and the Klan has not "abandoned its Christian and moral values" in regards to upholding the white race.

At the Capitol Building in Washington D.C., an anti-klan rally got under way at 11:30 a.m. A series of speeches and songs warmed up the crowd before the march.

Behind a banner reading "March against the Klan, racism and anti-semitism, for jobs, justice and equality," the multiracial crowd spilled down Pennsylvania Avenue to a lawn near the White House.

Here another round of speakers addressed the crowd, and the band Sweet Honey in the Rock performed.

The only point that both rallies had in common was that they agreed the Klan was growing.

A representative of the National Anti-Klan Network (NAKN) stated that the Klan had para-military camps in at least six states. According to NAKN, "Klans were in one third of the counties in Georgia, and had trippled their membership in the first three months of this year."

Lynn Wells of NAKN said dealing with the Klan "was not at the top of the nations social agenda." She said she felt that demonstrations were important as a means of opposing the growth of the Klan. But Wells and many others at the rally, stressed the importance of day to day educational work in communities, especially white ones.

Wells said "moving people to act any way they can" was the key.

Throughout all the speeches several common themes were stressed. There were the need to organize and unify against the Klan, the fact that they were a growing force, and fighting the economic and social problems that caused people to join the Klan.

Cumberland, R.I. Police examine the car driven by paroled bank robber Richard W. Morin after an accident early yesterday morning. Morin, according to police, yelled "I'll kill every cop in sight," before emptying his revolver, killing a bystander and wounding two policemen.

Parolee tries to kill 'every cop in sight'

CUMBERLAND, R.I. (AP) — A car crash turned into a shoot-out yesterday when a paroled bank robber, shouting "I'll kill every cop in sight," emptied his revolver at police, killing a bystander and wounding two patrolmen before he was gunned down, police said.

Two officers were pulling Richard W. Morin, a former Cumberland High School wrestler convicted in a 1976 bank robbery, from a car when he shoved them to the ground, drew his gun and shot one of them and another partolman and a 20-year-old woman, said Chief John J. Partington.

Patrolman Dennis Malloy, shot once in the back as he ran for cover, felled Morin with a single shot form his .357-caliber Magnum to the forehead form 20 feet as Morin charged him across the road with his .38-caliber Police Special revolver, Partington said.

"If panic had set in there, I believe we would have had five or six dead people," Partington said. "The only reason we know for the shooting was when Morin was knocked to the ground he kept repeating 'I'll kill every cop in sight.'"

Partington said Morin, 26, would be charged with first-degree murder for the death of Susan Olivier, 20, of Cumberland, who was riding with her boyfriend when Morin side-swiped their car at about 12:45 a.m. on Diamond Hill Road about 100 yards from the police station.

A state medical examiner pronounced her dead at the scene from a single gunshot to the head, Partington said.

Morin was under guard in critical condition at Rhode Island Hospital, police said. Morin also faced two counts of assault with intent to murder and weapons charges, Partington said.

Patrolman Shawn O'Connor, 23, was reported in fair condition in Memorial Hospital in Pawtucket with bullet wounds in the face and arm. Malloy was reported in stable condition in Woonsocket Hospital with a gunshot wound in the back.

"After talking to the doctors, they're both going to be alright, thank God," Partington said. "They're incredible police officers."

Morin was driving a 1976 blue Cadillac with Carolyn Cleveland, 25, of Florida, when he drove over the center line and sideswiped an oncoming 1976 red Camaro driven by Mark Sawaia, 21, of Cumberland, with Miss Olivier, police said.

Morin appeared drunk, "staggering and using foul language," and told officers he wanted to ride with Miss Cleveland to the hospital, but officers told him they wanted to take him to the station for a test for drunkeness, Partington said.

O'Connor and Patrolman Howard Sheats, 29, had escorted Morin three steps from the car when he pushed them to the ground, pulled his gun and pumped two quick shots at O'Connor, one passing through his cheeks and the other hitting his wrist and coming out his elbow, Partington said.

Iran invades border to Iraq

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iranian forces punched six miles across the border yesterday in their second invasion of Iraq in four months, Iran's Parliament speaker said.

The speaker, Hashemi Rafsanjani, told a news conference the invasion force reached Tib, an Iraqi town of 3,000, and an adjacent town, which he did not name. A producing oilfield also lies in that area of Iraq, 170 miles southeast of Baghdad.

Asked whether the Iranian military might drive toward the Iraqi capital, Rafsanjani replied: "We will not limit ourselves ... we won't finish until they meet our conditions."

The white-turbaned Moslem clergyman reiterated those peace conditions: withdrawal of Iraqi forces from Iranian soil, payment of reparations to Iran, and "punishment" of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

Rafsanjani, one of Iran's most powerful leaders, represents revolutionary patriarch Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini on the Supreme Defense Council.

There was no immediate comment from Iraq on Rafsanjani's report. If true, it is Iran's second invasion of Iraq in their 25-month-old border war. In July, the Iranians attacked across the southern end of the frontier and stormed toward Basra, Iraq's second-largest city, but they were driven back in heavy fighting.

The new operation extends the Muharram offensive begun last Monday — named for the current month of mourning in Iran's Moslem calendar. The Iranians said they recaptured 210 square miles of Iraqi-held Iranian territory in the first days of the offensive that took them to the Hamrain mountain heights at the border, overlooking Tib and other towns and roads on the broad Iraqi plain.

On Saturday, Iranian authorities permitted foreign reporters to visit the highest point on the Hamrain mountain ridge line, a 4,600-foot hill called Hill 400. Reporters found Iran's Revolutionary Guard militiamen in firm control, with a commanding line of fire over Tib.

Iraq had claimed it repulsed the Muharram offensive, but the reporters saw no evidence of Iraqi resistance to the Iranian drive. The journalists did not view areas of the front north and south of Hill 400, however.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said the latest operation was launched at 11:15 p.m. Saturday (2:45 p.m. EDT), but the agency's first reports did not say the Iranians had entered Iraq. It said Iranian forces inflicted "heavy casualties" on the Iraqis, captured 1,000, shot down an Iraqi jetfighter, seized 62 Iraqi tanks and destroyed 75.

The Iranians do not report their own casualties. They claim to have killed or wounded 4,000 Iraqis in the first five days of the offensive.

The Muharram operation is beleived to have left the Iraqis with less than 100 square miles of Iranian territory — in small pockets along the 300-mile border warfront.

Bruins fans pray for player's health

BOSTON (AP) — Thirteen-year-old Joanne Otis of Burlington said she came to yesterday's Mass for stricken Boston Bruin Normand Leveille because "I care about Normand."

Charles Loring of the city's Charlestown section attended because "I just hope he'll get better."

Some 150 Bruins fans and others attended a morning Mass at Our Lady of Victories Church for the welfare of 19-year-old Leveille, who collapsed from a cerebral hemorrhage during a Bruins-Vancouver Canucks game Oct. 23.

Leveille remains unconscious and in poor condition at Vancouver General Hospital. However, he was taken off a respirator Friday and was breathing on his own, a hospital spokeswoman said.

She said doctors indicated this was a promising sign, but cautioned the condition of such patients "can change in so many different ways."

Joanne Otis carried the communion chalice to the Rev. Philip Laplante at the alter of the ornate sanctuary during the ceremony. Sporting a Bruin's sweatshirt, she said she was chosen before the service to perform this task.

"I'm a fan of the Bruins," Joanne said. She said Leveille, whom she finds "cute," gave her his autograph at the first game of the season. "He was very nice to me," she said.

Father Laplante prayed for Leveille's return to health, and asked God to "look with compassion today on this most gifted young man."

"Touch Normand with your love, console his bereaved family, teammates and friends," he said.

Father Laplante told the congregation that Levielle "is in the hands of God."

"We forget that the gift of health is ours to enjoy," he said.

Father Laplante, who said he considers himself a Bruins fan, said his church is the French church in Boston, and because of this and because he studied in Canada, the priest felt an affinity toward Leveille, who is from Quebec.

Pat Hamilton, a secretary to Bruins' General Manager Harry Sinden, said the Bruins had a 10:30 a.m. practice for last night's game against the Detroit Red Wings, and so none attended the service.

Girl improves after liver transplant

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Jamie Fiske, the 11-months-old Bridgewater, Mass., girl who received a life-saving liver transplant Friday, is recovering nicely as of yesterday doctors reported.

"She is continuing to show signs of improvement," said a news release by University of Minnesota Hospitals. "Doctors continue to monitor her closely and have indicated they are pleased with her progress."

Jamie remains on a respirator but may be taken off support systems by today, a hospital spokesman said. She is listed in satisfactory condition in the pediatric intensive care unit.

The youngster is the daughter of Charles and Marilyn Fiske. Born last Nov. 26, she was somewhat jaundiced at birth and the disease was traced to biliary atresia, in which bile backs up into the liver.

Physicians said she would have to have a transplant or could die by her first birthday.

The vital organ came from Jess Bellon, a 10-month-old boy. The parents, Lared Bellon, and his wife Leann, approved the donation.

Former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, who received an honorary degree from Mount Holyoke College yesterday morning.

Former secretary of state speaks on arms control

By CHRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Arms control is an indispensible and complementary tool in working for the only security relevant to the 1980's and beyond said former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance in a speech at Mount Holyoke College yesterday.

Vance, who served as secretary of state under Carter from 1977-1980 received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree from Mount Holyoke. He was also the keynote speaker for the two-day conference, "Avoiding Apocalypse: Nuclear Weapons and United States Foreign Policy."

Speaking on "Common Security: The future of Arms Control," Vance told the audience there is no plausible way to begin a nuclear war and bring it under control, without inflicting unprecedented destruction throughout the world.

"The fact is that the use of nuclear weapons cannot be conceived as an act of policy to advance the interests of any nation," Vance said. "Employing these weapons cannot mean success. It can only be a testament to failure."

In a press conference following his speech, Vance said he felt President Reagan was serious about his nuclear policy. Reagan has changed his original stand on nuclear arms and has become more flexible, he said.

"Reagan will see that people are expecting their government to act in a serious way," Vance said.

Vance praised current Secretary of State George Schultz, saying Reagan made a wise choice.

"I'm a great admirer of George Schultz. On the whole he is not only able, but he is a man who will make a great secretary of state," he said.

Two years after resigning from office after the failed Iranian hostage rescue attempt, Vance does not regret his decision.

"There is no doubt in my mind I made the right decision. I still feel he (Carter) was wrong (in attempting the rescue mission)," he said.

Vance also said he does not feel a nuclear freeze is a substitute for a sound negotiating strategy for the United States.

"I do feel the nuclear freeze movement has had a very positive effect. I do not think you are going to get a freeze across the board," he said.

"But with political will and imagination, 1983 can become the year in which the nuclear arms race finally came to a halt and began to reverse the course," he said.

Arms control is vital, he said. One way of improving the climate for arms control is by resubmitting the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty II (SALT II) to the Senate for ratification.

"This step would strengthen the President's hand in negotiation. It would be a token of our seriousness. It would help to blunt the propaganda campaign of the Soviets," he said. "In short, there is nothing to lose and everything to gain by the ratification of SALT II."

Childcare issue in Amherst

Amherst childcare being assessed

By ANN CARRNS
Collegian Staff

Amherst residents will have the chance this week to decide the fate of childcare programs in the town.

The Amherst Committee on Childcare, in response to a proposal by the 1982 Town Meeting, will distribute this week a survey designed to assess childcare needs in the town, and to evaluate the level of public support for chilcare programs.

The Town is considering providing childcare services for its residents, and on the basis of the survey will decide which of many options available would best fit the Town's need.

Deborah Kearney, a professional consultant hired by the town to work with the committee and develop the survey, said last week that about 600 Amherst residents will receive the survey beginning on Friday.

"We are trying to determine who needs what, according to whom," Kearney said.

Kearney said she will work with the committee and Assistant Town Manager Chris Hart to analyze the data gathered in the survey. They expect to have a final report compiled sometime near March 1983, when it will be presented to the town selectmen, she said.

The six-member Childcare Committee was formed by the selectmen in 1981 to explore childcare issues in the Town.

In early 1982, the committee decided to conduct a survey to get a comprehensive assessment of childcare needs and attitudes in Amherst. Last May, the Town Meeting appropriated $12,000 for the project.

Kearney said the survey represents a "stratified sample", meaning residents both with and without children will be asked to respond.

This type of sample was used, Kearney said, because it is not enough to simply know a need exists. The attitude of the rest of the town, in terms of whether they support the need as a public policy, is equally important.

Kearney said the selectmen can use the data to decide what level and what type of support to give the childcare programs.

Support could consist of donating available space for the program and waiving rent, or giving technical assistance such as setting up a hotline for parents who need emergency care, Kearney said.

Monetary support could range from no funding at all, to total funding, Kearney said.

"The Town would not necessarily have to provide everything in terms of monetary support," Kearney said. "There are many options available."

These possibilities include "start-up" money, which would give programs money for the first year of operation until they could support themselves; or giving money to parents so they could fund programs themselves.

Other ways in which Kearney said the town could address childcare needs include hiring a resource coordinator. This individual would keep listings of childcare services in the area, and possibly help neighborhoods develop their own cooperative programs.

"In this way, a parent wouldn't be frantically searching for childcare," Kearney said. "At least they would have a central place to refer to for that information. Many childcare providers use word-of-mouth advertising, so it is not always easy for parents to find them."

Kearney said possibilities also exist for regional programs with surrounding towns such as Northampton and South Hadley, for for the University of Massachusetts to expand its services with additional support from the town.

Kearney said childcare is an issue of growing concern nationally, not just in Amherst as more women enter the workforce, and the number of two-income families increases.

Kearney quoted a recent Harris poll which estimated that by 1990, 50 percent of mothers with children under six years of age will be employed in full-time jobs.

"In addition, 60 percent of all married couples are dual-career families," Kearney said, " and the percentage of families with one full-time and one part-time working parent is even higher."

By next spring, when the survey results are compiled, the Committee will know how these statistics relate to Amherst.

Childcare service still has openings

By ANN CARRNS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Child Care Office has openings in its programs this semester, although a recent survey by the Office indicated need for childcare services is expected to increase in all but one age category.

UMass Child Care Coordinator Elizabeth Perkins said a survey of 292 families using the University childcare services in spring 1982 showed their need for preschool care would remain about the same for 1983.

The infant category, which is the most expensive to provide, showed an anticipated 100 percent increase, from 9 percent in 1982 to 18 percent in 1983. Need for services at the toddler and kindergarten level was also expected to increase.

Despite these results, Perkins said the program did have openings available this semester.

"I think the economy has definitely affected us," Perkins said. "The average income of our families is $10,000 per year. When you're paying $50 per week for childcare, that's $2550 of your salary. That's a pretty large chunk."

Perkins also said she has had more requests for half-day care.

"Before, students with children would put their children in for the full day," she said. "Now, they try to have all their classes in the morning, take their kids home in the afternoon and study the best they can. It's less expensive."

Perkins said the office would examine the number of slots (positions available for children) in each age group, and perhaps redistribute them to meet the anticipated needs.

In addition, she said the office is open to expansion with help from the Town of Amherst, which is currently assessing childcare needs among its residents.

"We do have sliding scale rates for low income families, and 19 slots available for Title XX (government) funds," Perkins said, "But there are still families who need aid. Any decision by the Town of Amherst to give support to these families would help.

Officials seize 30 tons of pot after firing on foreign vessel

BOSTON — The Coast Guard seized a 240-foot freighter, with an estimated 30 tons of marijuana and a foreign crew aboard, after firing several rounds of ammunition when it refused to stop, a spokesman said.

The ship was being escorted to Boston yesterday and was expected to arrive tomorrow, said Norman Whitehurst, spokesman for the Coast Guard office in Boston.

The freighter's crew included one Cuban, one Spaniard, and 22 Colombians, he said. None of their identities was available, he said, but they will be turned over to the Drug Enforcement Agency upon arrival in Boston, Whitehurst said.

"They are in custody aboard the Duane, and all the legal ends will taken care of when it arrives in Boston," Whitehurst said. "The vessel cargo and crew will be turned over to DEA and to Customs."

The Coast Guard cutter Duane, out of Portland, Maine, came upon the motor vessel Biscayne Freeze about 400 miles southeast of Cape Cod on Saturday, after U.S Navy airmen spotted the ship on Friday, he said.

The Biscayne Freeze refused orders to stop, until the Duane fired five rounds of machinegun fire in front of it, he said.

Whitehurst said he could not say why the Coast Guard decided to track the vessel.

Its crew members said the freighter was registered in Panama but had no identification papers. After receiving permission from the Washington, D.C. headquarters of the Coast Guard, a landing party from the Duane boarded the suspect ship.

Illegal possession of lobster bring big fines for fishermen

BOSTON — A boatload of 1,087 undersized lobsters and cooked lobster tails may mean fines ranging from $27,625 to $55,250 for a fishing boat's captain and two crew members

State and federal fisheries agents seized the 70-foot commercial fisher Friday arrested the captain and crew members on charges of possessing the 1,087 undersized and nine eggbearing lobsters, an official said.

John Comeau, a natural resource officer for the state Fisheries and Wildlife Service, said the seizure at the Boston fish pier of the dragger Sicily, commanded by Pasquale Alba of Revere, was part of a continuing investigation into boats suspected of bringing illegal lobsters into Boston, Gloucester and Scituate harbors.

Soviet rocket to be tested for putting 'city in the sky'

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union is building the world's most powerful space rocket and plans to test it next year, according to authoritative sources here. The rocket would be used in 1985 to hurl into orbit the 110-ton core of a massive manned space station.

The sources — all of them involved in the Soviet space program — provided a rough outline, and a few details, of a project that dwarfs anything that has been approved for the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

It's not all secret. Soviet officials won't officially acknowledge that they are developing the monster rocket, codenamed "G." But they speak openly of their concept for Cosmograd — or "city in the in the sky."

It would be occupied year in, year out, by rotating crews of medical researchers, astronomers, workers making pure drugs and materials, satellite repairmen and military astronauts reconnoitering the globe and manning space weapons.

Some would inhabit this weightless world for perhaps years in long-term research projects. Others would man high-technology construction crews, assembling manned and unmanned rockets destined for the planets and other parts of the solar system.

Space shuttle Columbia to carry satellite Thursday

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — With a predawn "call to stations," test conductor Andy Brown yesterday started the countdown for space shuttle Columbia's first satellite-carrying commercial flight, set for a fiery liftoff Thursday.

The count began on schedule at 3 a.m. when Brown summoned more than 50 technicians and engineers to their consoles in the launch control center three miles from the steel and concrete pad where Columbia is perched.

The four astronauts who will man the shuttle on its first operational mission were at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, concluding months of training. They are Vance Brand, the commander; pilot Robert Overmyer and mission specialists William Lenoir and Joseph Allen.

Brand will captain the largest crew ever to be launched into space in a single ship. They are to fly here tomorrow to make final preparations for launch, scheduled for 7:19 a.m. Thursday.

The early part of the count proceeded smoothly as Columbia's electrical power was switched on and the 60-foot-long cargo bay doors were closed, sealing inside the two 7,200- pound communications satellites that are the shuttle's first commercial payloads.

Satellite Business Systems of McLean, Va., and Telesat of Canada are the first in a long line of customers who will pay to have their payloads carried into orbit by the shuttle. They each have paid the National Aeronautics and Space Administration $10 million for hauling up the two $30 million satellites.

It will be the responsibility of Lenoir and Allen to monitor the health of the satellites in the bay, conduct a 90-minute countdown for each and activate the spring devices that fling them out of the bay and into their own orbits.

Appalachian Trail moved away from Maine lumbering

MILLINOCKET, Maine — The Appalachian Trail in Maine is being moved. A quarter of the 276 miles have already been relocated, mostly in the past five years. Construction has begun on another 70 miles.

Within the next couple of years about 134 miles of the Maine section of the trail that runs from Mount Katahdin in Maine to Springer Mountain in Georgia will have been rebuilt — sometimes as far as 10 miles from the old trail.

The accomplishment will be mostly the work of volunteers, including a half dozen retired school teachers, several college students, a state insurance official, a paper mill manager and a Central Maine Power Co. engineer.

The purpose is to lift the Maine trail out of the valleys and away from the old lumbering roads to the mountain tops and high ridges.

"We're trying to create the best hiking trail possible through the mountains of Maine," reports Dave Field, a University of Maine forest economist who doubles as chairman of the Maine Appalachian Trail Club.

But an incidental benefit of the big rebuilding project will be to eliminate conflicts with the wood harvesting and trucking industry that, unlike hikers, prefers the valleys to mountains.

Small groups have been working every weekend since early last spring on either the mammoth relocation or on routine maintenance of the trail.

And a half dozen major weekend expeditions were held where large parties worked on cutting trails and building shelters and bridges.

How do you build a trail? This reporter went along on a recent expedition to find out. Twenty-three people showed up on a late summer weekend. Two carried chainsaws; one wielded a paint brush and bucket of white paint for blazes to mark the pathway for future hikers. The primary trail building tool, however, is an ordinary brush clipper.

"Clip low so hikers won't trip over stubs," we were told. "Clip high so they won't run into branches."

Everywoman's Center extends outreach

By AMY E. HASBROUCK
Collegian Correspondent

Establishing the connection between sex, race, class, and gay oppression and providing services and education for women on and off campus are the main functions of the Everywomans Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Aquila Ayana, public relations and outreach coordinator for the center said, "We mainly target campus and community women, however, our outreach has expanded to a much larger area. We get calls from women's centers across the country, as well as calls from women who are interested in the services from this area, Vermont and Pittsfield."

The population the center serves is about 50 percent campus women and 50 percent community women, Ayana said.

"Last year alone, we (the Everywoman Center) received over 16,000 calls and walk-ins," Ayana said.

"But that does not include individual program statistics, which indicate how many people come to a workshop, conference, or a movie series," she said. "We're touching many, many more than 16,000."

"We offer the only 24-hour hotline in the area, so that women, who have experienced violence in their lives, whether it is a past experience, and they're feeling a need to talk to someone now, or just recently experienced violence, have a way that they can call and talk to a counselor advocate."

The center also has an extensive Third World Women's Task Force, and a counseling advocacy program, which specializes in counseling around violence against women. These issues include battering, incest, and rape, she said.

The center maintains a resource library, and other sources of information. There is a calendar of events (compiled and written by the P.R.-Outreach team) a bulletin board of services, a "Job Book" of area job listings, a "Childcare Book" of sources of childcare, and volunteers to assist in helping to find the information one is interested in.

As the P.R.-Outreach Coordinator, Ayana attempts to connect with the other programs at the center and publicize what each of the programs are doing. She and her staff of interns and volunteers also put out center-related material, such as center posters, brochures, and newsletters. Ayana also trains interns so they can develop skills in the area they're interested in.

There is still much that can be done at the center, which is celebrating its 10th anniversary, Ayana said.

"I'd like to upgrade everything that we're sending out. I'd like to find exactly how many people we're actually reaching. I'd like to be able to expand the intern program, and maybe, somewhere down the line, to see a magazine that comes out of the center," she said.

SBA Career Day cancels classes

By MATTHEW BERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

All classes in the University of Massachusetts School of Business Administration (SBA) will be canceled tomorrow for the school's Career Day, an eight hour event designed to give business students first-hand information about the business world and help them choose their prospective professions.

Representatives from 24 companies will speak on various aspects of accounting, marketing, management, and general business from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on the first level of the UMass Campus Center tomorrow.

Michael Babcock, president of the Filene's Corporation will be the keynote speaker at a buffet luncheon that will be served from 12 to 1:45 p.m. in Campus Center room 1009.

Undergraduate Business Club(UBC) President Steven Schiffman said he is expecting about 1000 people at the speeches and 150 at the luncheon.

"The purpose of Career Day is to help undergraduates as well as graduate students get a better fix on their career goals and get a better understanding on what's out there; an understanding that they wouldn't get from textbooks," said Schiffman.

"There are too many juniors and seniors in SBA that have no direction as to where their careers are going. Resumes aren't completed and long term career goals aren't there," he said. That's what Career Day is all about," he added.

"This Career Day conference is a highpoint for the school, the Undergraduate Business Club, and the undergraduate student body. It is important that our students consider their careers early in their academic programs, so that curricula and coursework can be planned purposefully," according to Arthur Elkins, SBA associate dean and UBC advisor.

The 24 companies represented include Johnson and Johnson, CBS, Aetna Life and Casualty, Cooper and Lybrand, and Arthur Anderson and Company.

The estimated 2000 dollars that this day will cost was made up by a 500 dollar SBA grant and a 500 dollar SBA loan. The rest came from dues of the 700 member UBC and revenue from the UBC coffee shop.

"If it wasn't for the coffee shop, we couldn't have a day like this," said Schiffman.

For next year's Career Day, Schiffman said he is trying to get the chairman of the board of General Foods as keynote speaker.

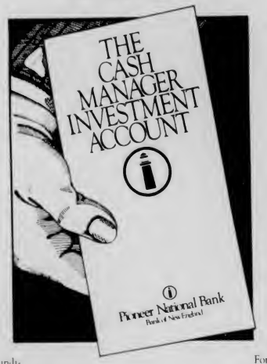
"10% INTEREST AND EASY WITHDRAWALS? NO!"

YES.



Until now it was illegal to offer an account this good.

But now Pioneer National Bank has it. The 10% interest Cash Manager Investment Account. Only at Pioneer National Bank.

Now You Can Have Money Market Rates And Access To Your Cash.

Until now, earning money market rates as high as 10% meant either tying up your money for as long as 48 months or investing your money in an uninsured money fund. But now individuals with $20,000 or more can have an investment insured by the FDIC for up to $100,000, earn high rates and still have access to their cash. We're making it possible with our new Cash Manager Investment Account.

Competitive Money Market Rates.

The Cash Manager Investment Account pays money market rates on your entire investment when you maintain a minimum $20,000 balance. Rates paid will vary with the 7-day Treasury Bill Rate, but as long as that rate stays below 9%, your Cash Manager Investment Account will earn 10% interest through the end of the year. If your balance drops below $20,000, your rate is reduced to 5¼% until your $20,000 balance is restored. This account may not be pledged as collateral and early withdrawals are not permitted.

Access To Your Money.

The Cash Manager Investment Account is a 7-day notice account which gives you access to your money only 7 calendar days after you notify us to make the withdrawal for you. And you can now make convenient telephone withdrawals up to three times per month. There is a $500 minimum on withdrawals or additional deposits.

Tax Advantages Over Money Market Funds.

Under Massachusetts law, your earnings from our Cash Manager Investment Account qualify as interest for a significantly lower state tax rate and a state tax exclusion. Money market fund earnings have no state tax exclusion, and are subject to a much higher tax rate.

You can take advantage of our new Cash Manager Investment Account with a minimum balance of $20,000 and your NOW, Personal Checking or Business Checking Account. For more information, mail in the following coupon or call the Northampton, Amherst or Easthampton branch of Pioneer National Bank.

Please send me more information on your new Cash Manager Investment Account.

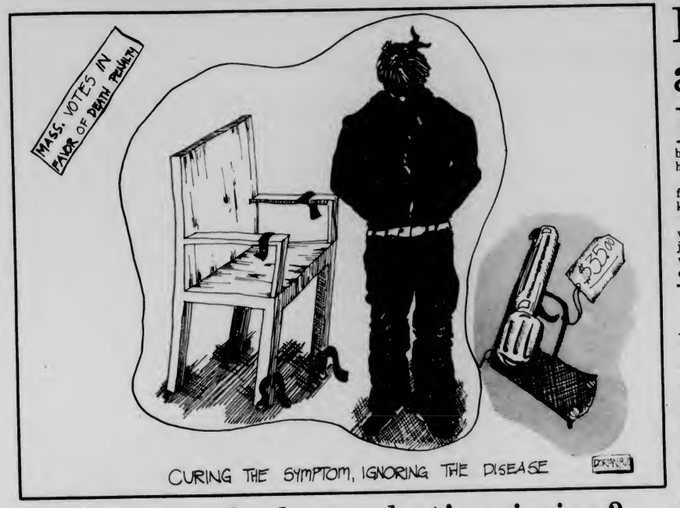
EDITORIAL/OPINION



Who won, who lost, what's missing?

Elections 1982: The dust has cleared, the shouting is over, $300 million was spent on campaigns — what happened?

On the state scene for Massachusetts we have the following scores: Margaret "It's all over now baby blue" Heckler, was outspent and outclassed by Barney "It's my district and I'll win if I want to" Frank. Ray "Sham" Shamie went down to defeat before Ted "I'm making it in Massachusetts, and the White House in 1984" Kennedy. John Sears cried out to the citizens of Massachusetts, "Don't you want me baby?" He was answered "You got a lot of nerve, to say you are our friend." The Duke inherited a number of state problems from the King. A major one was the large charge account for seafood at Anthonys Pier 4, billed to the state. Political pundits like myself may joke about petty party politics, but the election as a whole, produced seriously problematic results.

Brooke States

On the national scene, voter turnout was large for two reasons: One was the 52 ballot questions or initative petitions that were listed across the country. The more important reason was high unemployment and the state of the economy. The Democrats won 7 governorships and 27 house seats. The Republicans lost a chunk of their support, the "new right" some of it's claim to political supremacy.

What is missing is a way out of this mess. Two years ago Reagan was elected, because people were tired of too many years of liberalism and high taxes. Many people voted for Ronald Reagan and the New Right not out of ideological unity with them, but because their agenda and candidates were something different.

Now the "people" are tired of that different something, but they are not ready to embrace the Democratic party and it's principles with open arms. A clear voter mandate is still missing. To understand what happened Nov. 2, we need to go back to the last time in our history the economy was as battered — the Depression.

The 1930s were a brutal period in American history. At one point 25 percent of the labor force was unemployed. People faced governmental indifference, and big business hostility. To deal with this, people began to organize in a large scale way. Thousands struck for union recognition and better working conditions. Farmers blockaded roads to keep food from going to markets at prices that were too low. Unemployed demonstrated, demanding work or relief, and people in the neighborhoods blocked evictions. What was happening was that the focus of power was shifting from the halls of government and the boardrooms of business, to the people in the street.

Partially in response to this situation, the shape of the modern Democratic Party took shape. It consisted of blacks, organized labor, liberals and reformers, and to a lesser extent, women and youth. This coalition became the base for a totally changed country, a country who's government now claimed it has a right and responsibility to intervene when necessary. After World War II this coalition broadened to include big business, which liked the benefits and research and development contracts that they got and, Republicans, who liked it because new military bases in their districts gave them jobs.

This coalition was toppled but once in 1952 with the Eisenhower landslide. But the inflation and economic dislocation caused by the Vietnam war, and subsequent business strategies, allowed Ronald Reagan to gain the highest elected office in the country.

Now people have begun to reject Reaganomics, but they are not sure where to go. While things are not as bad as they were in the depression of the 30s, they are not good either. Blue, white, and pink collar workers face layoffs due to automation and a shrinking industrial base. College students find that years of work are down the drain as they cannot get a job upon graduation. The cutbacks of social services and programs have undermined many of the gains made during the last 20 years.

In a sense Reaganomics resembles Don Quioxte charging a windmill. Having gotten caught up in 1980 and knocked down in 1982, it is somebody elses turn. The Democratic party is attempting to charge to the rescue. But it is on a decrepit donkey that barely has it's tale pinned on. They got lucky this time, and were able to use the Social Security issue to great advantage. But for 1984 they will have to come up with a better program then sniping at the Republicans. Otherwise, people will find their own solutions, and as in the '30's and the '60's, it will be outside of the framework of the two party system, and the voting booth. For another two years of mortgages piling up, bills piling up, and rights denied, many more people besides Talking Head fans will be singing the lyrics, "This aint no party, this aint no disco, this aint no fooling around...I aint got time for that now."

Liberal gains, all in vain?

From the point of view of a liberal democrat, Tuesday's election results were a mixed bag. Nationwide the results were not as favorable as had been hoped. In Massachusetts however, the results could hardly have been better.

Barney Frank easily defeated Margaret Heckler for the fourth congressional seat in a race the White House was keeping a close eye on.

In that race even the most ardent Frank supporters wouldn't have dared to predict such a victory. Perhaps justice was doubly served in that race, however. Not only was the race an obvious referendum on Reaganomics, especially in the depressed city of Fall River, but Heckler had run a truly gutteral smear campaign charging Frank with being the friend of pornographers and prostitutes. A lot can be said for the intelligence of the voters in the 4th district.

In the races where the general outlook was for a close race, there turned out to be no race at all.

In the 6th district, Nicholas Mavroules soundly defeated Thomas Trimarco. Trimarco once slammed his door in my face when I canvassed his Beverly home for MassPIRG two summers ago, so I wasn't exactly upset with this decision. But putting all personalities aside, Trimarco would have followed Reaganomics pretty much down the line and the voters obviously didn't want that.

In the ninth district, Joe Moakley whipped former Dedham state representative and Republican Deborah Cochran. Cochran had run what Moakley termed the ugliest smear campaign he had seen in 30 years of politics.

In the only other congressional race where a fight was expected, Gerry Studds easily defeated Jack Conway in the tenth district, Gerry Studds easily defeated Jack Conway in the tenth district. Conway, one of the most successful realtors in New England had publicly stated his preference for Reaganomics. The voters gave him a much different statement.

In a race that surprised no one, not even John Sears himself, Mike Dukakis breezed in his bid to return as governor over the Republican and independent candidate Frank Rich. Sears' campaign was second in weakness only to Frank Natch's in 1978. Rich's campaign was a nonexistant joke.

Edward Kennedy made mince meat out of Republican opponent Ray Shamie. Certainly 61 percent of the vote can be considered a landslide. But perhaps it is not significant enough for Kennedy. One network commentator remarked Tuesday night that Kennedy could win in Massachusetts wearing a cocktail dress. In his eventual bid for the White House in 1984 Kennedy will need strong electability credentials to fall back on. For some reason 61 percent to Shamie's 39 percent does not seem like enough.

This is not to take anything away from Shamie though. He ran a bold and imaginative campaign. And probably knew from the start that he could not win. But don't think for a minute that you've heard the last from Shamie. Expect him to run for Paul Tsongas' Senate seat in 1984. If he fails again, don't be surprised if he runs for governor in 1986. The Sharon businessman's ulterior motives in his unsuccessful bid against Kennedy were all too clear.

The only question that didn't turn out favorably for liberals was the death penalty. Less than a month ago Rep. James Collins, (D-Amherst), predicted a sound victory for the question unless a great deal of voter education surfaced. Obviously some momentum was gained, but not quite enough. Barbarism is back in Massachusetts.

For the most part, justice was served in Massachusetts, but what of the nation as a whole? Democrats gained Senate seats leaving it in the control of the Republicans. But Democrats substantially increased their power in the House of Representatives. They increased it to the point where it will be difficult if not impossible for Reagan legislation to get through in the future.

With a Democratic House and a Republican Senate we could very easily see a situation where little gets done in the next two years to help the economy either via Reaganomics or Democratic alternatives. In 1984 that could leave the gate wide open for a Reagan reelection. He could claim his policies haven't had a chance to work by showing that they were thwarted in the House. While Democratic economic programs would likely continue to be stonewalled in the Senate.

In order to ensure a Democratic victory for President in 1984, Reagan programs must continue to fail. And they may not have that chance.

Baglio's a happy man

THE STOMPERS
Friday, November 5
The Blue Wall

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

Sal Baglio has got every reason in the world to be happy. As vocalist, guitarist, and scoutmaster for the omnipresent Stompers, you'd think that just keeping a band cohesive and viable for five long years would be enough. But there are, of course, other reasons, and getting signed to record on Boardwalk has got to be easily one of the more glee-inspiring. The Stompers have been a fixture on the Boston club circuit for as long as I can remember, and the cinching of a decent recording deal, well, has been a long time coming.

I've seen the Stompers perform innumerable times but Friday night's show — played to an unroariously appreciative crowd of UMies — had a quality of kineticism and unadulterated exuberance that the band has not displayed in some time. It's da record deal dat done it. Sal was all grins and he couldn't but pass them out to the audience.

The Stompers play clean, good-time, party-youse-ass-off rock reminiscent of Southside Johnny, and songs like "Your the One" and "Coast-to-Coast" have become seasoned Stomper favorites. These are anthems that club-goers are raised on: tight terse, reliable rockers that have succeeded in retaining their freshness and danceability over the years. It will be interesting to hear how they'll sound on vinyl.

And then, of course, the Stompers have always been a superlative cover band. This is how every garage band gets its start, and the Stompers have yet to deny these primal roots. From Dion's "Runaround Sue" and "The Wanderer" to the Isley Brothers' "Shout" the band had the crowd rollicking feverently from start to finish.

The evening's only short-coming was that they just didn't play long enough.

A detail from Sabot/1966/Edible Mushrooms by Donald Evans, complete exhibition of The World of Donald Evans will be on display November 13 — December 19 at the University Gallery.

Living for the music

OPUS X (MILLENNIUM)
Chilliwack

By PETER BENTTINEN
Collegian Correspondent

With Opus x, Chilliwack's tenth album, the band's focus has shifted more towards mainstream rock. The band has been together since the mid-1960's, and are still going strong. Chilliwack's first album, Dreams, Dreams, Dreams, on Mushroom Records, was their first attempt at mass market success. After the record's release Rolling Stone even described the group as the finest Canadian rock band. A legal hassle kept their second album unavailable for two years. The album, Lights Forn The Valley, was finally released and resulted in a couple of top 20 hits on the Canadian charts. Since then, platinum records in Canada have come easily to the band They have even earned the June, Canada's Grammy Award.

The three members here are all multi-talented, likely the reason why the album sounds like a seven man show. Chilliwack have been all around the world, bringing their brand of rock to the people of Asia, Japan, and the United States.

The first song, "Whatcha Gonna Do," is a catchy beginning to the album. Next is another well done ditty, "Secret Information." Judging from this song, it's easy to see why Canadians might love such a group. The sound follows the current direction of many of the bands up the north, although Chilliwack is a little lighter on the ears than Rush — other well-known stalwarts from north of the border. "She Don't Know," "Night Time," and "Lean on Me" are the other tunes on Side 1. They all use fine words to convey their messages.

Side Two begins with an interesting lick, and probably the most stimulating song of the album. It's called, "Don't It Make You Feel Good." That sounds provocative and challenging doesn't it? The next song, "Really Don't Mind" has excellent guitar chording. The last song, "Midnight," is more folk than rock. It is arranged perfectly on the album, a song about midnight and the end of the day finishing of the record.

Opus X is an eclectic and consistent album. Chilliwack plays solid music, stuff that people will always want to hear, even if the band is not too well known. Everything is easy and pretty together. Everything is calm and free. These are words from the song "Midnight" and they tell almost exactly what this group of songs are like: "Living for the music, living to play another day."

A group of eight musicians and two dancers from the People's Republic of China will perform Music and dance of the Silk Route at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, November 9 at the Fine Arts Center.

Theatre promotes third-world

By WENDY WALSH
Collegian Correspondent

"We are on an educational mission," said Roberta Uno, director of the Third-World Theatre Series.

The series, now in its fourth season at UMASS, was established by students under the guidance of Uno to present major contributions of non-European peoples to modern theatre arts.

Life in the Fast Lane, the series' second production of the season, was presented to a receptive audience of various ethnic backgrounds on Thursday evening, as a one man show by Japanese-Hawaiian poet Lane Nishikawa, the presentation was a collection of his most provocative works.

"Our biggest problem," Uno explained, "is letting people know that there is such a thing as a Third-World American play."

"American audiences are now accustomed to seeing Black-American plays and performers," she said, "but Asian and Hispanic works are uncommon and avoided."

"We're American," she said. "Many of us are even third and fourth generation Americans, and we make up a large proportion of the population. But we are absent from most contemporary American theatre."

The goals of the organization are to produce a heightened awareness of Third-World American arts and literature until they could eventually be taught as literature in the universities.

The final play of the series is a domestic comedy about South Africa and the United States entitled Homeland. Co-written by white American Steve Friedman and black South African Selaelo Maredi, Homeland approaches the sensitive issue of racism without digressing into a political tract.

Under the direction of Uno, the production uses actors from the five-college area and various community theatres in the valley.

Homelan will be presented on Nov. 18, 19, 20 and Dec. 2, 3, 4, at 8:00 p.m. in the Hampden Theatre in Southwest. Ticket prices are $2.00 for students and $3.00 for non-students.

A tradition fo the series has been to provide afternoon workshops prior to the performances. These workshops are designed to give background into the Third-World Threatre Series, and to discuss the development and meaning behind the play. Audience participation is encouraged.

The Homeland workshop, which is free and open to all, will be on Nov. 18 from 2:30 to 4:00 p.m. at the Hampden Theatre.

"Ultimately, said Uno, expressing the long-term goal of the series, "it would be nice if there didn't have to be a separate Third-World Theatre Series."

Spikers stopped short

NORTHAMPTON — It was the luck of the draw. The University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team, seeded fifth in the six team Massachusetts state championships, ended up facing top-ranked Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the semi-finals in what some coaches thought should have been the final on Saturday.

After beating Eastern Nazarene 15-4, 11-15, 15-18 in the quarter-finals, the Minutewomen went out and played tough only to lose two tight games, 11-15, 12-15. MIT went on to defeat Smith, who UMass defeated earlier in the year, two games to none in the finals.

UMass dominated the match skill wise in serving, blocking and hitting, but MIT just waited for UM to make some mistakes and capitalized there.

UMass pulled ahead 11-7 in the second game, but MIT came back.

"It was really dissapointing," commented head coach Elaine Sortino. "We didn't pull away when we needed to." Both teams played with intensity and had volleys that went across the net nine or ten times.

"MIT keeps the ball in play no matter what," said assistant coach Sara Bonthuis. "They just keep it play until you make a mistake. They 're not very flashy but they get the job done."

Sally Maher palyed very well as did sophomore Kirsten Smith in the hitting and blocking department.

Against Eastern Nazarene, UM played well in a quick paced match. Massachusetts' service reception was excellent throughout the match, but what gave Eastern a game was the faulty Umass serves in game two.

In game two, UMass missed seven serves and by losing by a 11-15 score showed that Massachusetts dominated in other areas of the match. In the third match, UMass got their serves under control.

Sue Mudry led the Minutewomen when she served five aces out of eight points she served. Maher, again, played very well.

Wednesday, the Minutewomen ranked fifth in New England (division II) close their dual meet season with a match against 3rd ranked Springfield College, in Springfield.

"We are going to need to win the rest of our matches to get a .500 record. That's will be incentive for us," said Bonthius. Massachusetts ends up their 1982 campaign with a visit to the Princeton Classic on Friday and Saturday.

ball as much."

The team played together very well, especially in their passing game. In one instance, Harackiewicz headed the ball to Holmstrom at midfield, who headed it to Watson, who sidekicked it to Prosser, who finally kicked it up behind her and over her head, back to the UR end.

Harackiewicz played tremendously and had control of the ball throughout the game. Although she didn't figure in the scoring, Harackiewicz played her heart out and was a silent contributor to the team's victory.

Unfortunately, in the last four minutes of the game, Harackiewicz was injured near the Yellowjackets goal when Bedard fell on her leg and twisted her ankle.

"Hopefully it's not too serious," Banda said.

UMass had some more close scoring chances in the second half when Stukes tapped the ball to Christine Taggart who spiked it toward the front of the net from the left side. Harackiewicz headed it toward the net, but it just went over the crossbar.

At 22:12 of the second period, for the first time at home all season, UMass was scored upon. The leading goal scorer for the Yellowjackets, Molly Hayes, caught a pass from Sue Hebler and let a long shot go that just got by the left side of Easton and tied the score at 1-1.

"I felt bad about the goal," Easton said. 'I knew they would catch up."

The Rochester crowd was buzzing about the goal until a little over two minutes later, but Holmstrom silenced them. Stacey Flionis rushed down the right side of the field pulling Bedard out of the goal. Holmstrom positioned herself in front of a wide open net, waiting for a chance to break the tie. Flionis, whose passing was excellent in the game, slid the ball over to Holmstrom who had no problems putting it in. The time of the goal was 20:51. The uproar of the UMass crowd made it easy to forget the UR goal two minutes earlier.

"Thank God we got it," co-captain Holmstrom said. "It was a beautiful pass. We've never been scored upon at home so it was the first time we came back. It proved we could come back."

The women didn't stop there, Susan Bird gave a pass to freshman Nadia Komarowski who was rushing in on Bedard with two defenders in front of her. One of the defenders dropped back, and the other defender lost the ball and it went through her legs. Komarowski grabbed the opportunity and ran in on the goalie while the defender chased at her heels. She got a slow shot away that hit the post and came out loose in front of the net. Komarowski ran up and stuffed the ball in over the goalie who had dived to try and save it.

"It was very encouraging for the team to come back," Banda said. "We are letting people know we can do it."

"UMass is a very good team," Rochester coach Terry Gurnett said. "They won the game today because they went to the ball without any fear and are well coached."

A last second goal lifts booters

Barely edge out UMaine 2-1

By CHARISSE E. FEINERMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team ended their home play yesterday in what turned out to be a very exciting win for the Minutemen, 2-1, against the University of Maine.

The game started out on a rather bad note, when after only 2:50 had ticked off the clock, Maine's William Meader kicked the ball over the head of UMass goalkeeper, Jeff Smith, and into the net. The crowd of about 350 UMass fans let out a heavy sigh as they knew that UM had a long 87 minutes and 10 seconds ahead of them to try to regain the lost goal, and to inevitably try to gain the lead.

The remaining 42:10 of the first half was full of many opportunities for the kickers. Captain Kevin Flynn, Lenn Margolis, Michael Rudd, and Fritz Pike each had two shots during the half, however each attempt was fruitless as the timer rang to end the period and Maine was ahead of UMass, 1-0.

During the ten minute halftime period the Minutemen had a couple of things to worry about. The team's record going into yesterday's game was 6-7-2. They needed the win to have a chance at a winning record for the season. (Premonitions of a win against Crimson on Tuesday). The second thing that must have been going through the minds of those on the team, both coaching staff and players, is why after 45 minutes, and 13 UMass shots on goal, compared to two shots for Maine, did Maine lead by a goal?

These and other important questions were not answered until 7:49 remained on the clock and UMass earned its first goal of the game. The goal was set up by Margolis who crossed it to Mike Gibbons, who then passed the ball to Rudd. Rudd then introduced the ball to the net, and the scoreboard read differently than it had for the past 80:01.

When the clock had just a few minutes left on it, practically everyone was anticipating an overtime period, and many spectators were hoping that the Minutemen would not give up a goal with only seconds on the clock. (As in the UConn game).

A pleasant change of events for the kickers came with 20 seconds remaining, when Michael Mahoney put the ball up in the air to an awaiting Kayvan Khatami who put the ball in, and brought the crowd to its feet, and the score to 2-1.

Two UMass players were in the game with injuries (Steven Berlin with a cast on his wrist, and Mike Runaere with a pulled hamstring) and it seemed a miracle that more injuries weren't incurred during the match. UMaine played a rather physical game, and more times than not escaped foul calls or penalties.

"Exciting game...we deserved to win. I think that we played really well," said coach Jeff Gettler.

Gettler was especially happy with the play of Berlin, who has been injured for the majority of the season, and was an integral part of yesterday's play. Gettler praised the abilities of Rudd; who came off the bench to score the first UM goal, Flynn, Brian McHugh, and Margolis.

"Everyone played really well," said Gettler. This was shown by the final tally of shots which amounted to 30:8, and the final score of 2-1.

The Minutemen travel to Cambridge to play Harvard on Tuesday. The kickers record is now 7-7-2, bringing the Minutemen to the .500 mark that they've been striving for all season.

UMass stickwomen shut out by rival UConn 2-0

By JEN KUPPER
Collegian Staff

STORRS, CONN. — The University of Massachusetts field hockey team surrended a disappointing loss to their arch-rival, the University of Connecticut, yesterday afternoon. The Minutewomen were unable to score and UConn took advantage and defeated UMass 2-0.

"That's the story of UConn's life," said UMass head coach Pam Hixon. "They are a team of opportunists. We made a mistake and they took advantage."

Veteran stickwomen fans will recall that UConn made use of their advantages last year when they handed the Minutewomen their only loss of the 1981 campaign in the NCAA championship game 4-1.

UMass did not, by any standards, play a poor game, however. They went into the contest with the intention of playing against the long ball and did so pretty successfully. They were mentally and physically prepared for this one.

Once again, the defense proved to be a stronghold for the Minutewomen. Hixon praised the work of defenders Andrea Muccini, Chris Coughlin and co-captains Ro Tudryn and Carol Progulske.

The offensive punch was the missing link in this game as UMass was able to advance the ball upfield but could not manage to slip it by the UConn goalkeeper.

In fact, UMass dominated the first half in every category except the one that really counts.

The one that counts is scoring, though, and at 26:29 of the period, UConn's Lisa D'Amatio put UConn ahead for good with a fast break tally that got past UMass goalie Patty Shea.

In the second half, UMass' attempts for goals were again futile. Trying to play a game of catchup appeared to put out the initial spark that was present in the first half for the Minutewomen.

The two teams battled for the ball in a network of long drives with each team responding according to the flow of the action.

UConn's second goal came late in the second half. With only four minutes left on the clock, Cindy Dusenchuk of UConn connected on her second scoring opportunity in as many minutes off a corner and UConn had a cushion to sit back on at 2-0

The loss puts the Minutewomen's final regular season record at 14-3-1 while Connecticut moves to a 15-2 mark.

Hixon will know today what the seedings will be for the upcoming NCAA tournament which will determine the 1982 national champion.

split end Paul Zdanek for 25 yards.

When BC opened the second half with an impressive 80-yard touchdown drive, highlighted by a 31-yard pass from Flutie to tight end Scott Nizolek, the game was basically out of reach for the Minutemen. They never gave up, though, and the score was as close as 24-14 as late as the fourth quarter.

UMass had one gem of a drive in the second half, a 92-yard march which displayed both the running ability and passing skills of Simeone. The concluding play of the drive was Simeone's eight-yard touchdown strike to his brother, sophomore split end Bob Simeone.

On the day, Simeone (Jim) ran for 69 yards and passed for an additional 150 yards, including two touchdowns. His second touchdown was a 55-yard bomb to flanker Kevin Jackson. Simeone appears to have emerged as the UMass quarterback of the future.

Pearson, runner extraordinaire, set another UMass record, this one for most yards in a season. The old record was 1139 which was set by Dennis Dent in 1978. With 124 yards Saturday, Pearson now has 1212 yards this year.

"We had our opportunities. I am proud of our football players," commented Pickett.

UMass can't fly where Eagles dare

But, it wasn't that bad a try

By KEVIN DELUCA

Freshman quarterback Jim Simeone looks desperately for daylight as the BC defense closes in.

In a very hard-fought contest, the Boston College Eagles defeated the University of Massachusetts Minutemen Saturday, 34-21, before 16,023 fans at Alumni Stadium.

Normally, a 13-point loss at home is a disappointment. Actually, though, the game was closer than the score indicated, all of which left Minutemen fans pleasantly surprised.

Entering the game, BC was an 18 point favorite desiring a big win in order to impress Tangerine Bowl officials.

UMass, on the other hand, was a team trying to survive the rest of the season while sporting a defense fortified by offensive players and an offense quarterbacked by a freshman.

After the game, BC knew it was lucky to be escaping Amherst with a victory while the Minutemen were proud of their effort yet slightly disappointed; realizing that they could have won.

The Eagles struck first, but not without help. On UMass' first possession, quarterback Jim Simeone's deflected pass was intercepted and returned to the UMass 15 yardline. A very spirited Minuteman defense held and forced BC to kick a field goal.

UMass did not score until well into the second quarter. After a long UMass drive, initiated by defensive end Todd Comeau's interception, stalled at BC's goal line, the Minutemen bounced back on their next possession. They drove 32 yards in six plays, with tailback Garry Pearson going over from the one for the score. UMass then led, 7-3.

Unfortunately, the lead was short-lived. On BC's next series, they were forced to punt. However, free safety Grady Fuller fumbled the punt and the Eagles recovered on the UMass 12 yard line. From there, in two short plays fullback Bob Biestek had the first of his two touchdowns and BC had a lead they would never relinquish.

With 1:21 left in the half, the key play of the game occurred. Down 10-7 and at their own 42, UMass decided to go for the first down on fourth and one.

"We were going to punt, then I changed my mind. We would have been kicking into the wind and our regular punter (Deom Drougas) was hurt. Besides, we had less than a yard to go, so we went for it," explained UMass coach Bob Pickett.

"I was a little surprised that they decided to go for it. It ended up being a key play," commented BC coach Jack Bicknell.

It turned out to be a key mistake. Pearson was dropped for a three yard loss and BC proceeded to march 39 yards in 43 seconds for seven points and a 17-7 halftime lead. The big play in the drive was quarterback Doug Glutie's third down pass to Debbie Ha[illegible]iewicz fights for possession of the ball during Saturday's NCAA [illegible] between UMass and the University of Rochester.

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

After the UMass women's soccer team overpowered the University of Rochester 3-1 in their NCAA playoff game on Saturday, the only thing that was on the minds of the team and its fans was 'we're going to Florida.'

The women, for the second year in a row, successfully defeated 10th ranked Rochester in the first round of the NCAA tournament and next week are on their way to play third ranked Central Florida in the quaterfinals.

UMass, which was a "little tense" as the game started, picked up the pace early and scored 17 minutes and 52 seconds into the game as co-captain Natalie Prosser scored a beautiful goal that got the women buzzing.

Debbie Pickett passed the ball in front of the net to Prosser who headed the ball into the goal by Yellowjacket goalie Sharon Bedard, who attempted a diving save but couldn't quite reach the ball.

"It was an excellent cross from Debbie," Prosser said about the pass from Pickett, "and it was perfectly placed."

Prosser played a great game and had several good shots on net. She played aggressively and her leadership helped the team.

"The person who set the tone today and has been setting the tone all season long is Natalie Prosser," assistant coach James Williams said.

"She's one of the best captains I've ever had," head coach Kalekeni Banda added.

Nina Holmstrom, who later scored the women's tie breaking goal, had some close scoring opportunities in the first half. Freshman Debbie Harackiewicz kicked the ball from the corner to Lori Stukes, who in turn kicked it into a crowd of players in the front center of the net. Holmstrom was there to head the ball toward the net, but Bedard got her hands on the ball before it went in.

Fullback Stukes played a flawless game of defense and always seemed to be in the right place at the right time for UMass. On one occasion in the half Stukes had a great block on a UR forward when the ball was down in the UMass zone and the Rochester player was in line for a shot on net. Stukes held her ground and when the player shot the ball, Stukes blocked it with her body and proceeded back up to the Rochester end.

UMass goalie Tammie Easton only had to save two shots in the first period.

The Yellowjackets put a lot of pressure on the Minutewomen's defense toward the end of the period, but the women protected their net well. Jackie Gaw, Beth Semonik, and Stukes did everything in their power to control the ball and eventually they got it rolling in the right direction — toward the Rochester end.

1981 All American Megan Mackenzie wasn't too much of a threat to UMass because she wasn't given the chance. She didn't get the ball too much but when she did she kept the Minutewomen defenders on guard.

Jamie Watson was bounding into anything in her way, though not as hard as usual because of problems with her leg. Still, the tired Watson seemed to go at full speed.

"Jamie was low because of her shin and couldn't go after the ball as much," Banda said. "She makes the team start moving. We didn't force things, didn't go after the 3,000 PROTEST AGAINST KU KLUX KLAN, Washington D.C.

This past Saturday approximately 30 UMass students joined 3,000 people from across the country in Washington, D.C. for an Anti-Klan Rally. The rally was organized by the National Anti-Klan Network.

The demonstration consisted of a host of speakers and entertainers including Sweet Honey In the Rock, Congressional Black Caucus Head Representative Walter Fauntleroy and Martha Nathan who's husband was killed by the Klan in Greensboro, N.C. three years ago.

The march went from the Capitol Building to the White House. The emphasis was not only on the Klan but on the Reagan Administration whom the organizers of the rally believe has created an atmosphere for the Klan to increase its activities.

The march coincided with similar rallies held across the country. On the same day, Northampton was the site of the local counter-rally.

The national counter-rally was organized in response to the Klan's campaign to hold a rally in Washington, D.C. on that same day. The Klan had to postpone their rally because they did not get their permit in time. The Klan rally was to be the biggest rally in recent years with Klansmen coming from all over the country.

Yet the Klan did demonstrate in nearby Montgomery County where 25 Klansmen had a rally at Wheaton Regional Park. The rally was in support of the county police. The police did not allow anybody but the press into the park and surrounded it with 280 police officers.

The Klan is planning to have its Washington, D.C. rally the day after Thanksgiving. Anti-Klan organizers said if the Klan does rally they will be back for another counter-rally.

Approximately 3,000 people demonstrated on Capitol Hill, Saturday, November 6, to protest the KKK's planned demonstration.

Sweet Honey In the Rock sang at the rally.

Cape Verdean Ambassador Strengthens Bonds Between U.S. and Cape Verde Islands

by Angela Brown

The importance of co-operation between Cape Verdeans of the U.S. and those who reside in the Islands was one of many themes highlighted at a very special event that took place on October 13, 1982. The Cape Verdean community paid tribute to the Cape Verdean Ambassador to the U.S., Jose Fernandes Lopes, in a ceremonial event sponsored by the (American) National Coordinating Committee for the Development of Cape Verde. Approximately 300 people attended the event held in Brockton, Massachusetts.

The event was marked by speeches made by some of the leaders of the NCCDCV as well as state and community leaders. Ambassador Lopes himself also addressed the audience, speaking in the Cape Verdean language. But, before he began the body of his speech, he said a few words in English. After thanking the audience for its commendation, he alluded to the situation that Cape Verde faces, saying "...in Cape Verde we understand that talk alone doesn't matter if it doesn't go for the development of Cape Verde."

The many achievements of Ambassador Lopes, who is a youthful 35 years of age, were noted in a presentation made by Ms. Mary Barros, Vice Chairperson of the NCCDCV. Trained as an Agrarian Engineer, Ambassador Lopes has done much throughout his life to advance his country in the broadest array of areas of development. These include the fields of secondary education, foreign relations and diplomacy and service in the Popular National Assembly of Cape Verde. Ambassador Lopes was a key participant in the negotiations for the independece of Cape Verde which followed the protracted struggle that removed the Portugese from power over the colony in 1975. Lopes also served as the Secretary of Education and aided in the implementation of the Administrative Reform, which also included the reform of the electoral laws of the country. Jose Fernandes Lopes was appointed Ambassador in 1980.

The event illustrated the ongoing nature of the struggle of Cape Verdeans everywhere for progress, and showed that solidarity with Cape Verde was felt to be important for all involved. When NCCDCV Chairman Manuel Monteiro spoke, special note was made of the importance of economic assistance for Cape Verde. Monteiro noted that the recent releif campaign for Cape Verdean hurricane victims was highly successful, providing several hundred thousand dollars in aid. The feeling projected in the evening's presentations was that the strength of the Cape Verdean cultural heritage was the reason that the close-knit Cape Verdean community continues to provide real support for its motherland in Africa.

The New England area is endowed with a large population of Cape Verdean descent, a population which has grown over the past few generations and concentrated in the southern part of the region.

Cape Verde, as well as Guinea Bissau, Angola and Mozambique, overthrew Portugal's colonial domination in 1975. The Cape Verde Islands have undergone tremendous economic development, but still remains largely non-industrialized, as do many newly independent nations in Africa.

Affirmative Action Presentation at Faculty Senate

by Angela Brown

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION PRESENTATION AT FACULTY SENATE PROCLAIMS COMMON GOALS, REQUESTS FACULTY SUPPORT

"...In these times, I see all about me that women and minorities and handicapped persons continue to be judged not by their potential, but by their differences," said Ms Thelma Griffith-Johnson in a special presentation to the Faculty Senate at last Thursday's session. The presentation was a general discussion of Griffith-Johnson's philosophy and her role as the recently appointed Affirmative Action Officer for the University of Massachusetts.

During her presentation, Griffith-Johnson explored the context in which she is charged with helping to improve the composition of the University's staff and faculty. "I am acutely aware...of the fear, tension, suspicion and rigidity that just the words 'Affirmative Action' can conjure up....from its inception, Affirmative Aciton has been used as a political 'football'," said Griffith-Johnson. She explained that, depending on the political orientation of those in power, changes in the commitment to Affimative Action, a policy whereby chronic underrepresentation of certain groups is remedied, will occur. Griffith-Johnson stated that she aimed to help create a program stable enough to be "...beyond political whims."

Griffith-Johnson's presentation also included some notes about her recent policy proposals. "I believe that we can conduct searches with high integrity, but with a minimum of 'red tape'," she said in reference to her Search Procedure proposal, one which is still in its working stage. Griffith-Johnson stated that the University's goal, to reach an "...optimum civilized and humanistic level", "will not be attained until we seriously understand the need for sustained attitudinal and financial undergirding for the support programs already in place...". She called for complete representativeness "...at every level of this University."

Griffith-Johnson's presentation contained many insights into the problem that Affirmative Action policies were created to help resolve. She used these insights, drawn from historical examples, to enlighten all who were present about their responsibility to act on behalf of the professed goals of the University. She stated that in her role as the Affirmative Action Officer she wanted to join with others to make the University "...a place where excellence is aggressively pursued...nurtured and protected for the future of human ideas and ideals and for all mankind."

Griffith-Johnson's address was enthusiastically recieved by the Senate audience, indicating that Third World students can expect to see positive developments in the future.

Politics and Culture Promoted at Amherst College

by Roxana Bell

La Causa, is the representative Hispanic organization on the campus of Amherst College. It has taken the lead in issues concerning the hiring of Hispanic faculty as well as reviewing the applications for the incoming freshmen students. Although the Amherst College Administration has been sympathetic towards the issue of hiring a Hispanic faculty member,it has been 3 years since this issue has been in effet. Many Hispanic students see this absence of a Hispanic faculty member as a lack of support form the Administration towards the none white students on the campus.

La Causa, in English meaning The Cause, was given its name in the mid '70s by a group of Mexican students enrolled at the college. The organization was named after the movement of Cesar Chavez, of the United Farm Workers Union. In December of 1978 the Hispanic students occupied Fayerweather Lounge for 3 days damanding that they have a center which represents them in every aspect. The center which was faught for and victoriously won, is now called the Jose Marti Cultural Center.

"We are both a political and cultural organization, there can be no separation between these two aspects of life", said Eduardo Roy, the Co-Chairperson of La Causa. La Causa has been labeled a political organization; they have sponsored many events in which prominant figures such as Isabel Letelier, the widow of the Chilean Ambasador who was assasinated in 1973 in Washington D.C.,Velma Martinez a representative of the Mexican-American movement ,and two Guatemalan priests who spoke about the terrors of the Central American country "We try to have a mixture of events, such as the Salsa concert featuring, Willi Colon that happened this past month,"continued Roy. One of the organization's major concerns is exposing the community to the realities of Latin America, not only through the voices of known figures, people such as Heads of States or Ambassadors who can bring together a large crowd just because of their name or possition, but also those who might not have a possition or a famous name, but has something important to say, not only to a selected few but to all. These are the people that have little access to the main stream media, but yet,these are the people who have much to say.

Next semesters events will inclued people such as Cesar Chavez , the founder of the United Farm Workers Union, a representative of the Frente Sandinista de Liberación Nacional (FSLN)the new government of Nicaragua, and two Central American priests.

"We are also co-sponsoring, with other five college organizations, the Latin American Womens Writers Conference which will take November 11 through the 13. This conference was possible because of the efforts of many people but in particular to the Program Coordinator Proffesor Eliana Ortega of Mount Holyoke College."commented Roy. The issue of women in Latin America has been of great concern to the members of La Causa. They have always tryed to put forth the issue of the Latin American women in what ever event they produce.

"We feel in debted to the rest of the community," explains Eduardo, "the response we've gotten from the other members of the five college community has been great." The participation of the Amherst College community has been poor. It is disturbing to La Causa members that neither the students of Amherst College ,nor the faculty, don't attend the activities . "We do recieve monetary support from different departments in the College for our activities, but when it comes down to actual attendence of these faculty members, they don't show up to these activities which they are themselves supporting. It's like the father who sends his kid to a very expensive college, gives the kid all the material goods he needs, a car, money, etc. But yet he dosen't give the kid what he really needs, the support and understanding of a father. Like I said, we are greatfull for the support the outside community has given us, but Amherst College is were we live and interact, and we want these people (Amherst College community) to know more about our cultures, and to understand more about us, the Latinos of Amherst College."

Nummo periodically prints articles about Third World Student Organizations in the Pioneer Valley.

An Evening with Nikki Giovanni

Nikki Giovanni read poetry for Black Homecoming Week, last Wednesday.

by Tracey Bryant

Through the efforts of Afrik-Am, a black poetic prodigy, Nikki Giovanni, spoke at Bowker Auditorium, Wednesday night. Ms. Giovanni's performance was the highlight of the Black Homecoming Week activities.

Prefacing the actual reading with 'things she just had to get off her chest', the lecturer discussed everything from the elections to E.T. She discussed "the human condition."

She told the audience that, "People don't reach out to each other. At some point we should realize that something is wrong with the human experience." She said that people went into the movie theatres and came out crying about E.T., but don't care about the little black children not able to get an education. She pointed to Reagonomics and the re-election of George Wallace in Alabama, and said, "In 1982, we're still dealing with the problems of the sixties." She asked if we were really making progress.

"As long as we leave handguns in the hands of people," she continued, "people are going to be killed" She also stated that unemployment will cause a rise in battery. She ended her statement on national defense with, "The only worthwhile endeavor is another human being."

On relationships she said, "I think all relationships are valid. It's none of my business who you love. You're here to please you. It's crazy that we're involved in so many negatives with each other. It's hard to live your own life."

She talked about control, being controlled, sexism and the psychology of the latter two. "Most of us are afraid of being happy and afraid of change. We understand our abuse."She went on to say that, "Life isn't just getting over and through; it's not just being safe."

She told the audience that, "we need to spend our lives doing what is uniquely human. We can't make a robot human,but we can beat your dreams out of you; we can make you a robot. I, (as a human being) can contemplate the unknown. Someone has to do this." She asked, "What is human life?" "How can we justify our existence?" "How do we justify the killing of a baby seal?" "What does it mean that the air is living? Does it mean tht we can pollute it? What does it mean that water flows? Does it mean that we can throw chemicals in it? What does it mean to be here on this earth?"

"We have to make a decision about ourselves and our lives. We need to be concerned about human beings. If humans aren't sufficient unto themselves, what are we waiting for?" "Don't be afraid to lead your own life, to do something more, to go a bit further." "Don't let the fools determine what your life is. Some of us deserve a little more than what we're offered and what we get." "Black Homecoming is a proper time to contemplate what is home..."

Third World Groups Hold Open Forum

By Adria Crum Third World Caucus and Gary Lee Office of Third World Affairs

On Tuesday October 26th, the leaders of various campus non-white student groups and others met at the Malcolm X Center. The meeting was convened by the Third World Caucus of the UMass Student Senate and the Office of Third World Affairs.

The tone of the meeting was overwhelmingly positive and the participants shared information about their respective organizations; history, resources, projects, and goals. The issues adressed ran from financial aid and programs offered by the Everywoman's Center to Afrik-Am Society's planning and the Afro-Am Studies Department's experiment with the World of Video. The need for greater communication, cooperation, and coordination among groups was stressed throughout the meeting. Of course apathy was also discussed. As ususal, there is a small group of dedicated individuals (mostly female) that are doing the bulk of the work. The expansion of organizations and the Third World Caucus is a must to insure the future of strong non-white student groups.

Recently, NUMMO News, Black Affairs, and the Black Mass. Communications Project have come under fire by their white media counterparts (Collegian and WMUA). There have been ludicrous assertions that these non-white media are not viable, that they don't conform to established norms, that perhaps they should be disbanded or absorbed. These complaints have not come from people of color, but from whites who presume to know our constituencies, our needs, etc.....Incidents like this emit the stench of RACISM.

Our comunity does not need paternalism. We, as people of color spanning the visual historical, and cultural spectrum thrive on diversity; and it is imperative that we strive to preserve, protect, and perpetuate our heritage.

In the future there will be more of these meetings and we encourage all sisters and brothers to get involved. Be a part of the solution , not the problem; survival is impossible without participation and support.

Special Thanks to Afrik-Am for an inspiring week of Activities.

Afrik-Am is the Black Cultural organization on campus. It was the first Third World organization to be started here on campus.

College students have proven to be an effective political force throughout history. Be it Soweto or Mexico City, San Juan or Tehran, students have been politically active in creating change in our society.

This especially pertains to Black students in this country. When three North Carolina A* T students decided to sit at a "white only" lunch counter in the early 60's, they started the sit-in movement that soon swept across the country. Black students were also very important in voter registration drives and organizations such as the NAACP and SCLC. The Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) was one of the most important organizations of that period.

Here at UMASS, Afrik-Am continues the legacy of those years of struggle. It was Black students that took over the New Africa House building, then named Mills dormitory. In the process of demanding an Afro-Am department and that the building become the center of the Black student community, the Afro-American Society was created. The organization has recently changed its name to Afrik-Am.

Afrik-Am has sponsored such programs as Kwanza, Black Homecoming and the Spring Picnic. The organization has also brought such personalities as Michael Manley and Nikki Giovanni to the UMass campus.

The organization is a great outlet for Black students who want to help provide cultural programming for and about the Black community. The organizing of budgets and programs is also valuable experience for students of all majors who are interested in going into any type of business situation in the future.

Afrik-Am is an organization for all Black students. In the words of one Black alumni, "All Black students are members of Afrik-Am." Whether you are active or not it is a part of the history of Black students here at UMASS.

For more information contact the Afrik-Am office located in room 418 of the New Africa House or call 545-3896. Afrik-Am has meetings every Tuesday on the third floor of the New Africa House. Be a part of history and join Afrik-Am.

For Angel, For Viequez

by Aurora Levins Morales

When they came into that hot Florida jailcell, looking up into their faces, did you see your death sentence like a wall across their eyes? Or did the first blow take you by surprise? Did you keep thinking this is just another beating, until suddenly you understood, or your flesh understood for you they weren't holding any punches...they weren't going to stop? How much of a consolation was it, knowing the exact reason for your death?

The whitest beaches in the world. Water so clear you can see fish move through coral reefs 60 feet down. Low clouds drifting in the sea breeze trail their blue shadows across the translucent waves, and for a moment, darken the green land.

Look again. This is the landscape of war: the whitest beach, the greenest hill, earth pitted and scarred into a family likeness: the familiar, pockmarked face of Viet Nam, showing up here, in our family: little sister, Isla Nena. Ships, jets, tanks, trucks, bombs and bombs and bombs. The noise cracks the walls of the houses. Even the sea dawn of the Caribbean is shell-blasted. This is an island the US Navy wanted, For target practice.

People live here, crowded into densely packed strips of terrain. The cattle farmers are allowed to graze their animals on the shorn and now eroding hills alongside the impact areas. Here and there a dead cow shows the effects of straying. The cow should have stayed where it belonged, says the Navy. Angel's face, beaten and bruised in that cell. The flies settling on the blood, and no hand brushing them off. You should have stayed where you belonged.

The cattlemen are allowed the use of the hills, but the sea is fenced in with regulations. PRIVATE PROPERTY says the sea these days. NO TRESPASSING. These boats have worked the water for generations. These brown-faced people know every shape of food or danger belonging to salt water. Now they are told: PRIVATE PROPERTY, this ancient hunting of fish, the craft, the weapons, the hunting ground. PRIVATE PROPERTY the waking before dawn to place the nets and traps. PRIVATE PROPERTY the coming to shore with a good catch. WE OWN LIVES. WE OWN YOUR LIVES. THE DIFFERENCE IS, WE NEED THE SEA. For target practice.

Poem for Angel Rodriguez Cristobal

Operation Springboard, they call it, or Readex. A dress rehearsal for murder. The Chilean Navy pretends it is Valparaiso in 1973. The US Marines imagine it's the Dominican Republic in 1965. It was almost Nicaragua, 1979. It may still be Nicaragua...1980, 81, 82. The perfect imitation invasion. Each year the Navy rents out our destruction at a thousand bucks an hour.

Under a large moon that gives each new leaf a knife edge of light, we plant the torn earth. When we leave, an army of seedlings is camped at the crater's edge. In the morning the sign reads THIS ACRE HAS BEEN RECLAIMED BY THE CRUSADE FOR THE RESCUE OF VIEQUES.

5 a.m. All heat has left this room. The body that was on the floor is hanging from the ceiling. The blood has dried. In a few hours, prison officials will discover a "suicide." (The Navy calls in its experts to testify that the song of the tree frogs is actually louder than the jets). The prison officials will testify that Angel could have beaten himself.

Sea, ancient sea, wide illuminated sea of our dreaming and waking. Green and blonde land, cricket bound, bird hidden island of mangrove and naked hill. Between the elusive fire of phosphorescent bay and the slow, brown downbeat of the pelican's noon flight, under the thin strands of barbed wire and the warning signs, our life is still the thickest, the toughest root.

Slipping past the signs we walked through the sleeping camp, the safeguard of US national security, and made our way to the water, to place our bodies between the gunner and the target. Offshore, the warships. The bishop held a service and we all sang. Then : jeep, truck, jeep, soldiers. The guards pull and arrest, shove and club and arrest. The bishop is arrested. An old woman is dragged along the beach and arrested. They are charged with trespassing, which means being on your own land when someone else wants it. Some of the people arrested are sent to federal penitentiaries in the States. One of them is sent to Florida. To that cell.

Angel, your jailcell death is a cold sweat on my skin. It's getting bloodier closer to home. Vieques, this Viet Nam bomb blasted landscape is a nightmare at the back of my eyes, a taste there, photographs of a war that all the time gets bloodier and bloodier and closer to home.

Angel Rodriguez Cristobal

In Remembrance of Cristobal's Death

Our comrade Angel Rodríguez Cristóbal was assassinated yesterday November 11, in the federal penitentiary at Tallahassee, Florida. Rodriquez Cristóbal was a member of teh Central Committee and of the Political Bureau of the Puerto Rican Socialist League. Rodríguez Cristóbal appeared before the federal court of the United States in San Juan last September 26 to respond to charges of having penetrated on lands that the yanki Navy occupies with its arms in Vieques. He put forward his impugning of this foreign court with such gallantry that it moved even the journalists present. He was condemned to six months in prison and a $500 fine. Immediately jailed, three days later he was expatriated to the imperialist penitentiary where he was assassinated yesterday.

The government of the United States is responsible for the assassination of Angel Rodríguez Cristóbal, patriot, revolutionary, defender of Vieques and leader of the Puerto Rican Socialist League. Angel Rodríguez Cristobal enters into the pantheon of the immortals. Like Buean Ventura Quiñones in the 19th Century, his death defines a situation in the history of Puerto Rico. He is the first Puerto Rican to pay with his life as a prisoner of war in defencse of Vieques. Together with his coffin we lower our flags and renew our pledges of independence or death.

"La Batalla de Vieques"

(The Battle of Vieques)

Arturo Meléndez López is an historian and professor at the University of Puerto Rico. He has devoted the past years to studying Vieques and testified as an expert when the case of Vieques was presented before the United Nations Decolonization Committee in August, 1979. Arturo has made important contributions in the public debate on Vieques in Puerto Rico and has published newspaper articles on the subject.

After a lifetime of historical investigation and political practice, Arturo Meléndez Lopez now presents his book "La Batalla de Vieques" (The Battle of Vieques), another contribution to the struggle that the people of Vieques have undertaken. This book gives us the opportunity to know more fully the history of our people.

Through "La Batalla de Vieques" we experience the political struggles of the mid-20th century in Puerto Rico and Vieques, witnessing the events that reveal the opportunism of the Puerto Rican colonial administrators, selling the lands of the people of Vieques and Puerto Rico for the military purposes of the North American empire, to guarantee its political, military, and economic hegemony in the Caribbean and Latin America. And we discover in this book the heroic struggle of the people of Vieques and of those Puerto Ricans who have sided with Vieques. They, the people themselves, become the leading actors in The Battle of Vieques.

The author is fully conscious of his function as a writer for the people and of the historical forces that make possible his work, not only in the facts that he provides, but in his heart and soul, and for this reason the book is dedicated to one of the heroes of Vieques, Angel Rodriquez Cristobal, who gave everything, including his life, for the life of a people fishing for their dignity, Vieques.

Vieques, Isla Nena, is an island 6 miles from Puerto Rico which has been militarily occupied by the US Navy since World War II. To justify the invasion of the island the US Navy claims it was a strategic territory for their national defense.

Today, 35 years since the end of W.W. II, the US Navy still occupies ⅔ of the island. The people of Vieques are struggling to regain control of their land, free from the military maneuvers , bombings, and fishing restrictions imposed upon them by the U.S. Navy.

Vieques is Puerto Rico and Puerto Rico is Vieques. The struggle continues- La lucha continuara!

Arturo Meléndez López es historiador y profesor de la Universidad de Puerto Rico. Ha dedicado los últimos años a la investigación histórica de Vieques y sirvió como experto cuando el caso de Vieques se presentó ante el Comité de Descolonización de las Naciones Unidas en el mes de agosto de 1979. Arturo ha hecho excelentes contribuciones en el debate publico sobre el caso de Vieques en Puerto Rico y ha publicado en varios periódicos sobre este tema.

Despues de toda una vida de investigación y práctica política Arturo Melendez López nos presenta su obra "La Batalla de Vieques" como una contribución más a la lucha que libra el pueblo viequense. Este libro nos brinda una gran oportunidad de conocer mejor la historia de nuestro pueblo.

En La Batalla de Vieques recorremos las luchas políticas de midtad de siglo 20 en Puerto Rico y Vieques y nos aduenamos en conocimiento de datos que relevan el oportunismo personalista de los administradores de la colonia puertorriqueña rindiendo en forma comercial las tierras del pueblo de Vieques y Puerto Rico para usos militares del Imperio Norteamericano y para que este último garantizara su hegemonia politicomilitar y economica en el hemisferio caribeno y latinoamericano. Descubrimos también en esta obra la heroica lucha del pueblo de Vieques y de aquellos puertorriquenos que se han solidarizado con Vieques. Esta antítesis, que es el pueblo mismo, se convierte en protagonista de La Batalla de Vieques.

El autor tiene plena conciencia de su función como escritor para el pueblo y de las fuerzas históricas que hacen possible su obra, no solamente con los datos que provee sino con su alma y corazón y por eso dedica su libro a uno de los heroes de Vieques, Angel Rodríguez Cristobal, quien entregara todo lo que su naturaleza podía dar, dio su vida por la vida de un pueblo que pesca su dignidad, Vieques.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Eyewitness Account on the Invasion of Lebanon

by Panna Putnam

Of the entire invasion of Lebanon by Israel last June, one of the least known facts is the indiscriminate jailing and torture of thousands of Palestinian men by Israeli armed forces.

When Israel invaded South Lebanon in June of '82, orders were given to detain all Palestinian men between the ages of 12 and 60 as a part of premediated and well planned campaign of annhilation that eventually led to the massacre of Sabra and Shatila camp refugees on September 16, 17 and 18.

One of those detained and later jailed and tortured was Dr. Chris Giannou, a Canadian surgeon who was the medical director at a hospital in Nabuchia, Sidon in Southern Lebanon. Canada intervened as soon as it was known that a Canadian doctor had been jailed by Israel and upon proper identification, Dr. Giannou was released. While in prison, Dr. Giannou experienced and witnessed harrassment and torture along with thousands of Palestinian men and children at the hands of the Israel forces. All the prisoners were denied food and water for 2 to 3 days and left out in the hot, summer sun (with temperatures up to 95 degrees) to suffer with their hands and legs tied and with no cover for their heads. If any prisoner requested water, they were kicked in the stomach, beaten on their heads with guns or beaten on their bare bodies with electric wires.

Few of those imprisoned have been located, with little hope of being rescued alive. Dr. Giannou was one of the two (the other was a Swedish doctor also mistaken for a Palestinian and interned by the Israel forces) that have gotten out alive. Giannou will be at UMass to give us an eyewitness account of the Israel concentration camps, much to Israel's consternation.

Chris Giannou to Speak at UMass

The Palestinian Solidarity Committee is sponsoring Chris Giannou to give an eyewitness account on the Invasion of Lebanon. Chris Giannou is a Canadian surgeon who was practicing in Lebanon at the time of the Israeli invasion in June, 1980. Arrested and imprisoned by Israeli forces, he was later released after official Canadian government protest.

The event is free and will be held on November 8, 1982 in Campus Center room 101 at 7:00 pm. For more information call 545-0883.

Third World Women in Liberation Struggles.

The Third World Women's Task Force is sponsoring a film series this autumn semester, 1982, entitled: Third World Women in Liberation Struggles. In concert with each film presentation, there will also be a faculty member from the five college area to speak, answer questions, fill in gaps, update the film, and help lead a discussion. It is the hope of the Third World Women's Task Force that these presentations will provide a forum of discussion as well as education around topics of concern to the Third World, and specifically to the women of the Third World.

This is a lunchtime film series to be held every-other Thursday at noon until 1 p.m. These presentations are free of charge and open to all.

Due to the nature of the organization, and to the extremely limited budget we are working with, we are asking those groups and individuals like yourselves who share common interests to co-sponosr the series by making a monetary contribution, if possible. Any amount is both welcome and appreciated. We thank you for your interest in our program.

November 18th Women Under Siege
A brand new film which looks at the participation of the women of a small Palestinian village located just six miles north of the Israeli border in their unique and often overlooked struggle. * Speaker TBA. Thursday, noon - 1 o'clock. U.Mass Campus Center. Room 903.

December 2nd A Vieled Revolution
From the same woman who produced Women Under Siege, comes this very recent account of the women's movement in Egypt. *Speaker TBA. Thursday, noon - 1 o'clock. U.Mass Campus Center. Room 904-08.

* Indicates that the speaker has not yet formally confirmed. TBA:to be arranged.

The Scientific Principles of Fighting

Self defense, what is it?
Self defense is the ability to defend oneself, both mentally and physically, within any given situation and through means of learned conditioned highly focused reflexes, both offensively and defensively systems.

To develop conditioned reflexes that are highly focused you mobilize the needed motor skills, which are speed, power, timing, strength, and agility. Good fighting skills are very easy to learn. Please check out this class if you feel the need to learn another skill, in this case for self preservation. Classes are held per semester.

Classes: Females - Mondays, Thursdays and Sundays room 114 New Africa House
Time: 7:00 PM - 9:00 PM, Mondays and Thursdays
3:00 PM - 5:00 PM Sundays

Males: Tuesday, Wednesdays and Saturdays room 114 New Africa House
Time: 7:00 PM - 9:00 PM, Tuesdays and Wednesdays
3:00 PM - 5:00 PM, Saturdays
Registration room 325 New Africa House

Liberation Film Series

The Northampton Committee on Central America is pleased to announce the debut of it's new film series, "Liberation Film Series" which opened at the Pleasant Street Theater in Northampton. The film will cost $1.50 and proceeds will go to the continuation of the series. For the time being limited seating is available as we are using the downstairs theatre.Following is the proposed schedule of films. All films begin at 2 pm.

November 14 -"Salt of the Earth"- the chronicle of a strike by mainly Chicano miners in New Mexico. The film's main interest is with the process, the changes in consicousness, which enabled the miners and their families to succeed in their struggle.

21 - "Grapes of Wrath"- classic look at America in the Depression Era, starring the late Henry Fonda.

December 5 - "The Murder of Fred Hampton"- a documentary portraying the events leading to the government plotted assasination of Fred Hampton a Black Panther leader.

12- "The Westfield Strike"- a videomade by a local film maker on the Sterling Radiator strike. The film gained national attention for the strikers.

19- "Decision to Win - The First Fruits"- this film presents an engrossing portrait of life in the province of Morazan, El Salvador a stronghold of the Ferabund Martí para la Liberación Nacional (F.M.L.N.)

Anti-condo push planned

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Staff

Attempting to keep in check the growing menace of condominium conversions in Amherst, students at the University of Massachusetts will be writing letters today to Speaker of the House Thomas McGee urging legislative support of a bill to restrict local conversions.

The letter writing campaign, stationed in the Student Union lobby, is an effort to hasten the passage of a home rule petition in the legislature to allow the town to restrict condominium conversions until Amherst's one percent rental vacancy rate reaches five percent, said Joanne Levenson, director of the Off-Campus Housing Office.

Condominium conversion in the face of a "critical housing situation," she said, "has a direct impact on raising rents and forces out students and low income families. The impact is devastating."

Levenson said it is important to recognize the claims of opportunity that accompany conversion projects are offered under the "guise of home ownership." The result: displacements of tenants, evictions, high rents and lack of available housing become secondary considerations.

The regulatory petition, passed in Oct. 1981 by an overwhelming majority of Town Meeting members, is an outgrowth of a condominium conversion by-law rejected by the Attorney General in April 1981 on the grounds that the town exceeded its authority under home rule legislature, Levenson said.

"Real estate lobbying is pretty powerful," she said. "It (the rejection) says nothing more."

The threat of conversions in Amherst is real given the large number of apartment complexes in the area. Levenson said two conversions have been completed since 1981 while the legislative procedures needed to enact the regulatory bill in Amherst have shuffled the issue aside.

Amherst Selectman Richard Minear said when a large number of people live in complexes that exhibit a potential for conversion, the concern is legitimate.

With no full-time lobbyists working for the interests of tenants, Levenson said McGee will receive the message that he has a constituency of tenants behind him demanding immediate action. Otherwise, Levenson said it could be another six months before the action is taken.

"It is important that all students take a minute to support this legislation, so that available rental housing stock will remain in the Amherst area," said Mitch Gaslin, member of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The letter writing table is being sponsored by the Tenants Organizing Project, a newly formed coalition of students working in the interest of Amherst tenants. The table will be situated in the Student Union from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. today.

Available at the table will be form letters which students can simply sign if they want to show their support.

$25M financial aid OKed

By MICHELLE MURRAY
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Senate last night approved a measure which would increase state financial aid by $25 million.

Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, said the Senate wanted to pass the bill and send it to theHouse as quickly as possible "to give everyone enough time to process scholarship and financial aid applications for the approaching fiscal year.

For the past ten years the general scholarship aid fund in Massachusetts has remained at $15 million and has eroded in buying power due to inflation. The measure passed by the senate would nearly double the amount in general scholarship aid boosting it to $29 million.

The package would increase the number of students eligible for aid as well as increase the size of a financial aid awards.

The measure adds three new programs to the Massachusetts financial aid structure. The first is a work-study program with $5 million allotted to work-study funds, requiring 1/3 of those work-study monies to be matched by employers, increasing the toal worth of work-study funds to $7.5 million.

The second added program targets graduate students and would provide $3 million in scholarship money for them. This program calls for $1 million in matching funds from private industry and would boost graduate student scholarship funds to a total of $4 million in worth.

The final program is smaller and would allot $1 million in emergency aid to single-parent heads of households on public assistance.

Sen. Olver explained that these people usually have the greatest risk and small financial crises can drive them out of school. The emergency aid would help these people to remain in school and in the long run be beneficial to the State because once they have finished school they are less likely to be dependent on public assistance, Olver said.

Olver said the scholarship program in Massachusetts is "very meager and very necessary because the economy in Massachusetts is knowledge-based.

Doctor recounts slaughter

By DAVE LINTON
Collegian Staff

The atrocities that have occurred in the war in Lebanon were part of a process of dehumanization and that process has been repeated in history, according to a Canadian doctor who operated on hundreds of victims of the war.

"There was a massacre before the massacre and there is a continuing massacre," Dr. Chris Giannou last night told an audience of about 60 to 70 people.

Giannou had practiced medicine in Lebanon for two years and was the chief surgeon at the Palestinian Red Crescent (Red Cross) hospital in Sidon south of Beirut when Israel invaded Lebanon on June 7, 1982, he said.

"Think about it. In the last quarter of the 20th century a major city was laid siege to for three months and the world just sat by and watched," he said.

Giannou compared the siege of Beirut to the genocide of the Jews in Nazi Germany. He said the process of dehumanization is the same no matter who is the victim.

The Nazi literature of the 30's and 40's contained stereotypes of Jews as left wing radicals or people with crooked noses, he said. Today, the caricatures of the Arabs are of fat ugly shieks or terrorists "lurking in the shadows", Giannou said.

The only chance for peace in the Middle East will come about when the Arabs and the Israelis face reality and stop blaming each other, Giannou said.

"In the Middle East nobody's hands are clean. Atrocity can be matched for atrocity. You can discuss blame from now till eternity," he said.

"You have to deal with historical realities. The Israeli nation exists whether you like it or not and the Palestinians have their hopes and aspirations whether the Israelis like it or not," Giannou said.

"It is not in the best interests for the Israelis and the Palestinians to sit back and throw blame. There is neither a monopoly on virtue or a monopoly on vice," he said.

When the shelling became too severe, Giannou said it was decided to vacate the hospital to an abandoned Government Hospital near a refrugee camp at Ain al-Hilweh with a population of 80,000. He said 4000 civilians in addition to 300 wounded flocked to the hospital because they thought it was safe from attack.

Prison fires always possible, groups warn

Prisoners' rights groups, fire safety officials and jailers warned yesterday that fires like the one that killed 27 prisoners in Biloxi, Miss., could happen in almost any jail in the country.

"What happened in Biloxi can happen anywhere, anywhere you have a high density of people who don't want to be where they are or who are mixed in with people who don't want to be there," Sheriff Charles Foti said in New Orleans.

"Fire is something anybody in corrections dreadfully fears," said Larry Koch, the jail administrator in Indianapolis. "It's just something you hope you are never faced with."

The fire at the Harrison County jail in Biloxi was started by a mentally troubled inmate in a padded cell, officials said. Poisonous smoke rolled through the jail, asphyxiating prisoners before they could be freed. Besides the dead, 61 people were injured.

Pro-nuke energy czar faces stiff opposition

WASHINGTON (AP) — In his first day on the job yesterday the nation's new energy chief extended an olive branch to environmentalists but said he shares President Reagan's desire that his office be removed from the Cabinet.

Energy Secretary-designate Donald Hodel said many of the energy programs the administration inherited — but opposed — have been dismantled or reduced and all that remains is to move what is left to the Department of Commerce.

Hodel, undersecretary of interior the past two years, told reporters over coffee yesterday that he wanted to meet with groups from all sides, including environmental groups opposed to his nomination, before his confirmation hearing next month.

"I'm well aware of some of the things that have been said about me and the administration's energy programs," he said. "I hope that we can get together, at least, to identify common objectives. I would like not to exclude anybody."

The Sierra Club and the Friends of the Earth opposed Hodel's nomination, citing his record as Interior Secretary James Watt's chief deputy and as former head of the Bonneville Power Administration in the Pacific Northwest.

"America does not need a second James Watt in the Cabinet," the Sierra Club told President Reagan in a letter last week asking him to reconsider the nomination. Rafe Pomerance, president of the Friends of the Earth, accused Reagan of continuing "to fill his Cabinet with anti-environmentalist zealots."

As head of Bonneville Power Administration from 1972 to 1978 and deputy administrator three years prior to that, Hodel helped direct a program to build five nuclear plants for the Washington Public Power Supply System.

State House prepares debate on death penalty referendum

BOSTON — Following up on the referendum in last week's election favoring capital punishment, Speaker Thomas W. McGee promised yesterday to complete action on a death penalty bill in the House.

With opponents gearing up for what they acknowledge is a losing battle, McGee said Monday that the issue will be disposed of in the House "one way or the other, by the time we leave."

He said the issue "has been around quite a few years; most people have made up their minds."

By a margin of nearly 3-to-2, voters approved a constitutional amendment last week allowing the death penalty. The U.S. Supreme Court struck down all capital punishment statutes in 1972.

Senate approves record pay raises

BOSTON — After sitting on the bill for months until after the election, the Massachusetts Senate approved yesterday record pay raises for legislators, judges and statewide constitutional officers.

The vote, to accept the House version reducing some amounts in the original Senate bill, was 23-13.

The changes, effective in January, have to clear the hurdle of routine House and Senate votes before reaching lame-duck Gov. Edward J. King.

The salary for incoming Gov. Michael S. Dukakis would jump to $75,000, compared with $40,000 for the outgoing governor.

The pay for lesser statewide officers would double from $30,000 to $60,000, with Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti getting $65,000, up from $37,500.

Funding cutbacks prove devastating to children

BOSTON — Cutbacks in state and federal programs have had a "devastating" impact on Massachusetts youngsters, contributing to the 24,000 cases of child abuse reported annually, an advocacy group claimed yesterday.

The Massachusetts Advocacy Center outlined the impact of the cuts in a 105-page book, which it called the most comprehensive profile of Bay State children ever published. Center officials said they hoped the report would spur greater government funding for programs designed to aid youngsters.

According to the book:

—The percentage of Massachusetts families with children living below the federal poverty level increased 52 percent in 10 years, from 163,933 cases in 1970 to 202,474 in 1980. The poverty level in March 1981 for a non-farm family of three was $7,070, or $136 a week.

—Massachusetts is the only state in the Northeast that has not met the federal goal of serving at least 25 percent of eligible families in the Women, Infants and Children nutrition program. New York serves 31.1 of its eligible families, Vermont 69.7 and while the Bay State serves 16.7 percent.

—Massachusetts pays $6.40 a day in day care for children under age 12. Daily kennel fees for dogs range from $5 to $8.

—Some 24,077 Massachusetts children last year were involved in 15,239 reports of abuse and neglect. Elizabeth Vorenberg, report editor, said the number which has increased while government funding to aid children has decreased, but she had no precise statistics on the increase.

In the Cambridge-Somerville area reports of abuse have doubled in the last year, she said, although the number of "nut calls" has gone up because of increased awareness of how to report the problem.

Network news report to focus on UMass drinking habits

By KEN BAZINET
Special to the Collegian

The University of Massachusetts is one of several colleges which will be included in a CBS Evening News report focusing on alcohol use among students.

A CBS News crew, led by correspondent Steve Young arrived in Amherst last Friday to meet with several UMass personnel to discuss and film some of the University's alcohol awareness programs, Gil Mottla, campus safety officer with University Health services said yesterday.

Mottla led the crew on a tour Friday night through the Blue Wall bar at the UMass Campus Center, the Pub in Amherst and Beta Kappa Phi fraternity, which gave Young the opportunity to conduct interviews with several UMass students. The CBS crew also shot footage of pre-game tailgate parties at Saturday's UMass-Boston College football game.

CBS News said yesterday they are not sure when the report will air.

"CBS was attracted to us because we have had a committment at UMass to alcohol education since 1975," Mottla said. The Beta Phi ride service provided for students who consumed too much alcohol in the course of a night and the Amherst Speed and Alcohol Patrol (SAP) were other programs which drew CBS to UMass, he said.

Mottla said the University's Alcohol Education Program has been in operation since 1975 and has experienced continuous effective results.

Beta Phi's rider service began about four weeks ago, and is organized so the brothers will work on a rotating schedule each weekend, Brian Sullivan, president of that fraternity said yesterday.

The SAP patrol has been in existence since last fall, and is considered by many UMass officials an effective safety program for the Amherst community.

Mottla said he expects the CBS report to reflect a positive alcohol awareness among students, the University and the community.

"I did my best to project UMass as a school with responsibility," he said, "We are as a University fortunate to have the resources of an Alcohol Awareness Program on campus."

UMass minors program caters to future entomologists, others

By BILL THOMAS
Collegian Staff

Since the approval of a minors program in March, 1979 and the establishment of the first minor in English in February, 1980, 45 minors have been implemented at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, including the minors approved this semester in philosophy, linguistics, forestry and wildlife management, Russian, Polish and entomology.

The purpose of a minor is to complement a student's major field of study or provide the student with an opportunity to develop a second field of interest. The 1978 recommendation for a minors program originated in the College of Arts and Sciences.

"One of the intentions (for the implementation of minors) was that students from liberal arts departments could take minors in, for example, computer science, but what has happened is that people in majors that are vocationally oriented get to minor in other departments," Professor James Leheny, secretary of the Faculty Senate said.

According to CASIAC dean's assistant Julie Berwald, "until recently, departments have been slow to offer minors because it's at the bottom of a department's priority."

"More departments are now adding minors to their curricula," Barbara O'Brien, a CASIAC employee said, "because every year the size of many departments has been increasing."

Most of the minors require the student to complete 15 or 18 credits although some, such as Japanese and Chinese, require 24 credits.

In order to verify their completion of a minor's requirements, students minoring in a subject are responsible for going to the department offering the minor, showing a copy of their transcript to the department advisor and having the advisor send a clearance letter to the records office.

Many of the minors are designed with a view towards increasing a student's employment prospects by providing him or her with a broader academic background.

The rationale for one of the newest minors, entomology, is largely based upon preparing students for graduate work, due to the specialized nature of the subject.

"If one wished, one could minor in entomology, major in zoology and be well-qualified to go into graduate work in entomology," said Ring Carde, head of the Entomology Department.

"I think for those people who go on to graduate work in entomology, it's nice to have had a complete window into entomology, of what it's like, as well as being trained as a more broadly - based biologist - so that can fulfill two purposes," Carde said.

The organization of each individual minor varies greatly. For example, in the geography minor, a student can choose from the options of cartography, urban-economic, regional development, physical environmental or a variation of one of these.

Although there is currently no Polish major at UMass, the minor in Polish requires six credits in intermediate Polish and 12 credits of independent study.

Acertificate of concentration, which is similar to a minor, is offered in Interpreter's Studies, American Studies and Asian Studies.

Student Government Association needs AG—again

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) is now seeking a new Student Attorney General, a position which has been held by three different students in the past year.

According to Richard Kramer, chair of the Attorney General Search Committee, one major requirement for the position is administrative ability. The Attorney General is responsible for running the office and maintaining files, as well as coordinating the activities of judicial advocates and judges.

Acting Attorney General Elizabeth Hill has occupied the position since last May, when Craig Colbath, who held the acting position throughout the spring semester, resigned. A search was not held during the spring because of the SGA presidential elections.

The Attorney General is appointed by the SGA President, but the appointment must be approved by the Student Senate.

The Student Attroney General's office investigates and prosecutes violations of SGA guidelines, provides opinions on legal controversies for the Student Senate and other Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) and works to update the student disciplinary system.

Because the Student Attorney General is responsible for prosecuting RSO groups, a new requirement imposed by the search committee is that the Attorney General must not be a member of any other RSO group after being appointed. This will eliminate any conflicts of interest, according to Kramer.

The Attorney General is paid for 15 hours per week at $3.50 per hour plus 40 hours per week during intersession and the summer. She or he also supervises two assistants who work 10 hours per week, according to the SGA budget.

Applications for the positions are available at the University Judiciary Office, Room 432 in the Student Union Building and must be turned into that office by November 18.

Variety store left waiting on beer

By ANN CARRNS
Collegian Staff

For the second time this year, the fate of an application by the North Amherst Mini Mart at 1192 N. Pleasant St. to sell beer and wine remains undecided.

The Amherst Board of Selectmen voted last night to postpone a decision on the license until Nov. 22, so that questions about possible traffic problems in the area, as well as objections raised by the North Congregational Church and area residents, could be investigated.

The selectmen recently received a letter of objection from the North Congregational Church in Amherst. According to Massachusetts statute, a church has the power to veto such a license. The letter is not a formal veto however, as the Executive Board of the church has not had time to meet, the letter said.

The earliest date on which the church's executive board could meet is Nov. 21, according to the letter, so the selectmen will wait until the 22nd to take action.

However, Selectman Frederick Steinbeck pointed out that there were other concerns involved, such as increased traffic and litter in the North Amherst Center area.

These questions were raised when a license application by the Mini Mart's owner, John Watroba, was vetoed in Feb. 1982.

"As far as I can see, the concerns raised in February are still in existence at this time," said Selectman Chairman Edith Wilkinson.

ALPHA LAMBDA DELTA

OFFERS FOR GRADUATE STUDY DURING 1983-84

The National Council of Alpha Lambda Delta announces that the fellowships for graduate study listed above will be awarded for use during the 1983-84 academic year. The amount of each fellowship is 2500. Applicants will be judged on academic record, recommendations submitted, the soundness of the proposed project and its purpose, and need.

Any member of Alpha Lambda Delta graduating with a cumulative average of Alpha Lambda Delta initiation standard (3.7+) is eligible. Graduating seniors may apply if they have achieved this average at the end of the first semester (or first quarter) of this year.

Application blanks may be obtained by the Chapter Advisor, Gladys Rodriguez, at the Dean of Students Office, room 227 Whitmore. The deadline for application is January 4, 1983. For further information regarding the fellowships, see Gladys Rodriguez.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Seniors favor an early retirement

There was a time, not very long ago, when I thought that people who were seniors were strange. Their attitudes and behavior seemed to fit our common stereotypes of them. They were either so totally blase about classes and schoolwork because they had the "Hey, I'm a senior" look about them, or they scurried around campus, resume and/or grad school application falling out of their Eastpacks, trying desperately to look like the students that they've never been for the past three years.

Of these two types, one didn't necessarily seem better than the other. As a matter of fact, seniors never seemed to have any reason to give anyone a hard time. The first type was usually perpetually stoned or drunk and, if not, always appeared to have that strange glow of happiness about them. The second type was usually so anxious that they had little time to putter around and were strictly going about their business. So what we had were a bunch of harmless creatures.

And of course, whenever stereotyping comes into play, we have the mixed group, what we will call the hybrid senior. The senior who was a combination of the worrisome, suddenly career-oriented type who would also fall into major spells of unproductivity, mumbling at Mike's, "Hey, I'm a senior", as they quaffed down another Rolling Rock. This group of hybrid or psycho seniors were the most dangerous of this strange group. You simply never knew if these people were ready to party until they got shut off at the bar (for whatever obnoxious reason) or if they wanted to spend a night sweating, poring over grad school catalogues and interview requests.

All of these notions came back to me swiftly one morning this week when I woke up and realized something about myself: I was a senior. Was it possible? Aren't I still running into people I met at freshman orientation now that I hadn't seen since? Wasn't I still being carded at the Blue Wall?

Well, when I finally recovered from my initial shock at breakfast and pulled my face out of the Captain Crunch, I was almost ready to stand up and be the senior that I was.

Being a senior meant more than just fitting into one of the types that I mentioned earlier. It meant seeing many people who were naive-looking freshman in Rhetoric classes now running most large student organizations; it meant knowing which classes not to take instead of looking for a senior to ask about it; it meant being known by the owner of the Drake (big deal, eh?); it meant knowing many people in classes of your major; it meant not having to look in the Collegian for the local watering-hole drink specials; it meant having an excuse for almost anything ("But hey, I'm a senior").

So I guess it really isn't that bad. Granted, being a senior is strange. It's strange knowing that this will be my last fall at UMass. Time rushes by. I've become part of a group that I'd stereotyped in the past. And which type was I, I asked myself while I should've been studying economics? Now that's a tough one. Perhaps none of them, but enough of this. It's time to start narrowing down law school selections...or should I go out for a few brews instead? Decisions can be difficult but, give me a break, will ya...I mean, Hey, I'm a senior.

New constitutional amendments threaten abortion rights

To the Editor:

Once again a woman's right to choose whether or not to have an abortion is being threatened. On Wednesday, November 10, the Massachusetts State legislature will hold a constitutional convention where two proposed anti-choice amendments will be considered. Both of these amendments threaten the constitutionality of abortion, as well as medicaid funding for abortion.

The first amendment, [S-1711] sponsored by Doris, (D-Revere);Lewis, (D-Boston); and Walsh (D-Boston); says that the Commonwealth should establish the rights of the unborn. This could have two negative effects. It will send a message to the rest of the country saying that Mass. is anti choice — which is not true! Secondly, where Mass. is under court order to fund Medicaid abortions the passage of this amendment would make this order null and void.

The second amendment, [H-3603], sponsored by Representative Paul White, (D-Boston), is a substitute amendment. It states that the constitution must allow the regulation of abortion.

This could be seen as a preview to the prohibition or regulation of abortion or medicaid funding for abortions. This amendment does not outlaw abortion, instead it sets the stage for further laws to be passed outlawing abortion.

The constitutional convention is taking place November 10 in Boston at the State House. It is important that we not allow it to go by without opposition. These amendments must be voted down. We can write our representatives or senators or sign a petition. Together we can, we must, change this conservative tide.

False fire alarms enrage Southwest tower resident

To the Editor:

Recently, it has come to my attention that there has been an excessive number of false fire alarms. I can never figure out why individuals pull fire alarms for no reason. I especially have trouble figuring out why they'd do it at one or two o'clock in the morning. Is it funny to them? Is it funny watching people get out of their room from their sacred sleeping hour? Do they enjoy hearing that awful screech of a noise the alarm makes? Does it make them feel important to know that they helped to create the noise that everyone in the building detests? Is it humorous to think about the men in the fire department that risk their lives breaking all traffic rules in order to make it to the alarm in the shortest amount of time? The firemen are willing to risk their lives for all of us. Do a few sick individuals have to abuse this privilege we have of the firemen? And worst of all, this sick individual had the nerve to wake me up.

Walking down twenty two flights of steps at two o'clock in the morning isn't the most exciting thing I've ever done. I begin to wonder if I'd go down everytime the alarm sounded. If it happened to be a real fire, would I consider it another one of these sick pranks, and pull the covers over my head as I drifted back into sleep? This is the point where it becomes a real danger to human lives, and is far from the idea of a practical joke.

It takes two for nuke freeze

According to a recent Associated Press report about the human chain in support of the nuclear arms freeze in Stockholm, Boris Pamkin, the Soviet Ambassador to Sweden said that he was "happy about this manifestation" which he greeted "with joy."

Amb. Pamkin couldn't have been overjoyed about the presence of nearby Solidarity supporters who just happened to be protesting against the practices of the brutal empire that Pamkin represents. The Solidarity supporters were kept behind fences obstensibly for protection against violence.

How ironic it is when Sweden which tried to raise what it believed to be a Warsaw Pact or Soviet sub in its waters last month, is so concerned about violence against the

Steven P. Barrett

Soviet Embassy. But remember, this is the nation which gave the world Olaf Palme, and numerous American deserters refuge during the Vietnam War.

Why aren't forty-thousand people lining the streets of Stockholm and any other western cities (marked for destruction by Soviet nuclear targeters) protesting against Soviet pressure in Poland, outright aggression in Afghanistan, and proxy war in Cambodia? Why is there so much furor against the Americans for planning to place Cruise and Pershing II missiles in Western Europe while the Soviets are using gas and chemical war tactics against the Afghans? Why is America perceived as the warmonger — and more importantly, why is the Soviet Union allowed to get away with the peacemaker image when common sense and recent history proves otherwise?

The questions listed above are undoubtedly going to be considered in bad taste by the more ideologically blinded and dogmatically inclined liberals. What a shame. Bad taste or not, these questions should be answered before they continue embracing the peace initiatives of the most illiberal and hypocritically brutal regimes in the history of mankind.

To obtain a better understanding of why this hypocritical reasoning is so commonplace in the freeze movement, let's examine one of their methods of debate. If you do not agree with them right off, then you are part of the opposition. Why if you are not for the freeze you must be for nuclear war. Unfortunately this kind of illogical reasoning allows no room to sit back and rationalize whether the freeze is really a good idea after all. This also cuts off real intellectual discussion and room for a true meaningful dialogue — whatever that has become nowadays.

So, automatically the Americans are the warmongers and obstacles against peace because they have not rushed headlong into the freeze movement. Never mind that the American government has ample reason to distrust the Soviets, but we are the warmongers. Have we forgotten so quickly who put the missiles in Cuba twenty years ago?

No, not all of the liberals are "dupes" like President Reagan, and Senators Helms and Denton would suggest. Many of them are equally patriotic people who are alarmed by the numbers of nuclear warheads that exist. Many of these liberals are skeptical of Soviet intentions. But why aren't they more vocal? Only they would have any suggestion of what the answer to this question would be.

Instead of staging vigils on behalf of the United Nations, (which is continually abused by the U.S.S.R. and treated as a convenient spy headquarters for the KGB) the liberals and everyone else should engage in demonstrations and seminars that will probe the Soviet conscience. Of course, we must begin to wonder if the Soviet leaders have one.

A few good locations to hold these demonstrations and seminars would be in places like Amherst and Cambridge, Massachusetts, New York City, Washington, D.C. and yes — Stockholm. It would be interesting to observe the Soviet Ambassador's reaction to this kind of "manifestation". Wouldn't it?

Are Israelis responding to fascist calls?

By NASSAR HASSAN
Organization of Arab Students

According to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI), Israel was the largest supplier of weapons to the Third World between 1970 and 1979. Most of those exports went to the Latin American states of Nicaragua (under Somoza), El Salvador, Guatemala, Chile, Argentina and others. Israel armed Nicaragua under Somoza until the bitter end. 98 percent of Somoza's arms imports were from Israel even before former President Carter cut off American sales to the brutal dictatorship. SIPRI also reports that from 1975 to 1979, Israel supplied 83 percent of El Salvador's arms imports.

The New York Times reported that when Guatemala was refused further U.S. military aid because of its dismal human rights record, Israel readily filled the gap. More recently, according to the March 1, 1982 Israeli establishment newspaper Davar, Israel agreed to divert back to the U.S. $21 million in aid from the sum allocated to it by the U.S. in 1981, so that the Reagan administration had already exceeded its foreign military aid budget and more money was needed to prop up the Salvadorean junta. This secret rebate is probably illegal under U.S. law since it was done without U.S. congressional approval.

These are only some aspects of Israel's role in policing the world for big business. Israel's single largest military customer is South Africa, and it was a firm supporter of the Shah of Iran. Israel's support of brutally repressive and racist regimes is not new. It was an objective stated by the father of political Zionism, Theodore Herzl, when he said that Israel would be "part of a wall of defense for Europe in Asia, an outpost of civilization against barbarism."

The root of the Israeli "outpost" policy is apartheid directed towards the indigenous Palestinian Arab population (as well as its discrimination against oriental Jews). The absolute repression of intellectual, educational, and nationalist activity directed against the Palestinians in the occupied territories, and the ruthless attacks Israel launches against its neighbors, which are carried out with the same weapons that are sold to Central American dictators. To massacre the Arab people or to massacre the peoples of El Salvador are inseparable aspects of the American and Zionist colonial alliance.

U. UTAH PHILLIPS
Sunday, November 7
Calvin Theatre, Northampton

By AMY JENNINGS
Collegian Staff

"Telling stories is a lost art and people need to move away from their televisions and stereos towards being together more," said U. Utah Phillips, "The Golden Voice of the Great Southwest" and member of the International Workers of the World.

I love being up on stage and inside the entertainment trade. I love to honor the tradition of telling stories. Story telling and singing are as old as the caves. People used to sit around the fire and be together," said Phillips.

Phillips performed Sunday afternoon at the Calvin Theatre in Northampton as a benefit for the Honor Court program. The program provides holiday meals and support for needy people in the Northampton area.

Phillips opened with the well-known folk song, "Cannonball," and closed with his own song, "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum." The songs in between ranged from light children's songs to more serious ones about Phillips' father and his son. Throughout the concert Phillips strummed his guitar, joked and chatted with the audience of approximately 400 people.

"I think the second industrial revolution was a mistake. We shot our T.V. about two years ago. I don't remember which commercial it was but we took it out back, put a blindfold around the screen, taped a lit cigarette on the front and I shot it with my 12 guage, single shotgun," said Phillips.

Phillips sings about the people and places in his life. A favorite preoccupation is jumping freight trains and traveling around the west.

"I don't jump trains when they're moving, no, I don't do that. When the weather's good and I'm feeling good I ride up north beyond Seattle. I used to prefer to travel alone but now I usually take someone along. There is a lot of violence mostly the young against the old. It can be frightening," said Phillips.

"There is a lot of resistance from the people in the freight yards. The freights are carrying nuclear waste, chemicals, toxic wastes and explosives. They don't want some tramp to throw a lit cigarette somewhere and cause an explosion. Good tramps are careful though," said Phillips.

Phillips was born Bruce Duncan Phillips in Cleveland, Ohio. He served during the Korean War and it was at that time that people started calling him U. Utah. It just seemed to fit.

Phillips said he doesn't know what the U. in front of Utah means. "Maybe it's a stutter. I don't know," he said.

A guilty Misanthrope

THE MISANTHROPE
By Moliere
Performed by the Amherst Masquers
Friday, November 5
Kirby Theatre, Amherst College

By CHRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

What's Moliere's 17th century play rewritten in English? And set in 1966 and not in the court of Louis XIV, no less? How could anyone dare attempt such blasphemy? What utter nerve! There was no way, I thought, any acting company could do a good job with a modern script without ruining Moliere's reputation. As it turned out, I was wrong.

Like the 17th century script, the script used by the Amherst Masquers was written in poetry form. Fortunately, the Amherst Masquers have some very talented people who have clear voices and good enunciation in acting it out. Mark Staples was Alceste, the Misanthrope: the man who could not get along with society. Staples did a great job with his role. Alceste, who insisted on telling the truth regardless of the consequences, was not a popular man with his friends. He could care less what people thought of him and he refused to flatter others. Refusing to accept flattery, Alceste himself was a very lonely, very isolated man.

Staples' Alceste was the exact opposite of Katherine Scott's, Celimene. Celimene, Alceste's girlfriend was vain, superficial, and flirtatious — everything Alceste abhorred in a woman. But he could not help falling in love with her. Staples and Scott acted and reacted to each other beautifully. Their reactions to each other provided much of the humor in the show.

But what really stole the show was Nicky Evan's Clitandre. Clitandre, utterly rich and utterly vain, was after Alceste. The best scene in the entire show was when Celimene and Clitandre, both in love with Alceste, sat on the couch and insulted each other. Evans was fantastic; the inflections in her voice were superb.

The cast did a great job with the play. The only thing really spoiling the show was its depressing theme. Alceste, who believed,"there's right and there's wrong, there's no two ways about it," ended the show by leaving his friends to search for somewhere where he could find honesty and sincerity.

The play left me feeling guilty that I am a part of this insincere society. But I nonetheless loved the show. The acting was great, the set was well designed, the script was well-written, but it was still a depressing way to spend an evening. No one likes to be made to feel like a heel and that was exactly what the show did. Perhaps that was Moliere's object when he wrote it. If that's the case, then the Amherst Masquers certainly did his play justice.

Henley wings it solo

I CAN'T STAND STILL (Asylum)
Don Henley

By MARTIN ROTHBARD
Collegian Correspondent

Since the break-up of the Eagles late last year, various members of the group have launched their solo careers. Among these is Don Menley's first solo effort, I Can't Stand Still. Menley, principle writer and vocalist of the Eagles since Joe Walsh's departure, has assembled a wide variety of enjoyable tunes.

Although Henley sings in that scratchy voice common to past Eagle songs, fans expecting to hear Eagles-type music are in for a shock. Aside from a few reminiscent songs, the album is a turn toward the new wave. Certain songs, however, such as "Long Way Home" and "Talking to the Moon" show a definite resemblance to former Eagle hits "Desperado" and "I Can't Tell You Why."

"Dirty Laundry," already receiving much FM airplay, is a unique tune and one that is quite popular among DJs and listeners alike. With help from former Eagle Joe Walsh, Henley has arranged a fast, high energy rocker here. The special keyboard effects of Steve Porcaro are what really makes the song stand out.

Along those same standards, "Johnny Can't Read" is another song that obviously displays a new wave sound. Henley's video for this song has also been receiving frequent play on the cable channel, Music Television.

Henley's versatility is displayed to a great extent for the album contains a pleasant mixture of contemporary rock, new wave and even country-western melodies. Although it may be a disappointment to die-hard Eagle fans, the album is fun to listen to and has some danceable music as well. In my opinion, I Can't Stand Still is a first rate recording. I would expect it to go gold within the next few months.

SPINAL SCREENING
AT THE
Amherst Chiropractic Center
November 1 - November 15

1. Head tilt
2. High shoulder
3. Low scapula
4. Spinal curvature
5. Low hip

Potential Danger signals of Irritated Nerves:
• Headaches, dizziness, blurred vision
• Neck pain, tight muscles, spasms
• Shoulder pain, pain down arms, numbness in hands
• Pain between shoulders, difficult breathing, abdominal pains
• Lower back pain, hip pain, pain down leg

Amherst Chiropractic Center is offering spinal check-ups and postural analysis for early detection of back problems.
TIME magazine says 75 million Americans have backache, and with each passing year, this astronomical fugure grows by 7,000,000.
Backache has become a catastrophic issue with the insurance companies and with our national economy. It is one of the top claims for disability. In addition to this, arthritis and rheumatic complaints affect 77 percent of our adult population, and every year millions sustain severe neck injuries from automobile collisions.
With the use of a few simple painless tests we will be able to determine the condition of the spine. Early detection of back problems is the best prevention for future back ailments.
The spinal screening will be offered without charge or obligation, at the
Amherst Chiropractic Center
190 University Dr., Amherst, MA
Doctors will be available for answering questions on treatment and prevention of back problems.
Please call 256-6700 for an appointment and bring a copy of this announcement with you.

WANTED:

The Collegian, in conjunction with the Union Video Center, will soon be launching a daily half-hour news program to be aired over the cable TV system in the Campus Center and Student Union Building. We need a coordinator to write, rewrite and edit wire copy and Collegian staff reports which will then be read over the cable TV. Low pay, but great opportunity to help create a new UMass student service. Some experience in writing and television work is helpful. Bring us your ideas. Apply to Ed Levine in the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, by Friday, Nov. 19. The Collegian and UVC are equal opportunity employers.

Theta Chi captures third straight title

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

"They can take away our house, but they can't take away our championship."

Those were the words of Theta Chi fraternity quarterback Jim Fortsch after Theta Chi captured their third straight intramural football championship topping Delta Chi fraternity 29-16.

Theta Chi, after easily defeating the Six Packers, 28-5 in the semi-finals, to gain a berth in the finals, relied on a pressing defense and the big play offense on their way to an unprecedented 36th straight victory.

The delightfully cool autumn evening failed to attract the huge crowd of last year, but that did not stop Theta Chi from making the big plays.

On the first drive of the game, big play number one came about when Fortsch hit Bill LeBlanc with a 30 yard pass to the two yard line. On the next play, Fortsch hit Tim Leary with a touchdown pass to give Theta Chi an early 6-0 lead.

A missed extra point didn't stop Theta Chi's momentum, as Jeff White made big play number two, intercepting a Kelly MacDonald pass deep in Delta Chi territory. Fortsch then took matters into his own hands, scampering 10 yards for the touchdown. A Leary extra point gave Theta Chi a quick 13-0 lead.

Delta Chi found the rest of the quarter just as upsetting, as they couldn't generate any offense whatsoever, mostly due to the defensive line of Theta Chi. Leary, Tim Murphy, and Bill LeBlanc put constant pressure on MacDonald, forcing him to make errant passes to receivers nowhere in sight.

It was the excellent play of the Theta Chi line that gave them intramural championship number three.

"They were a good team," said Theta Chi center Chuck Lanardo. "But whoever controls the offensive and defensive lines--that's where the game is won."

With Theta Chi holding on to their 13 point lead as the second quarter started, MacDonald found a way to beat the defensive pressure. MacDonald rolled right, found a seam, and 35 yards later, found himself two yards from the paydirt. A two yard flip to Dave Medeiros, followed by a two point conversion to Medeiros cut Theta Chi's lead to 13-8.

With the tide now swinging Delta Chi's way, Fortsch produced big play number three with a fine, scrambling run to get himself out of a jam. Fortsch later hit Ted Flaherty with a TD pass and a Leary extra point made it 20-8 Theta Chi. The rest of the second quarter was the same story--Theta Chi stoppping Delta Chi with fine defensive pressure.

Theta Chi kept their defensive stand going at the start of the third quarter, becoming more aware of MacDonald's running ability. Big play number four was made by Ralph Froio, as he made a key interception to stop a Delta Chi drive. However, Delta Chi's defense also became a factor, sacking Fortsch and forcing Theta Chi to attempt a 43 yard field goal. Leary's left foot was strong enough, but the kick went wide and the third quarter ended without a change in the scoreboard--Theta Chi 20, Delta Chi 8.

Delta Chi, who came back to defeat BKO 14-9 in Thursday's semi-final game, found themselves in the same comeback situation as they took possesion to start the fourth quarter. Theta Chi stopped them on fourth down, however. Theta Chi drove and Leary this time found the mark, hitting a 40 yard field goal to give Theta Chi a 23-8 lead which looked in surmountable.

Delta Chi wanted no part of that.

A MacDonald touchdown pass to Mederios was called back due to illegal use of hands. But on the next play from scrimmage, MacDonald hit Dave Valdenbini with a 20 yard touchdown pass. A two point conversion followed, and suddenly Delta Chi found themselves back in it 23-16.

The infamous factor called momentum again switched over to Delta Chi, as they sacked Fortsch twice and took possesion after Leary missed a 45 yard field goal.

But, John Weingrad made big play number five, getting a big interception and apparently finishing off Delta Chi.

Delta Chi wanted no part of that, either.

They stopped Theta Chi again and tried one last ditch effort to win it. A MacDonald to Butch LeBlanc to Medeiros flea flicker all went for naught as Jeff White turned in big play number six, breaking the pass up on a beautiful defensive play to end Delta Chi's hopes and eventually the game.

Player of the game

The freshman matures quickly at the UMass helm

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Jim Simeone carries himself better than your average freshman. He is poised. He is also big and strong. And, the freshman quarterback of the revamped Minuteman football team possesses all the tools to make him an excellent field leader, the running ability, the coolness and a howitzer of an arm.

Everything isn't in place yet, but by watching Simeone play the past two weeks, handling both the on and off field pressure, you can see the skills evolving. He is the quarterback of the future for the UMass football program.

Simeone threw for 150 yards and two touchdowns against a highly touted Boston College defense this past Saturday. He also gained 69 yards on 16 carries. These are pretty impressive statistics when one takes into consideration that the BC game was only Simeone's second start.

Accoding to the 6'2" 225 pounder, his composure was a lot better since his debut at the UMass helm against the University of Connecticut two weeks ago.

"It being my second game helped a real lot," said Simeone. "I had one game under my belt and I felt pretty good."

Good, that is, except for a bone-crunching sack by Ron Swanke, who caused Simeone to fumble in the first quarter of play when he blind-sided the freshman from the backside of pocket pass protection.

The crowd of 16,023 fans was hushed as Simeone lay on the turf for several minutes before shaking off that blow and leaving the field. (BC had recovered the ball.)

"I got my wind knocked out of me," said Simeone. "It was a hard hit. I had my flack jacket on. I think that's what saved me."

And saved was the proper word to use in this instance. Had Simeone been any smaller, that hit could have been counted as a death blow.

But, Simeone was back in on the next series of downs for the Minuteman offense as if nothing had happened at all. Durable? That is an understatement.

Simeone gives a lot of credit to the rest of the UMass offense for helping him to adjust to being the new kid on the block.

"The whole offense made me feel comfortable. They calmed me down, tapped me on the butt and kept my confidence going," said Simeone.

Another advantage that the Farmington, Connecticut native will be able to enjoy is that when he's in the off season, one of his primary receivers will be tagging along with him when he goes home, brother Bob Simeone, the starting wide receiver on the squad.

But, that's the off season. Right now, the new guy is concentrating on a big Yankee Conference clash with the University of New Hampshire. And, now that this is his third game he may even sell tickets at the gate. He's coming along that fast.

Women hoopsters counting heavily on freshmen

By GERRY DESIMAS
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the first of two articles previewing this year's UMass women's basketball team.

There is one word and only one word that describes the 1982-83 edition of the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team: young. Nine players on last year's roster will not be back and the team will feature eight freshmen, along with a senior, a junior and two sophomores.

It is a definite rebuilding year for the Minutewomen, who went 9-16 last year and 14-14 two years ago.

"We have a very young team," head coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said. "But every time we play and practice, the kids get better and better."

UMass will have to improve without the services of nine Minutewomen who for various reasons will not wear the maroon and white of Massachusetts this season. Martha Ready and speedy Sherry Collins graduated last May and Nora Maldonado and Nadine Jackson did not return to UM.

Gwen Jones and Tara Heinzmann did not elect to play because of academic commitments, and Jackie Jones transferred to Trenton State.

But the biggest loss was the transfer of Cindy Clapp to Harvard. Clapp, a 4.0 student here at UMass, transferred to further her medical school education.

"It was a loss for the team, but she went for academics and I'm very happy for her," said Ozdarski. It remains to be seen if Clapp will be in uniform for the Crimson when they visit UMass on December 7.

It will be a talented bunch of freshmen that join veterans Marlene Susienka, Jennifer Todd, Wendy Ward and Patty Maguire.

At the pivot will be 6'2 Kelly Collins and 6'0 Maria Chomentowski. Collins, from Wilmington, Delaware, was second team All-Delaware and first team All-North Delaware in her senior year. Chomentowski led her team, MacDuffie (Springfield) to the New England Prep school championships. Both Collins and Chomentowski will be counted on to rebound both offensively and defensively for the Minutewomen.

Last season, a lack of rebounding hurt UMass all season long.

At the guard position will be three freshmen, Liz Bruhn, Barbara Hebel, and Jean Cooper. Hebel, at 5'8 and from Nanuet, NY, scored 1,116 career points at Clarkston South. Last year she averaged 20 points a game and was MVP of two tournaments. Hebel is an outstanding perimeter shooter and will be counted on to carry some of the load, scoring-wise.

Cooper, a second team All-State pick from Connecticut, is expected to handle the ball and play at the point guard position. Cooper is 5'9 and the third guard, Bruhn is 5'7 and from West Boylston. Bruhn's main job will be to play some tough, aggressive defense and pass the ball well.

Three freshmen will also be playing at the forward positions: Jerrie Bernier, Rebecca Kucks, and Karen Damminger. All three were blue-chip athletes in high school. Kucks led Pascack Valley (NJ) to two consecutive Group III state titles. She was second team All-State (group III) in her senior year and she also had 1,000 career points.

Damminger also scored over 1,000 career points and she averaged 19.6 points a game last year. She was elected to the first team, All-South Jersey in her senior and junior years. Damminger will be counted on to rebound and score, while Kucks is expected to rebound and play some tough 'D'.

Bernier, a 5'10" Tewksbury resident, could be the best of the freshmen forwards. Bernier, who scored 984 points in high school, sank a team-high 27 points in a controlled scrimmage last Saturday. She was on the junior Olympic team this summer and was Boston Globe second team All-Scholastic. Bernier will be counted on to rebound and score for the Minutewomen.

"If we can maintain our poise and character we should have a successful season," said Ozdarski. "The players have been very enthusiastic and are working extremely hard. They want to win."

For the lady hoopsters to win, they will have to be patient as the freshmen get the necessary experience to compete on the college level.

It could be either a very long season or a productive and exciting one depending on how fast the freshmen learn and how they adjust and mix in with the veterans. Tomorrow, we'll look at the UMass veterans and how they will complete the picture.

Presenting High Bias II and the Ultimate Tape Guarantee.

Memorex presents High Bias II, a tape so extraordinary, we're going to guarantee it forever.

We'll guarantee life-like sound.

Extraordinarily flat frequency response at zero dB recording levels, combined with remarkably low noise levels, means music is captured live. Then Permapass,™ our unique oxide-bonding process, locks each oxide particle—each musical detail—onto the tape. So music stays live. Not just the 1st play. Or the 1000th. But forever.

We'll guarantee the cassette.

We've engineered every facet of our transport mechanism to protect the tape. Our waved-wafer improves tape-wind. Silicone-treated rollers insure precise alignment and smooth, safe tape movement. To protect the tape and mechanism, we've surrounded them with a remarkable cassette housing made rigid and strong by a mold design unique to Memorex.

We'll guarantee them forever.

If you ever become dissatisfied with Memorex High Bias II, for any reason, simply mail the tape back and we'll replace it free.

YOU'LL FOREVER WONDER,

IS IT LIVE, OR IS IT MEMOREX

Monkeemania Revisited

BY KIRI STUART

THEY'RE NOT QUITE SO awesome ...a tide as Beatle or Star Trek fans, ...but Monkee devotees are just as ...loyal. Monkeemaniacs trooped in ...from as far as Canada and Japan to ...attend the fourth annual Monkee ...convention in Bridgeport, Connec...ticut this summer, reflecting a recent ...popularity resurgence for the mis...rock group. According to convention ...producers Charles Rosenay and ...Maggie McManus, 600 lovers of Mike ...Nesmith, Peter Tork, Davy Jones and ...Micky Dolenz wandered happily ...about the Bridgeport Sheraton from ...August 6-8 in their biggest gathering ...yet. Monkee photos, finger puppets, ...buttons and records have now be...come collector's items (offered for ...sale at prices that would have ...shocked the Sixties). Fans traded, ...chattered, wrote personal messages to ...their fave heartthrobs in special ...books. Through the miracle of TV re-runs, a new generation of 15 ...year-olds is tuned in to hours of old ...Monkee episodes (campy commer...cials left in) plus the film Head, ...which has approached cult status ...even among those who once ...sneered at the fabricated band-cum-...TV stars.

Other excitement for the faithful: ...an art show (won by Australian Tre...vor Hilton for his mixed media ...work The Monkees seated under a ...dollar sign), a memorabilia auction ...and a Monkees soundalike contest. ...When a "last-minute entry" was in...troduced and Peter Tork himself ...took the stage, fans roared approval ...and delight. John Sheridan and the ...band Monkeemania swung into ...'Pleasant Valley Sunday.' Tork on ...keyboards. Then the former Monkee ...conducted a freewheeling question ...and-answer session, moved the audi...ence to tears with reminiscences of ...John Lennon, signed autographs, and ...left ecstatic Monkee fans seated until ...next year.

Monty Python's

MICHAEL PALIN TURNS MISSIONARY

But only in his new film . . .

BY SHELLEY TURNER

If you already know who Michael Palin is, you can skip this part. If you don't, he's the Monty Python with the knotted hankie on his head, and perhaps more immortally, the pet shop owner who tries to persuade an exploding John Cleese that the parrot is not really dead, just pining for the fjords. Although he would deny it, he is described by others as the very backbone of the Python team — wry, versatile, tolerant and born funny with the sort of rubbery, amorphous face that lends itself to infinite roles. He has been Pythoning since the group's incarnation in 1969 (he was 26 then), which means he's written and performed on all the TV series, the 10 TPs and the three multimillion dollar-grossing feature films (including Monty Python and the Holy Grail and Monty Python's Life of Brian*). With fellow Python Terry Jones he wrote and appeared in the TV series-then-book* Ripping Yarns, and with other fellow Python Terry Gilliam, the nifty 1981 movie Time Bandits. Finally, he decided to take a vacation from collaboration, which is why he gets a whole article about himself here. And now for something completely Palin

On a typical London summer's day — wind driving a chill rain sideways into parts of the anatomy one rarely contemplates — Michael Palin, wearing most (but, alas, not all) of his costume stands in his stocking feet and sneezes. The cold he already has is escalating. He does not complain.

He has a stiff upper lip, thanks to the glue holding on his false moustache, and a heavenly disposition. This place is a forlorn but remarkably intact street of Victorian warehouses running parallel to the Thames just below Tower Bridge. A jetlagged New Yorker is making a teensy weensy promotional film for distribution to local American TV stations which describes something about Palin's first big solo project, a feature set in Edwardian Britain called The Missionary. Michael wrote it alone, co-produced and plays the title role. Today's location is the same used in the film for the pub and brothel sequences. The idea is to have him play two roles — both reporter and performer — interviewing himself. Only hitch is that the brand-new looking, custard colored Kickers (his sole footwear du jour) are not what a man of the cloth sported in 1906; he'll have to busk it with the dark socks and hope no-one notices. This whole episode, which should have taken a couple of hours, max, to shoot, is sprawling tediously and inexorably over the entire, miserable, sodden day. Knowing he is caught in the double-bind of The Missionary in post production and the next Monty Python film The Meaning of Life going full steam ahead, one shudders for his stamina with every sneeze, but this is show biz. Sheltering in doorways and dank stairwells he gamely manages to field questions in moments snatched between shots.

The external motivation to write The Missionary came from George Harrison, a charter Pythonophile who sent a congratulatory telegram after the debut broadcast 13 years ago and has remained involved ever since. He was the financial savior of Life of Brian and was such a fan of the half-hour TV series Ripping Yarns he encouraged Michael to expand something in that vein to feature length. He would back it on faith. For his own part, Palin was ready to go boldly where he hadn't exactly been before. I did it for the satisfaction of trying to prove to myself that I could write more than just a five or ten minute sketch on my own — that I could sustain a story and characters." Before he could sustain them, the first obstacle was to come up with them. The Muse seemed terminally in a meeting. Finally, inspiration came, not out of the blue but out of a friendish gale through which he ran (he likes running) over Hampstead Heath near his home in North London.

I decided that the film should be called The Missionary, and should be about a heroic Edwardian idealist whose liberated approach to sexual matters is both his success and downfall. I liked the idea of a period movie; this is set in 1906, the heyday of eccentric characters, respected misfits, against whom you can play a sympathetic half comedy. In this film I would be happy if in certain areas it just got quieter laughs because people were listening to the story. I'm most concerned with writing something that arises out of character. I'm not a gag writer. I like eccentrics and odd bits of behavior."

Our hero, then, is Charles Fortescue (Palin) who is returning to England after 10 years missionary work in Africa to marry his childhood sweetheart Deborah (Phoebe Nicolls, who was Cordelia in Brideshead Revisited). However, since the course of smooth love never did run true, he is waylaid on shipboard by the glamorous, passionate, exotic and filthy rich Lady Ames (Maggie Smith) who shares his interest in fertility symbols. He tries to dismiss her from his mind, but fate intervenes when the sportsmad Bishop of London (Denholm Elliot) obliges him to establish a mission for fallen women. Fortescue's fund-raising efforts lead him back to Lady Ames' vast country seat (portrayed eloquently by two of England's most spectacular stately homes) and her vastly crotchety, vastly wealthy old husband Lord Ames (Trevor Howard). Our noble Charles becomes just a de facto gigolo in order to support the 28 fallen women with whom he is on intimate terms. Complications, including random death (nothing too serious, though), ensue.

Palin was extremely gratified with the caliber of players who agreed to appear. "To me it's important to go for people like that — actors who can do comedy, rather than just comedians. In Ripping Yarns and The Missionary I'm more the straight, central character around which I can put odder characters. Very often I come out as being far more straight than I'd like to. Sometimes I'd like someone to write me something really silly, but I feel that what I want to put over here is a comedy with an authentic, realistic center to it, which is quite a difficult thing. I'm arrogant enough to feel there's the right balance in The Missionary, and I'm in control. Control is what writing it was all about, while still being able to work with a director (Richard Loncraine) and crew, giving them full rein. Artistic control is important, but beyond that I'm not interested in being a fuhrer."

He is plainly smitten with the sheer beauty of the production. "I think that we've got nearly every scene as richly as possible — superb art direction, cinematography and lighting. Apart from the comedy, it's the prettiest film I can't say which is my favorite bit, but I think undoubtedly Michael Hordern, as the amnesiac butler Slatterthwaite continually getting lost in his own corridors is one of the things I'm most happy with as a piece of performing. In fact, the first day on location, he really did get lost."

When asked what made him laugh more than anything else in his life, Palin replied, "I just can't remember all those moments when I fell about, but I do recall one particular episode of Hancock's Half Hour (a British Fifties TV series starring Tony Hancock) where I couldn't stay in my chair. I slid all over the floor, I clutched myself, I howled. I was 13 or 14. It was just a very silly thing, really — about this sort of sad bloke who lived in a little suburb of London and got a bunch of friends together to do a remake of The Vikings on the local common, like a home movie. It was daft. Buses would pull up and Vikings would run off to catch the bus to go shopping with people pursuing them. It had me rolling around quite vigorously. I don't usually get off on jokes, as such. I need something more than just a man up there saying gags. Really, it's situations, incongruous situations, like Princess Margaret shooting her breakfast with a harpoon, which she did on the Pythons. I think the best humor just comes out of observation of the human race. We are a truly very silly species — the absurd things we get ourselves into. And that doesn't have to be gleaned from jokebooks. Read Kafka."

Is it sometimes agonizing having to be funny for a living? "I find no problem writing these silly things and standing up in front of cameras. I love it. It's harder when you're at home or it's your evening off or you're at a party and people come up and expect you to be funny — that's what's difficult. At the end of the day, I prefer to read serious novels or watch serious plays or serious things on the television. People tend to think that all the time you're just laughing and gagging and falling over."

How did his upbringing bear on his career? "My father (an engineer) was funny in a broad way, my mother wasn't that humorous, but she was a good listener, which is good if you're making jokes. But we didn't have wacky, raucous meals full of people throwing their heads back. Just thinking about the Pythons, we all came from a very, very similar home background — the mother was more dominant and none of the families were specially noted for being humorous or being in the entertainment world, or being academic in any way. They were just hard-working people trying to make do through a difficult pre-to-postwar period with little money, but having to live up to established upper middleclass standards. We were reacting to our parents being stuck in a bit of a rut. We used humor to get out of that. We also came at an easier time; you could be more flippant without appearing to be just destructive. My father, to give him his due, was happy with whatever I did so long as I wasn't asking him for money. He was quite pleased that I was doing a television show of my own within six months of leaving Oxford. I mean, a history degree from Oxford seems wonderful, but in the end, what does it do for you? So I ended up co-hosting a pop music show called Now. That was in '66. At least I was self-sufficient. By then David Frost had come along and going into television comedy was quite respectable as an occupation for lads leaving university. There'd been The Cambridge Footlights (a satirical revue), Beyond the Fringe (which launched Peter Cook and Dudley Moore), The Goon Show (with Peter Sellers and Spike Milligan). Suddenly it was acceptable to be educated and funny — not that I'm claiming I was — but collegiate humor found an audience wider than just the colleges. Before that, comedy tended to be the province of the old school, stand-up, working class comedians like Max Miller who followed the music hall traditions.

Michael Palin claims to have been attracted to comedy because "People used to laugh at me. It was the only thing I could do." In fact, he

GENTLEMAN OF STEEL FACES PAPAL CHALLENGE

BY DAVIS SEAY

Someone has lost all the glossy color 8x10s — a whole batch of stills from Monsignor. Christopher Reeve's soon-to-be-released fifth film — and his bushy sideburned, Malibu tanned press agent is going to get to the bottom of it.

With a gored ox bellow, the angry agent sends his flock of secretaries careening around the honey Beverly Hills office in a frantic search for the missing pics. Stacks of clippings are upended, bulging files are rifled, one diligent gofer even peers behind the potted palms. From the doorway a kind of low chuckle issues as Reeve himself, standing at the threshold, surveys the chaos.

Give 'em hell, chief, he says with an absolutely dazzling grin and strolls into the suddenly frozen tableau. Exuding all the vitality, robust health and good humor that one man seems capable of containing, Reeve is dressed down for the occasion — another in a series of interviews to coincide with Twentieth Century-Fox's release of Monsignor, a film he unabashedly claims to be "literate, passionate, intriguing and original." In a carefully laundered blue work shirt, nicely aged beige cords, and top-siders sans socks, the twenty-seven-year-old Reeve could not possibly cut a more casually underplayed figure. If it weren't for the face — the precise geometric interplay between squared jaw, thin, expressive mouth and riveting blue eyes — the New York-born actor could pass for any of the uncounted out-of-work male models prowling the streets outside.

It's the face known to millions only as Superman's — features prominently displayed in two marmoset miracles, Superman and Superman II, in a role that elevated Reeve overnight from promising Broadway actor to mythic hero and melting heart throb. If the actor is unnerved by so close an association between his real and make believe personas, he's certainly not letting on. He seems, in fact, to be recapping his role right here, smiling slyly at the flustered secretaries putting his arm around his press agent whose demeanor has changed instantly from demonic to deferential. There's no doubt about it — this is Clark Kent, affable, disarming, just a regular guy with superhuman powers.

Superman is not a difficult role for me to play," he explains, after the now beaming publicist has settled him into the interview room, its walls festooned with garish orange lithographs that outdo the warm light of the sun streaming through plate glass windows. "I had to effect a specific physical look. After that it was up to me to invent the character. I thought: let's not be about macho, distant, reserved. Let's be warm, eager, there to help. He's a Superman for the Eighties."

An aspiring actor from the age of fifteen when he apprenticed himself to the Williamstown Playhouse — a top rated summer stock theater — Reeve appears to have taken his sudden ascendancy to major film stardom completely in stride. It's a part of his personality immediately evident — supremely self-assured, apparently unimpressed with his good fortune; this son of a journalist mother and professor, novelist and translator father seems above all in total control of the situation. "I accepted the role of Superman for one reason," he asserts. "I saw it as a way to avoid ten years of hard labor. After all, I'd already done eleven years of hard labor and this was a way to speed up the process of getting where I wanted in my career — to be working with the best people, the great directors and writers. That's really my definition of success: to gain admission to the circle you want to be in."

Gaining admission has apparently never been much of a problem for him. Following his Williamstown stint, he alternated between an education at Princeton Day School in suburban Short Hills and carefully selected appearances with professional repertory companies. Reeve was a hockey letterman and assistant conductor of the school orchestra, but his boundless energy and ambition were targeted more directly to acting during his college years. While working for a BA at Cornell with subsequent undergrad studies at Juilliard, Reeve would sandwich acting auditions between classes. He later traveled to England to write his thesis on British repertory theater, roaming throughout the Midlands visiting various companies before landing in London and applying for a job at the old Vic.

"I became what they called over there a dogsbody, and what we call over here an errand boy. But it was a very exciting time. They were doing their first production of Equus and for their revival of Front Page I helped the actors with the American accents. Before returning home to land a role on the soap Love of Life, Reeve worked briefly in Paris with the Comedie Francaise. It was, all in all, a quite complete and very fortuitous theatrical education.

It was after Love of Life that Reeve won two important roles in major Broadway productions. The first was as Katharine Hepburn's leading man in A Matter of Gravity, the second as an embittered paraplegic in The Fifth of July. "It was too much too soon," he admits. "I mean, there I was, barely out of acting school, playing opposite Katharine Hepburn. I really froze, but I think the experience helped me to understand what I could accomplish in acting. I'd always gone for the character roles before that because they were the parts with all the interesting twists and turns. A lot of leading man parts are boring because a lot of leading men are boring. It never really occurred to me that I might be right for the hero — that I was 6'4" and reasonably attractive. Knowing that helped me be comfortable as Superman, which is really the last word in leading men."

There is no question that Reeve is ideally suited to portray the Man of Steel, nor is there any doubt, at least in his mind, that he contributed greatly to the role's human dimensions. "Superman is an idea

Ronstadt, a longtime personal friend of U.S. Senatorial candidate Jerry Brown, spent more time than usual gabbing with the audience. At one point she urged everyone to "get out of your a-es and vote" in the November elections, reminding that "you have no right to complain if you don't show." "Of course," she sheepishly added, "you probably know who I want you to vote for."

007 Returns . . . & Returns

THERE ARE NOW TWO JAMES Bond movies filming in Europe earmarked to reach the theaters midway through 1983. Roger Moore who starred in the last five 007 adventures, is again the lead in Octopussy (would we kid you?) opposite beautiful Maud Adams. Sean Connery, the original film Bond who starred in six of the pictures, is resurrecting his 007 persona in Never Say Never Again opposite beautiful Barbara Carrera. There was also a rumor that Goldie Hawn was shooting a film called Private Bond in which she starred opposite a beautiful army captain, but we couldn't find anyone to substantiate it.

PERHAPS INSPIRED by the recent flop tv show The Merlin, Columbia Pictures is coming up with $3,000,000 of the $3,500,000 needed to mount a Broadway version of Merlin, starring the most visible magician of the last decade, Doug Henning. The show is scheduled to open December 19; guess which film company is dealing for the film rights?

Known by the Company It Keeps

TRON, the ground breaking — if brain numbing — Disney film that takes place within a computer game, was scheduled at various theaters around the country in tandem with The Secret of Nimh. This caused problems. Not because Nimh was rather boring, but because it was done in the old style of Disney Studios — laborious, painterly animation with cute creatures abounding — by animators who had defected from Disney. Using contractual agreements which were originally designed to protect Disney's image as a maker of innocent, wholesome pictures, the Studio got Nimh pulled from the double bills as being of unsuitable character. The irony beyond Disney's power plays is that Tron has since been showing as a double feature with The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas.

MICHAEL PALIN

has several irons in the communications fire right now. Apart from The Missionary, mission accomplished, he remains a fully participating Python. It is estimated that all the Pythons spend roughly three months a year exclusively on Python projects and have the rest of the time to recuperate or pursue individual interests. Palin's include a small publishing company which so far fosters an American poet and an English comic artist, an eight track recording studio in madly trendy Neal's Yard, Covent Garden, and his first children's book, Small Harry and the Toothache Pills, out in November of this year. One of his more subtle achievements is having married a farmer's daughter shortly before his 23rd birthday and still claiming her as his best friend 16 years and three children later; his equally long career in the media snakepit notwithstanding.

Perhaps his lifelong passion for trains is what has kept him from going off the rails. With only the slightest pause for deliberation when asked what was his favorite possession he decided, "My fan Allen Print Spotters Book 1955. It would be absolutely awful to lose that. There was a time in my life when it was never out of my hands."

This appetite for detail has for 15 years now, found an outlet in the keeping of a diary which in turn has given him a taste for journals in general. He derives great pleasure from the minutiae of daily existence, his own and other people's, rather like a whale deriving nourishment from countless infinitesimal plankton. It all contributes to his grasp of the human condition which is invaluable to his work. Would he be interested in a straight acting role? "I wouldn't mind, but I think I would always tend toward comedy. I have a sort of — I don't know what it is — overinflated humor gland somewhere in my body which makes me see the funny side of any situation. Like sneezing into the umpteenth retake, sopped and shoeless. Bless you. Michael

This pensive, Alfred-Hitchcock-trying-yoga ampersand arrived without the name and address of its creator. What can we do? How about this — the first person to show up at our offices with this design tattooed on his or her inner thigh can claim the $50 prize.

Gary Kurtz Zooms from 'Star Wars' to 'The Dark Crystal'

BY STEVEN GINSBERG

REMEMBER that movie where Luke Skywalker battles the forces of evil? Has lots of toys named after it now? The biggest movie moneymaker of all time? Star Wars? (Oh yeah) Gary Kurtz produced that.

Remember the sequel three years later? Where Luke Skywalker battles the forces of evil? Also made lots of money? The fourth biggest movie ever? The Empire Strikes Back? (That's right) Gary Kurtz produced that.

And remember four years before Star Wars there was that film about California high school kids cruising cars down the boulevard? Aside from Ron Howard it starred two unknowns named Cindy Williams and Richard Dreyfuss. Also had un-discovered actors named Suzanne Sommers, Mackenzie Phillips and Paul LeMat in smaller roles? American Graffiti? (How could we forget?) Gary Kurtz co-produced that too.

But sitting in a small Los Angeles coffee shop on a recent Friday morning, Kurtz, 41, hardly fits the stereotype of the tough-sounding Hollywood producer. He is shy but friendly. He talks slowly and precisely, carefully explaining his opinions like a concerned college professor rather than a slick hype-ster. He is serious about his work but appears equally interested in the quality of his life (he relocated to England five years ago and lives in the countryside with his wife and children). He even orders oatmeal for breakfast.

His latest is an adventure-fantasy, co-produced with Muppets creator Jim Henson, called The Dark Crystal, a film that has no human actors, only an elaborate world of foam rubber creatures.

"The Star Wars pictures were wonderful but each one took three years out of my life," Kurtz reflects. "It's nice to have new people come in and work on them (the next Star Wars saga, Revenge of the Jedi, will be at theaters next June). But I have a lot of my own projects I want to work on, and I simply don't have time to do both."

It was while working on The Empire Strikes Back five years ago that Kurtz first became involved with The Dark Crystal. He had contacted Henson and his associate Frank Oz for advice on how best to create the film's mini-hero, Yoda, when Henson explained an idea he had for a picture that would go one step further than the Muppets or Star Wars. The world of the "dark crystal" would be a mythical place where plants and trees talk, mountains and rocks move and water murmurs music. Placed in this setting would be the perennial young lad battling (what else?) the forces of evil. But like everything in the film he would be the creation of a team of conceptual artists and film technicians. No live actors would be used.

Of course when The Dark Crystal is released to theaters this Christmas there will also be a variety of books and product merchants to acquaint audiences with the difficulties of the filmmaking process and the visual world the film creates. Look for The Dark Crystal figures at your local toy store, a $25 coffee table art book with the work of conceptual designer Brian Froud, plus museum exhibits in New York, Los Angeles, and London. There will even be a limited line of The Dark Crystal adult designer clothes (125 pieces in all) on sale at expensive specialty stores in New York, Texas, California and London.

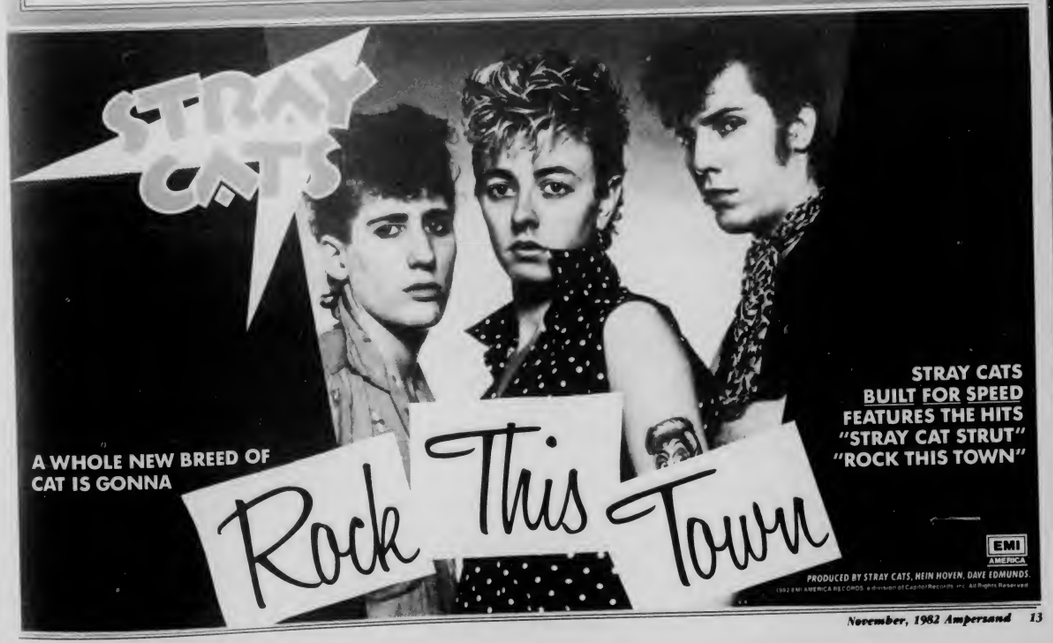
Many people, particularly those in the film business, fail to see the potential value of a picture before it is made. In the early Seventies Kurtz and Lucas wanted the film executives at United Artists to produce American Graffiti, but the studio rejected the picture. It was finally made at Universal, where it became one of the most successful low-budget movies ever produced. Then Kurtz and Lucas wanted Universal to produce Star Wars, but, like United Artists, the studio is said another reject and lost the biggest moneymaker in the history of the business.

Did those experiences teach Kurtz anything? Yes, he answers. It taught me you have to make the films that you want to see. You can't second guess the studio or the audience. And if you don't find an audience for your film you can't get depressed about it. There will be another.

Easy for Kurtz to say, since producing films has made him more than a millionaire and given him clout in Hollywood. Still, it was not that long ago that he graduated from film school at the University of Southern California and worked on low budget movies as everything from sound editor, costumer, makeup man, and editor to cameraman, production manager and, sometimes, director. It was also during that time that he met Lucas, who was just completing his first feature, THX 1138, and the pair went to work on getting American Graffiti off the ground.

That's why, when lecturing at colleges, Kurtz says he makes a special point to advise fledgling film students to do as much work as they can on as many projects as they can in preparation for what's to come in the real world. "But that advice," he adds, "is not always done in his most encouraging tone.

"When I talk to students I go out of my way to do one thing," he admits. "To be negative. If they're dedicated it won't matter what I say. They'll ignore me. And those are the ones who will get ahead."



Christopher Reeve

that continues to be a good one," he continues, "and I think Superman III is going to be the best yet. We're not just taking up space with these movies, cranking out a series like I Love Lucy." I don't just get up in the morning and phone it in. Everyone involved keeps refining the concepts and so each film I think there's a distinct shift of tone, style and point of view. Part One really emphasized Americana and all the mythological overtones of the pop hero. Part Two was more tongue-in-cheek, more like a comic book. Part Three is going to be more complex psychologically. We're going to call it Superman vs. Superman. Imagine that Superman comes apart at the seams — that he is somehow trapped in a schizoid split and the two sides of his personality battle each other. It's sort of an id versus superego deal, taking the Clark Kent/Superman notion and magnifying it intensely. It's going to give me a lot to do. A real challenge and a chance to break some new ground.

As sympatico as Reeve seems to be with the character he has brought to screen and to life, the idea of an open-ended Superman saga leaves him decidedly non-plussed. "I've signed no contract," he remarks. I did Part Three because it seemed like a good idea. I define a good idea rather narrowly. A good idea for making a film is not to think three million bucks. After awhile money really does lose its meaning. There's such a thing as being too rich. Superman was a chance to do something better than people expected and I think both films were a hell of a lot better than what was anticipated. I thrill at the chance to exceed people's expectations and as long as that element is present, I'll do the films."

Sandwiched before and after the releases of Superman I and II were a pair of Reeve vehicles that did as much to induce yawns from filmgoers as the tremendously successful super hero series did to excite thrills. Somewhere in Time, a dismal romance cast Reeve as a maudlin time traveler pining for a turn of the century Jane Seymour. A near complete box office abortion, it fared only slightly worse than the thin film version of Ira Levin's talky Broadway mystery Deathtrap, which squandered Reeve's considerable on-screen charm on a static bad guy ultimately more dull than dangerous. As richly deserved as both flicks plunge to late night cable-fare might be, Reeve refuses to pronounce the post mortem. "I don't parse or put down any of my past work," he insists. "Why should I? It doesn't suit my purpose simply to provide a good quote. Everything I've done seemed like a good idea at the time, and I refuse to be lured into critiquing my work in public. What I will say is that I've played over 90 stage roles and been in five movies to date. I don't think you can say I've been tested in film in any significant way."

Well tested or not, the question arises given the public response to his non-Superman film ventures whether Reeve is in peril of imminent typecasting, whether he will eventually discover that the only role folks will pay to see him in is the Man from Krypton. The assertion makes him positively bristle.

"That's a question the media keeps asking because they can't think of anything else to ask," he responds, promptly and pointedly. Suddenly Reeve's sunny nature seems clouded more than a little hostile, as if the very suggestion that his nearly overpowering association with the character of Superman — evident even here, sitting around in old clothes in a badly decorated office — might prove a professional liability. "To assume that type-casting is a danger with any actor is to be totally out of touch with what's possible to do. Even the fact that the last actor to play the Man of Steel — George Reeves on the popular television series — committed suicide when the show's cancellation effectively ended his acting career, doesn't seem to faze Reeve. In fact, he's getting angrier. "The Fifties and the Eighties are just not the same. I'm delighted that children will think I'm Superman/Clark now until I'm 90. But children don't cast movies. Audiences are more sophisticated than they used to be. They want actors first and stars second. The movie industry understands that. Only the media lags behind. I mean, Robin Williams does Popeye and then does The World According to Garp. Sylvester Stallone does Rocky and then —" he hesitates, his voice trailing off.

Whatever the potential for Reeve to become a one-role actor, he's absolutely convinced that his upcoming lead role in Monsignor will put the issue to rest — and in the process muzzle the media hounds — once and for all. Christopher Reeve, trumpets the press handout, stars as Monsignor, the priest who knows the streets as well as he knows his God." It's a line only a publicist could love and one that points up what may be a particularly sticky marketing problem for the Frank Perry-directed film concerning the life and times of an American priest rising through the Vatican hierarchy.

"This is not a religious movie," insists Reeve, as if aware already of potential problems in accessibility attached to the subject matter. "It could take place on a submarine. It's about a pure man in a corrupt system, trying to learn how to be true to himself and still play by the rules. It's about being religious and being a human being at the same time and discovering it's not always possible."

It's also about the mafia, Vatican political intrigue and a tragic love affair between the Monsignor and an Italian nun, played by Genevieve Bujold. "It's the best part I've seen for an actor in a long, long time," Reeve remarks. "A lot of bankable stars were ready to kill for the role. I consider myself fortunate to have gotten the part. I studied hard to learn specifically what it was like to walk, talk and act like a priest. To feel comfortable in the vestments, to know how to deliver the liturgy."

All that hard work is perhaps why Reeve feels especially sensitive to crass media puns, such as a recent Time Magazine photo-blurb that began, "Able to preach long sermons in a single breath — look, up in the sky, it's superpriest! It's no wonder there is precious little love lost between Reeve and the at-large press.

If someone is rude and vulgar you can respond in the same way or you can turn your back and talk to someone more pleasant. I simply turn my back. The press has proven time and again that it doesn't respect entertainment figures — any human being, no matter how visible — deserves respect. It's a high wire act at the best of times and they're always there wishing you'd fall off instead of hoping you'll make it to the other side.

Part of making it to the other side for Reeve is to rigorously protect his private life. His tight-lipped precautions are understandable — as an unwed father he considers any intrusions on his off-screen time as potentially damaging to his son, Matthew. (The fact that Reeve and the child's mother, Gae Exton, continue to live in unwedded bliss seems to unsettle a great many people.) "When Matthew was born I tried to head off what I knew was going to come," he sighs. "I made the announcement and hoped that would be it. I should have known better. A year later People Magazine did a cover story on me and the reporter spent seven hours in interviews, waiting until my guard was down and then springing some questions about Matthew and a lot of other things he had no business knowing. What was given out as off-handed remarks became the focus of the story. I mean, a lot of people thought it was as cute as the dickens, but I realized then that if you give up your private life, you're left with nothing. I'm not going to let that happen again."

Matthew, Reeve claims, is the most important thing in my life" before adding in quick contradiction, "of course, work comes first. I just don't have a lot of time. I took my first vacation in three years this year. I spend whatever off-time I have playing with Matthew, practicing my piano, flying gliders, sailing and skiing. I also run a twin-engine airplane charter service out in New Jersey, which gives me a lot of pleasure, but I guess you could say I'm not sufficiently mellow to consider chucking it all and floating down a river on a raft with my son. I think it's reasonable and fair that a young man with just one shot to create some kind of identity for himself should give his career top priority. I want to accomplish something that later on I can remember when I'm sitting on the porch in the rocking chair." He pauses before adding, "My life has got to add up to something more than just being a good daddy. That's easy — you don't have to be particularly gifted to see what a child needs in life. Only a dummy could miss the love and playfulness that you give and get from a kid. There's no reason why you can't have both. My son understands; when I'm working everyone has to back off until I get the job done. I'm concentrating on acting and I don't consider myself a freak for giving it everything I've got."

Prof given ok to publish work

By RUSSELL TURNER
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts physics professor will be allowed to publish two papers that were repressed by the Pentagon for more than two months for national security reasons.

Professor Hajime Sakai was given official certification by the Pentagon Monday to publish two scientific papers on infra-red spectroscopy originally scheduled to be presented last August at an optics symposium held in San Diego.

"From the beginning, everybody expected the Defense Department would allow them to be published," Sakai said. "This was just a bureaucratic delay."

Sakai's papers were two of 92 papers at the symposium which were suppressed by the Defense Department in a move that angered many scientists and created national concern. The papers are the results of research into infra-red emissions in the upper atmosphere which has been financed by the U.S. Air Force.

The research is of interest to the U.S. Air Force that has many infra-red sensitive, heat seeking weapons but Sakai said he is not sure whether it was the content of the research or the sophisticated, computerized techniques used in the research that concerned the Pentagon most.

Although Sakai will be allowed to publish his papers, the incident has created concern within the UMass research community as the U.S. Air Force is apparently in violation of the terms of its research contract which requires — in accordance with UMass policy — that all research can be published.

The Defense Department action directly conflicts with UMass policy. The policy since 1972 has been to "undertake only those research projects in which the purpose, scope, methods, and results can be fully and freely disclosed."

"I felt sadness, not to mention a severe blow to my ego, in that the government wished to expand its censorship authority to the scientific communications which should be in a category of free, uninhibited exchange," Sakai said.

On August 19, Professor Sakai was informed by the Air Force that he was not to present either of his two papers until they had been "cleared" by higher Pentagon authorities. The following day he was told that his non-clearance was final.

Last month the Air Force renewed its contract with the University for another year and no additional clearance requirements have been added. There seems to be no assurance, however that despite University policy, the Pentagon will not act again in the same fashion.

On April 2, President Reagan issued an executive order calling for the Pentagon's Information Security Oversight Office to tighten security procedures and establish some uniform policy that would apply to all three services. This resulted in a Defense Department directive in August calling for new detailed regulations by Dec. 31 of this year.

Concern over some Navy-sponsored technical papers on airborne reconnaissance apparently triggered the Pentagon's early action.

House gets financial aid bill

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

A proposed law that would more than double student state financial aid was shepherded through the State Senate Monday night by Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, now moves to the House of Representatives for approval.

The $25 million proposal calls for a $14 million increase in state scholarships, the creation of a new state work-study program, an emergency low income assistance fund and a graduate student assistance program.

The bill has been referred to the House Ways and Means Committee which will make a recommendation to the full House whether the bill should pass.

If passed and signed into law by the Governor, the money will be available for the next academic year. The measure was attached to a piece of legislation, relating to student assistance, on Monday. The bill was passed by the Senate after a 45 minute debate that night, said Stan Rosenburg, aide to Senator Olver.

"It (the bill) commits the state to provide $44 million of financial assistance (for next year) so that financial aid officers can plan for the additional money," Rosenburg said, in explaining the timing of its passage. Also those students who are on the margin and weren't sure about affording college can now think twice (about attending)."

Arthur Jackson, director of Financial Aid at the University of Massachusetts, said the additional state money makes up for the student aid cuts made on the federal level.

Student government officials expressed gratitude towards Olver for his efforts and stressed that students should contact their state representatives to help insure the bill's passage.

"It's vital that people make phone calls (to their representatives)," said Jim Murphy, Student Government Association President and Student Trustee. "It (increased student aid) certainly doesn't sail through without...(student) support."

The Student Government Association will provide free phoneline and information concerning the financial aid proposal, along with a list of state representatives beginning today, said Sheila Sullivan, chairperson of the Student Government Association's Public Policy Committee.

"It's important for students to continue their voice from election day by writing or phoning (their representatives) to insure this bill gets passed," Sullivan said.

Under the proposal the General Scholarship program will be increased from $15 million to $29 million. Last year three out of every four students who applied for a scholarship were denied aid because the program did not have funds to aid all applicants.

Author discusses rapist's three personalitities

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Staff

Writing the Minds of Billy Milligan was a first rate-job in investigative reporting, said the book's author Daniel Keyes, who spoke last night in the Student Union Ballroom about the 1978 Ohio State University campus rapist.

Keyes, who received his undergraduate degree in psychology and his masters degree in English, was working on his first novel about multiple personalities when Billy Milligan was arrested for the rapes of four Ohio State University women. According to Keyes, Milligan's doctor, a close friend of Keyes, called him up and asked him if he was interested in interviewing Milligan.

"It is then that I began my four year odyssey on the multiple personalities of Billy Milligan," Keyes said.

"There are 1200 cases in the United States of multiple personalities. Within this person, there is the dominant, operating within a complex unit of behavioral patterns of interaction. Each of the personalities is in touch with the world," he said.

Milligan is an example of such a person, he said. Milligan was the first person acquitted of a major crime because he possessed multiple personalities. Keyes said his disorder results from the sexual abuse he was subjected to when he was a child.

Keyes said Milligan is the illegitimate son of a nightclub comedian who often threatened to bury Billy alive.

"Billy's mother attested to the fact that her husband actually did bury the boy alive. He left a pipe over his face for air. But before he shoveled the dirt off of the child, he urinated through the pipe into Billy's face," Keyes said.

Keyes described to the audience the many facets of Milligan's mind. He said Milligan has 24 personalities of which three played a major role in his behavior. "Arthur" is the most important personality because he is the one who dictates when each personality gets to appear in the limelight. He is described by Milligan as a kind of "Mr. Spock" because of his immpeccable logic. "Ragan", the Yugoslav, expresses the anger that Milligan could never express as a child. He is the sole protector of all the other personalities. "Allen", the third personality is the con-man and the only personality who smokes, Keyes said.

"It was difficult to assemble all of Milligan's personalities and to attribute them to the crime that he committed," Keyes said.

Despite gas leak, space shuttle countdown begins

10, 9, 8, 7...

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia's four-man crew, largest ever to assemble for space flight, got launch-site status briefings yesterday after NASA decided to ignore a "creeping" helium leak and launch a less-than-perfect shuttle tomorrow morning.

Countdown was going smoothly for Columbia's first commercial venture after four test flights. Top space agency officials gave their go-ahead for liftoff at 7:19 p.m. EST; the weather forecast was favorable.

The astronauts went to bed at dusk, to be awakened shortly after 3 a.m. EST today. One of their first tasks today was a pre-dawn visit to the ship that will carry them to a five-day, 184 mile high, flight.

After monitoring the ship's faulty back-up helium regulator, engineers said the leak was slower than expected and NASA officials elected to bend mission rules and launch regardless.

"We are compromising by saying the leak rate is acceptable for flight," said director Stanley Gross. Rules say the shuttle won't be launched with a faulty back-up system. Helium is used to pressurize fuel lines and Gross said the leak would go away in flight.

Artist's conception of the space shuttle to be lifting-off tomorrow.

The decision to ignore the leak avoids a weeks-long delay. A quick fix would not have been possible and the shuttle, mated to its fuel tank and two solid rocket boosters, would have been taken back into its assembly hangar.

On-time launch is particularly important to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration since the agency's shuttle is carrying its first commercial payloads — two nearly identical communications satellites that will be released from the cargo bay and rocketed 22,300 miles into space.

NASA is receiving about $11 million each from their customers — Satellite Business Systems of McLean, Va., and Telesat Canada, Inc. The agency isn't making money on the flight, however. The cost of flying the shuttle on its 5-day mission is about $150 million.

The two communications firms are the first in a long line of customers who have signed on to pay NASA for shuttle launch services.

The launch "window" — the time during which the vehicle can be launched — is only 33 minutes, much shorter than usual. The need to be at a precise point at a precise time for the satellite launches is one of the new constraints.

The four astronauts who will ride Columbia on its fifth leap into space flew to Cape Canaveral from their training base in Houston.

Explosion in Afghan tunnel kills thousands

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — As many as 2,000 Afghan civilians and 700 Soviet soldiers perished in an Afghanistan tunnel jammed with buses and trucks when a fuel truck exploded and turned the passageway into a raging inferno, Western diplomatic sources said yesterday.

The diplomatic sources and Afghan rebels said victims burned to death or asphyxiated after the truck collided with another vehicle last week in the 1.7-mile-long Salang pass tunnel in the Hindu Kush mountain range 70 miles north of the capital, Kabul.

The diplomats said Soviet troops outside the tunnel blocked both ends with tanks because they thought the explosion signaled a rebel attack, and thereby sealed off all means of escape to the victims.

There was no official confirmation from Kabul or the Kremlin. The Soviet Union has sent at least 100,000 Soviet troops into Afghanistan since 1979 to help crush a Moslem uprising against the Moscow-backed government.

Guerrillas, who recently have ambushed several convoys on the main highway that passes through the tunnel, denied any role in the explosion, which is believed to have occured Nov. 2 or 3.

Accounts were pieced together from reports by Western diplomats in Kabul, Afghans who claimed to witness the disaster and rebel sources in Pakistan. Independent accounts were impossible to obtain because Afghan authorities sharply restrict foreign reporters.

The diplomatic sources, who refused to be identified by name or country, said up to 700 Soviet soldiers were killed and 200 others injured. Estimates of Afghan civilian casualties ranged from 400 to 2,000, they said.

Conflicting reports emerged about what exactly happened inside the tunnel, but the diplomatic and rebel accounts agree the disaster started when the fuel tanker collided with another vehicle, igniting a fiery explosion.

Legislature begins death penalty debate

BOSTON — The Massachusetts House opened debate on a death penalty bill yesterday, quickly following up on the referendum in last week's election authorizing the Legislature to enact a capital punishment law.

Speaker Thomas W. McGee said the House, recorded overwhelmingly in favor of capital punishment frequently in the past, would dispose of the issue "one way or the other by the time we leave" yesterday. The bill then would go to the Senate.

Floor action began late in the afternoon and was expected to run well into the night.

Opponents promised a string of amendments and long debate. But, "I'm not at all optimistic," said Rep. David B. Cohen, D-Newton, noting that "the vote in the House has always been better than 2-to-1 in favor of the death penalty."

Before the Legislature was an expanded version of a bill originally submitted by lameduck Gov. Edward J. King. Speed was considered essential, because Gov.-elect Michael S. Dukakis, who takes over Jan. 4, opposes capital punishment. An aide has said he would veto such a bill.

Action on a statute was made possible by voter approval of a state constitutional amendment in last week's election aimed at reversing a 1980 state Supreme Court ruling which held that the punishment violated the Massachusetts Constitution's ban on cruel or unusual punishment.

The amendment, passed nearly 3 to 2, was a simple declaration that nothing in the constitution should be construed as prohibiting capital punishment.

Massachusetts Senate debates insanity defense

BOSTON — A study of the use of insanity as a defense was approved by the Massachusetts Senate yesterday.

The resolve approved on a voice vote calls for a special commission, composed of legislators and three law school deans, to study a proposal that the defense of not guilty by reason of insanity be stricken, allowing a verdict of "guilty but not criminally responsible on the grounds of mental disease or defect."

The commission would be charged with reporting the results of its investigation and recommending legislation by the last Wednesday in December. The measure was forwarded to the House for consideration.

State legislators vote for $5.6M payhike

BOSTON — Despite protests that the timing was bad and some increments were excessive, the Massachusetts Legislature enacted a record $5.6 million pay raise yesterday for legislators, judges and statewide officers.

The House passed the $5.6 million bill by an 84-59 vote, the Senate passed it 22-13, and the legislation was sent to Gov. Edward J. King for his approval.

The raises, effective in January, jump the pay for incoming Gov. Michael S. Dukakis to $75,000 from $40,000 earned by the outgoing incumbent.

Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti will get an increase to $65,000 from $37,500, and the other constitutional officers, lieutenant governor, state secretary, treasurer and auditor, from $30,000 to $60,000.

The pending bill increases the base pay of legislators from $19,766 to $30,000. It boosts salaries for 68 members of leadership — 34 of 40 senators; 34 of 160 representatives — by $13,500 to $27,000.

Most of the three-hour House debate was critical of the strategy of the Democratic leaders holding the bill back until after election and including judicial raises in the bill.

Rep. Andrew S. Natsios of Holliston, chairman of the Republican State Committee, objected to bonuses for legislative committee chairmen and others who, he claimed, would lose more independence.

Reactions to grievance procedure favorable

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

Although reaction to the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate's approval of the Sexual Harassment Grievance Procedure has been favorable, some questions have arisen over a change in the policy, placing the final decision in the hands of a vice chancellor.

According to the procedure, the final decision would be made by the vice chancellor in the particular area in which the harassment took place.

Loren Bartiz, vice chancellor for Academic Affairs, will decide cases involving faculty; Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for Student Affairs, will decide cases involving students; and John L. DeNyse, acting vice chancellor for Administration and Finance, will decide cases involving staff members.

Jane Zbysznyski, a member of the Women's Issues Team on the the groups that recommended the proposal, said the final decision originally rested with the chairperson of the hearing panel. An amendment gives the vice chancellor the power of making the final decision, Zbysznyski said.

"I am glad they passed the procedure, but I wish they hadn't amended it," she said.

Dr. Louis Fischer, assistant to the chancellor who will recommend the procedure to the chancellor, said, "The actions of the campus Senate are recommendations. He (the Chancellor) has the final word."

"The amendment was added only to make something a little clearer," Fischer said.

"It's a friendly amendment, not a hostile one," he said. "Some amendments are hostile if they change the meaning." He added a friendly amendment "makes it more clear, it expresses it better."

Although Fischer said he was perfectly satisfied with the amendment, Zbysznyski said the amendment places too much power in the hands of the administration.

The proposed sexual harassment policy states, "no member of the University community may sexually harass another."

The procedure allows for the issue of sexual harassment to be dealt with on either an informal or formal basis. All individuals are encouraged to discuss the issue informally with the Ombudsman's Office. If the complaint cannot be resolved, the individual has the option to issue a formal complaint and request a hearing. The complaint would then be brought before a thirteen member hearing panel.

Ruth Diaz, of the Legal Services Office who wrote the fifth and final draft of the proposal, said she was confused by the changes in the procedure. She said she is glad the procedure can be brought into phase two, which consists of publicizing and educating the campus community.

"I don't think that people really understand what sexual harassment is," Diaz said. A number of clients have questioned Diaz about whether they are actually experiencing sexual harassment, she said.

"It is time to make the piece of paper come to life, to start eradicating or at least minimizing sexual harassment on campus, Diaz said.

Zbysznyski said there is a one year review period that will allow them to find out if everyone is satisfied. She said she hopes they can start implementing the procedure by the beginning of next semester.

Fischer said he is confident the chancellor will put the procedure into practice. "I'm very pleased the Faculty Senate approved it overwhelmingly."

Fischer said with many groups working on one procedure there is bound to be some compromise.

"The procedure is not my dream procedure," he said. "My dream would be a world without sexual harassment.

Copy cards introduced

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Correspondent

Administrative Services and library personnel at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst have decided to introduce COPICARD, a new system enabling students and faculty to operate the copiers on campus without the use of coins. Instead, copy machine users utilize an encoded card the size of a credit card.

"COPICARDS offer students and faculty a more convenient method of copying. This system does away with the hassle of making and carrying change," said Richard McDonald, business manager of the University Library. "The more copies made, the lower the cost."

"We have sold roughly 375 cards since the opening of school," said Winthrop Cummings, general manager of the University Store in the Campus Center. "We are strictly the agent through which students and faculty can purchase the cards. It is not a profit making system."

Although the cost of coin operated copiers has gone up from five cents to ten cents this semester, the cards help defray some of the cost.

The cards can be purchased for $9, $24, $35, and $50. For nine dollars, 100 copies can be made; with $24, 300 copies; and with $35, 500 copies. The greatest value is the $50 card, with which 1,000 copies can be made, reducing the cost per copy to five cents.

"We went out to bid on a new contract with the copying companies July 1," McDonald said. "Copy Co. of Boston was one of two companies to bid on the ten cent vend with the use of the COPICARDS."

"Considering everything else that has gone up, this increase was expected," said Marabeth Clapp, director of Administrative Services. "UMass was one of the last places to hold on to the nickel charge. The cost of using coin-operated copiers has been a nickel since 1966."

"We can now expect better service from Copy Co., the same company we employed last year," Clapp said. With the ten cent vend, they will be better able to overhaul the machines and replace worn parts. The quality could no longer remain uniform with the nickel fee."

"We hope the use of these cards will deter vandalism," McDonald said. "We have a history of the machines being broken into."

Legal Services chairperson's salary approved

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Sentate approved last night a proposal from the Governing Board of the Legal Services Office (LSO) to make the board chairperson a paid position.

The proposal pointed out that the chairperson puts in about 10 to 15 hours each week during the semester and that this kind of commitment should not go uncompensated. The proposal added the compensation "allows all members of the board, not just students who have money and don't need to work, the opportunity to take on this educational experience."

The chairperson will be paid $3.50 per hour on an 8 hour a week basis. Although the chairperson spends many hours a week during the semester in the office, this workload is considerably reduced during vacation periods, so an average of 8 hours a week was agreed upon.

The Senate was asked to allocate $224, one-quarter of the total amount of money needed to pay this salary for the remaining 32 weeks of fiscal year 1983, to add to the $672 already put forth by the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The LSO is funded three-quarters by the Student Government Association and one-quarter by the Graduate Student Senate, so the funding had to be approved by both bodies to be implemented.

The Graduate Student Senate Finance Committee had approved the funding at an earlier meeting, but it was pointed out by Senate President Jack Delmond that the Senate had to make the final approval because the allocation was not only a funding request but also a matter of policy.

In other business last night, the question of graduate student unionization was discussed.

The aim of a union would be to address graduate student grievances such as teacher assistant assignments and stipends. Some graduate students pointed out that teacher assistant workloads and pay are grossly disproportionate.

Delmond noted that the union "could not make too much of a difference in teacher assistant pay because that is something more or less mandated by the state budget." It was noted, however, that a union could give the graduate students the unity to bargain for the redress of grievances and the implementation of graduate students' needs.

Woman says 'bring it back'

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN

The letter read:

"Will the persons who have removed the sign from the house at 300 North Pleasant st. please return it? No questions will be asked."

But the story goes much deeper than that. Mrs. Ruth S. Ruder, 91, said the sign, advertising her son's veterinary practice, is the second sign to be removed from her front lawn since school began this year and the thirtieth sign to be taken since she moved there with her husband 66 years ago.

"There is no hope of getting the first sign back. I hope that this small sign will be returned quietly," she said.

Mrs. Ruder, who moved to her brick North Pleasant street home after her late husband graduated from the University of Pennsylvania Veterinary School, said she hopes the return of the sign will improve the relations between the "town and the gown (the universities)." Although she did not blame any particular group of University of Massachusetts students for the sign's absence, she said there is no trouble during the summer when students are not around.

"Signs go in Amherst. A good many other people like funeral homes have signs stolen. We seem to be in a good location," Mrs. Ruder said.

The larger sign, taken within weeks of the opening of school this year, cost $125 and "must have taken several men to twist the post" out of its cement enterrment.

The smaller sign, older and made of wood, was "easy to take," Mrs. Ruder said.

Of the 30 signs stolen since 1916, only one has been returned. Ten years ago, the sign, her husband's first, was stolen and Mrs. Ruder wrote a letter to the Collegian asking for its return because of its sentimental value. That sign has since been put away.

"I feel very badly to tell the truth," Mrs. Ruder said of the recent trespassing. "I feel very sick about it or I wouldn't have written."

"I turned 91 on Oct. 25. It would be a nice belated birthday present to have the sign returned."

Rumors concerning a possible gubernatorial appointment for state Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, will remain so at least for the time being. Both Olver's office and the transition team of Governor-elect Michael S. Dukakis declined to comment on the matter yesterday.

According to a story in Monday's Boston Globe, Olver is being considered for the position of administration and finance secretary. Other rumored candidates for the position include Rep. Gerald M. Cohen, D-Andover and former Senate Ways and Means Committee Staff Director Mark Ferber.

Also rumored to being considered for the post are Robert Weinberg, member of the Massachusetts Port Authority board of directors, Frank Keefe, former head of the Office of State Planning during Dukakis' first administration and James Young, former deputy to Boston Mayor Kevin H. White.

The administration and finance secretary is often called "the deputy governor." Duties include overseeing all other secretaries that come under the executive branch. This includes working in conjunction with their budgets.

Senate Ways and Means Chairman Chester G. Atkins, D-Concord, and Senate President William M. Bulger, D-South Boston are recommending Ferber for the position.

Stan Rosenberg, an aide to Olver, said Olver was too involved with pressing matters within the Senate, including both financial aid and death penalty legislation, to concern himself with a rumored position.

"I don't think he's wasting any energy wondering what he would do if appointed," Rosenberg said.

An aide to William Geary, director of personnel selection for the Dukakis transition team, declined to confirm or deny the rumor.

"There is no way he would comment on that one way or another," the aide said.

Wanted: award nominations

By WENDY WALSH
Collegian Correspondent

Articulate, stimulating, motivating, knowledgeable, fair and open minded: these may be the qualities of this year's winner of the University of Massachusetts Distinguished Teaching Award.

Students who feel one of their professors fits this description should send a letter to the Office of the Graduate Student Senate, room 919 of the Campus Center, by Friday.

Jack Delmond, president of the Graduate Student Senate and chairperson of the Distinguished Teachers Award Committee, stressed that a teacher's professional standing is not taken into account.

"We're trying to choose the best teachers," he said. "These include those with exceptional communicative skills, an ability to motivate others and those who concern themselves with the varying backgrounds and interests of their students."

Awards of $2,000 will be given by the Graduate Student Senate to three selected professors and three teaching assistants at a formal award ceremony in April.

The decision process has three steps. The first involves submission of nominations. Any student may nominate a favorite professor or teaching assistant.

The second step is to collect the nominations, which usually number from 70 to 100, and send evaluation questionnaires to all of the candidates' students during both the fall and spring semester. The questions range from fairness in grading to command of knowledge in the subject area.

The final step toward a decision is to choose, after reading the questionnaires, 30 to 40 finalists.

Additional evaluation sheets are then distributed to faculty members, selected students and alumni. These sheets ask for a candid opinion of the nominee's teaching skills based on personal observations.

The Distinguished Teachers Award Committee, which is made up of graduate and undergraduate students and faculty, will determine the final winners through a review of these evaluations.

Last year's distinguished professors were Alexander Chajes, civil engineering; Charles Moran, English; and Curtis Thorne, Microbiology.

Distinguished teaching assistants were Robert Cooley, mathematics; Ann Murphy, rhetoric; and Mary Rosen, mathematics.

Professors and teaching assistants who have won the award within the last five years are not eligible for this year's award.

DDR women's lib works

Socialism in the German Democratic Republic is interpreted by Americans as a failure as far as women are concerned, but the interpretation is mistaken, said a professor from East Berlin who spoke last night at the University of Massachusetts.

Dr. Marianne Muller, a specialist in American and Canadian Studies at Humboldt University, told an audience of 30 people it is believed that because of the tendency of women to be in lower paid positions in East Germany, it is often concluded socialism does not liberate women.

"The constitution of the German Democratic Republic says men and women shall have equal rights. Ninety percent of all women work. We have the highest employment rate of women in the world," Muller said.

"Women work, not really because they need the money, but because they regard work as one way for socialization," she said.

Muller said the audience must keep in mind East Germany is a young country, only 33 years old. "There are only three generations of women working and living in my country. I am a spokesman for the younger generation. My own personal experiences have certainly been shaped by the social experiences in my life," she said.

"One out of every three elected legislators are women. One out of every two judges is a woman. One out of every three chairpersons of a firm is a woman and one out of every four mayors is a woman," Muller said. However, "There is still considerable under-representation of women."

Women do have a strong foothold in high prestige jobs. Women make up 30 percent of all the lawyers in East Germany and 45 percent of all dentists, she said.

Muller attributed the recent shift from the unskilled labor market by women to the skilled labor market to laws passed by the government that encouraged the education of women.

"Equal pay for equal work is guaranteed. Education is free. A new law was passed only last year in which every student after the tenth grade gets a scholarship," she said. "There are for women special courses to acquire a college degree."

The government also has a Women's Promotional Plan, similar to Affirmative Action in the United States, Muller said.

"The Women's Promotional Plan is signed every year. It is designed to increase women's role in leadership and management. It qualifies women to increase their education so they are qualified for a leadership position," she said.

The idea of a strong family is also supported in East Germany, Muller said.

"My country occupies first place in the world regarding childcare facilities. I'm really proud of it as a mother," she said. In East Germany, "it is a free decision for motherhood, but on the other hand, the decision for motherhood is promoted" by the government, she said.

Fathers and mothers have the same rights and responsibilities of childcare, she said. Women are given a paid day off, one "household day" a month to catch up on housework, she said. But single fathers and single mothers are also given "household day," she said.

Three new programs will be created under the proposal. The first is a work-study program to be funded at $5 million. Under the program the state will pay two-thirds of a student's salary, with the remaining money to be paid by the employer.

A $3 million grant program for graduate students would also be created. Presently graduate students are not eligible for any scholarship program, federal or state. They are only eligible to take out student loans.

One million dollars will be set aside for an emergency low income assistance fund under the proposal. The funds will be granted to welfare recipients who are heads of household.

"The problem is that low-income people run into a problem where a few hundred dollars prevents them from returning (to college) — like their car breaking down," Rosenburg said.

Shuttle project doesn't fly

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

A Space Shuttle project submitted by professors from the University of Massachusetts and approved by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) continues to be the victim of budget cuts within the nation's space agency, and remains earthbound as the shuttle is scheduled to lift off on its first operations flight tomorrow.

The Spacelab Interstellar Oxygen Project (SINTOX) was one of 40 detailed proposals selected by NASA in August 1979 for consideration for implementation in Spacelab, the shuttle's future experiment station.

However, Professor K. Sigfrid Yngvesson of the electrical and computer engineering department at the University of Massachusetts, who developed SINTOX along with fellow University colleagues, said he has heard little response and received no funding from NASA after having completed and submitted the project's "definition phase" in February, 1981. While shuttle flights continue to progress on schedule, he said he has been unable to obtain information detailing how much of a delay for SINTOX is still expected as a result of budget limitations within NASA and the entire Spacelab program.

SINTOX consists of a short wave radio telescope carried into space with the shuttle, which Yngvesson said would be used to detect interstellar oxygen by its characteristically emitted radio waves. The telescope is similar to one already in use at the Five College observatory at Quabbin Reservoir. Clouds of oxygen molecules, light years wide in some places, cannot be detected by land based radio observatories due to oxygen in the atmosphere, he said. The clouds are associated with forming stars. Information about them could be important in understanding stellar birth.

Yngvesson said he will continue to send letters to NASA seeking resumption of the project, and remains hopeful for the project's eventual realization.

Concert captures nature

By LAURA SHANAHAN
Collegian Staff

Towering trees become towering skyscrapers. Dammed waters transform into waterfalls crescending over mossy rocks. This visual panorama of nature, a photographic essay by Bob Jamieson, musically accompanied by Mark Thompson, was presented last night in the Hampden Theatre at the University of Massachusetts. I Saw the Wind is their audio-visual account of Jamieson's travels in North and South America.

Jamieson's summer excursions were highlighted by photographs including sunrises and sunsets from the summit of Mount Waddington in British Columbia, looking down over clouds from mountain tops, and clear, crisp views of the Mount Waddington peak.

Jamieson and Thompson have been performing their "wilderness concert" for five years. They met as camp counselors in Colorado and provided entertainment for their fellow campers by intertwining Jamieson's photos and Thompson's music. New photos, new songs, new stories and new jokes added yearly enable the show to remain interesting to both performers and the audience.

Their lifestyle during the nine months in which they travel is hectic and uncertain. They spend their time on public relations work: booking the act, issuing press releases and travelling.

"It's an impersonal way to live," Thompson said. Driving, sleeping at motels and private homes, eating at restaurants, and rushing around to meet deadlines demands time, he said.

"You have to be able to accept the consequences of not being the top man or woman in your field," Thompson said. The remaining three months Jamieson climbs and Thompson sings and operates his own studio, Never Summer Productions. He has already produced two records and hopes to have the third out next year.

Their UMass stint is a long three-day stopover, in contrast to the eight concerts they will perform in the next nine days. Performing in New England has its advantages because less time is spent travelling between performances and there is less space to cover, they said.

Jamieson and Thompson will perform a free concert at 8 tonight in the Student Union Ballroom. Their next stop is at Merrimack College in North Andover, Mass.

Anne M. Jackson spoke about Latin American women's movements yesterday in Thompson Hall.

Latin women conduct own sexual revolution

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Staff

The revolutionary battlefields of Latin American countries are crossing the trenches of turmoiled regions into the workplace, the home and the street as women's movements in Peru, Nicaragua and Mexico conduct a revolution of their own — a sexual revolution.

The message was delivered yesterday to about ten listeners by Anne M. Jackson, a Marxist-humanist and feminist who has traveled throughout Latin America to observe women's movements there. Addressing the Thompson Hall audience, Jackson stressed the necessity of broadening political revolutions to affect a "change in relationships."

"Still there is the battle at home when you put down the gun," she said. "It's a hard task of building society. (Nicaraguan) women are asked: does your man say 'okay, we appreciate what you've fought for, but it's time to go back into the kitchen.'"

Jackson said in the Nicaraguan movement women constituted 30 percent of the guerilla army and in the Guatamalan movement 50 percent. But despite the fact women have become a cornerstone of revolution in these countries, she said their ideas take precedent over the question of quantity.

"Wherever you look, revolution and counter-revolution are locked in a battle and the women's movement is an essence of that movement," Jackson said.

A sense of forceful self confidence and hope in Nicaraguan women has bolstered an upgrading in the areas of education, work and literacy rates, Jackson said Nicaragua's literacy rate has risen from 30 to 50 percent and attributes it in part to the women's movement that recognizes "it (literacy) is absolutely essential if you are going to think beyond the four walls of your kitchen."

As a result of women's organizations, Jackson said Latin American revolutions have consisted not solely of " a few people running in the hills. They have had a revolution from the bottom up. They include everyone."

Although it is an enduting process, men are beginning to recognize the long-term benefits of an "all- inclusive" society. "Men are appreciating that you can't go back to the way you were before you were laying in the trenches," Jackson said.

Dorm collects XMas gifts for troubled area teenagers

By PAULA HOYT
Collegian Staff

Because of efforts of Coolidge dorm government at the University of Massachusetts, some Northampton teenagers may have a better Christmas.

In an ongoing commitment to the Year Toward Civility, Coolidge dorm government is sponsoring a holiday gift drive for troubled adolescents at the Tri-County Youth Programs, Inc. in Northampton.

This is the second year for the gift drive. Last year, the drive was organized by one student and was greatly appreciated by the program's director.

Robert Winston, the program's executive director, said he is looking forward to the contribution made by the dorm's gift drive.

"Because of state budget cuts, we depend on outside help," Winston said. "Without the help of the UMass contributions, it would be a poor holiday indeed."

The Tri-County organization provides a home for emotionally disturbed or court involved adolescents who have dealt with unstable family lives, physical abuse or neglect.

"The holiday season heightens a number of emotional issues for these youngsters and it can be a very traumatic experience," Winston said.

The gift drive helps to create a festive atmosphere for the youths. They generally do not go home and exchanging gifts helps make their holidays special, Winston said.

Students are asked to donate old albums, posters, games, sports equipment or anything appropriate for 14-18 year olds.

"We are trying to get other dorms and off-campus housing involved as well," said Glen Daly, a residence assistant in Coolidge and coordinator of the drive.

Gifts can be brought to Glen Daly in 315 Coolidge, or any other residence assistant in the dorm. Gifts can also be dropped off at 219 Butterfield in the Central residential area.

United Way aids community

By LAURIE MACDONALD
Collegian Correspondent

The Hampshire Community United Way is in the midst of its annual fund drive and this year the emphasis is on community involvement.

The United Way, while providing funds for important area projects such as A Better Chance, the Amherst Youth Program, the American Red Cross and the Visiting Nurses Association, is calling for support to help finance these and other organizations in the Hampshire area.

Professor Everett Emerson, of the University of Massachusetts English Department, is the campus United Way coordinator for the 1982 fund raising drive.

"The question of satisfaction of heading a drive such as this comes from success," he said.

Emerson said he hopes the goal of $50,000 will be reached.

Only UMass employees are actually being solicited for contributions because Emerson said he feels students can not afford to donate.

"I was a student once, too," he said.

"Students can support the United Way by volunteering time to the various organizaitons to gain practical experience or perhaps even college credit," Emerson said.

Already, campus organizations are beginning to collect money for the fund drive. Beta Kappa Phi and Miller Lite Beer are joining together to sponsor a Tug O' War contest on Nov. 20. Proceeds will be donated to the campus fund drive. For more information, contact Craig Keenan at 549-4066.

Athletic Injuries

If you are an athlete, your enthusiasm for sports can sometimes lead to problems. Injuries are common enough when two bodies collide at full velocity. But body contact is not the only problem.

Starts and stops at high speed, twisting and turning into awkward positions may cause strains to muscles, limbs, and back. Untempered enthusiasm may cause a person to try harder and play longer than is beneficial for his or her own body. If your body is fatigued, there is greater potential for accidents and injury.

Periodic chiropractic examination will assist you in detecting minor problems before they get worse. An exam is recommended before the season begins, whenever an injury occurs, as well as at the end of the season.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Mental health lost issue?

Let me begin with an anecdote. Two men are discussing peculiar customs in various countries. As the examples become more unfamiliar, each man shares the other's belief of our superior culture. Listen to their dialogue.

"...Look at the caste system in India," one fellow remarks. "They got 'Untouchables' don't they?" the other responds smugly. Then continuing, "America's so far ahead of that..Can you image not even being touched?" He laughs. The storyteller adds "It mustn't be much fun though if you're one of 'em."

Examining our culture more deeply however, one detects some disturbing examples of social inequality.

R. Jay Allain

Ever hear any racial put-downs? Have you ever witnessed condescending and even hostile looks at those who are impoverished? And what, finally, of the mentally ill? Are they not a caste unto themselves?

One of the fundamental rights in our society seems to be the delivery of quality medical care to anyone who requires it. Contrast this with someone diagnosed as 'mentally ill.' A recent study revealed that the typical client in a state institution receives four (4) hours of interaction with staff per week. Does this not resemble a caste? Imagine visiting a medical doctor with a vague physical complaint, then being removed from friends and one's community, to a remote colony where one is placed with others who have physical complaints. Here one wanders the locked corridors seeking help, though little, if any, is to be found. Either a 'spontaneous recovery' must occur or the admitting physician decides to release you. Inhuman, you say. Yet a similar procedure is happening right now in the mental health system.

Well, hopefully we agree this situation is unfortunate. But what is the answer? Individuals must begin (if they haven't already) to critically examine their own attitudes toward these unfortunates. With a sense of compassion, imagine a confused and scared person, "the loser in the game people play," perhaps a victim of multiple traumas, recovering a healthy feeling of self-worth in a mental hospital. Yes, some have drug and alcohol problems, but I ask you, what would you do if you had no family or friends with whom to discuss personal problems? Yet, and it is morally wrong, we continue to label and stigmatize these clients. We reject them. Their suffering, their situations are so radically different from those experienced by us "normals." We rationalize: they have brought these problems on themselves. Many are poor and unwanted and our affluence insulates us.

Perhaps each concerned individual could begin by admitting his or her own fears around 'mental problems.' Don't worry, even the experts have fears. Doubts about the effectiveness of treatment and how best to proceed in healing were shared with me by a top area psychiatrist. Yet inadequate emphasis is placed on treatment. With the advances in research now widely available and the continuing support of the public and legislators, to deliver effective treatment, unnecessary suffering can be reduced significantly.

Deinstitutionalization is a diversionary issue. More critical, is, does the public want these people treated?

There is no neutral on this issue. While we play the proverbial ostrich, burying our heads in the sands of apathy and myth, avoidable human suffering is maintained. If we are truly a caring region, let us unite to demand humane improvements.

R. Jay Allain is a 1973 UMass graduate

Contradictory Collegian articles are unfair to Greek system

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Greeks, I would like to ask your staff to justify the strategic positioning of two contradictory articles about the same group, namely Beta Kappa Phi fraternity, which were found on page three of your Nov. 9th edition of the Collegian.

At the top left hand corner, I was pleased to see that the alcohol awareness program which was initiated as a disciplinary program for Beta Kappa Phi fraternity was considered "newsworthy" by your staff. The University of Massachusetts is being given the opportunity to reap the benefits of national coverage of this pioneering program.

Therefore, I question the intent of your newspaper when I see a file photo of the same group which is totally unrelated to the news story at the top, and distorts the image which the positive story attempts to portray.

I feel that this photo is unfair to the Greek system as a whole, and serves only to question your attitude towards Greeks, and your credibility as a news journal. I would like to request that a full explanation and retraction be printed to serve not only as an apology to Beta Kappa Phi, but also to clarify your position as a student-representative newspaper which is objective and unbiased.

View from the wheelchair platform needs improvement

To the Editor:

It was my good fortune this weekend to attend my second UMass football game this season. The sun was out when my friends and I found seats on the home side of the field. We then went for hotdogs and the afternoon looked very promising.

I was waiting for another friend to show up, when I noticed a girl sitting alone, looking very uninterested in the game. When I approached her and asked what was wrong, she answered, "I can't see the game." Ordinarily, this would not have bothered me, but this time it did; she was in a wheelchair.

Nancy Gorman is a UMass sophomore who attends most of the home games. Because she is confined to a wheelchair her seating at the stadium is limited to the wheelchair platform on the fifty yard line. Unfortunately for Nancy, the platform was not built high enough to enable her to see over the football players who stand on the benches along the sidelines.

The problem here is not the players. One cannot expect them to limit their enthusiasm to sitting on the bench. I feel that the problem is one of planning, on the part of either the physical plant or Alumni Stadium.

Something must be done here. Nancy Gorman and any other individual confined to a wheelchair have as much right to see the game as anyone else, and the UMass football team needs all the support they can get.

Black Homecoming ominously promotes segregation

To the Editor:

I am writing in reaction to an article on the front page of the November first edition of the Collegian. Particularly, my attention was aroused by the UMass "Black Homecoming Parade."

The festive atmosphere of the accompanying photograph is to be appreciated, but the intent of a "Black Homecoming" is what I question. Who in their right mind holds the notion that black students should have a different homecoming? Aren't we all (blacks, whites, etc.) involved in the festivities of the homecoming? Why shouldn't all students enjoy the event as a student body, without some of us isolating ourselves? To me there is a blatant segregationist attitude being displayed here. No wonder there is racism at our university, some students insist on grouping themselves in such a way that intimidates the majority. Isn't the aim of various cultural organizations to help assimilate, and also to alleviate the situation for the minority student? The insistence of some groups to remain in their own little "cults" only nurtures racist sentiments and eventually, hatred. The hypocrisy of that "homecoming" event is sadly farcical: segregation is clearly being promoted in an ominous way.

In conclusion, I would like to offer a general request. As powerless as I am, I would like to suggest to all campus ethnic organizations that they reevaluate their ultimate intentions. Is it to coexist and blend? Or is it more in "vogue" to remain cold and distant from the majority? Also, do the present measures actually make headway in the quest for racial harmony?

UMass zone comic on pregnancy steps out of bounds

To the Editor:

In reference to the comic strip on 11/5, The UMass Zone by Mark Rollins, we have found it extremely offensive that the Collegian would dare to print such a blatantly sexist comic strip. It concerns us greatly to learn that this kind of mentality still exists on this campus. Unwanted pregnancy is not a laughing matter. For a woman it is a highly emotional and upsetting experience. It disturbs us greatly to see that the Collegian would print this sort of comic strip. We feel that you are in a way supporting this type of mentality. It's sick. To think that in this day and age there are still many men who would probably change their phone number if they were found in a similar situation. We'd like to discover how men feel to this. In truth this whole issue bothers us a great deal more than we can say. We hope that the Collegian will review material more effectively next time, and defer from printing such sexist material.

US voters choose to abandon ship

The 1982 elections were a clear indication that the public does not want to "Stay the Course" for another two years.

Although Republicans still maintained a slight grip of control in the Senate, they lost 24 seats in the House, and perhaps more important, they lost 36 statehouse races, enabling the Democrats to pick up 9 governor seats previously held by the GOP.

Josh Meyer

These figures might not be as conclusive as some would have hoped, but the signal is loud and clear. The demographics of the national election prove this. According to an ABC exit poll, the only group to vote as a majority for Republicans was those earning over $40,000 a year, and this was by a measly three percent.

All other groups that voted for Reagan in '80 have seen enough jellybean economics. Two years ago, Ron won a plurality of votes by those under 30 years old and those over 50. Tuesday, both groups voted Democrat by a margin of 6 to 4. In 1980, Reagan won more than 40 percent of the labor vote. Last week they voted 7 to 3 for the Democrats.

Whites, blacks, Hispanics, Catholics, Jews, Protestants, poor and middle class, white and blue collar workers, and men and women as groups all voted Democratic by at least 55 percent. Most demographic breakdowns show this figure to be much higher. Reagan says he "beat the odds" last week. It's obvious that he didn't.

Later on, Reagan acknowledged that the outlook for the next two years would be one of compromise with the Democrats who did not want to stay the course. The President said that while he "wouldn't compromise on principles of what (he believes) is essential to the recovery," he is looking towards working in bipartisan fashion to solve the major problems the Administration is faced with. Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker and many of his cronies within the Republican Party disagreed with their boss, and were worried that the new line-up would produce a legislative stalemate.

According to governor-elect Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, what happened nationwide and in Massachusetts "was a massive rejection of national economic policy...The results clearly indicate that people in this state and country want a change in these polices." This week, Dukakis and all other governors will be meeting in Utah to begin mapping out a new economic blueprint in response to Reagan's.

Dukakis has also recommended that Reagan reexamine the defense budget and make a serious effort toward balancing the budget. Statewide, Proposition 2½ is said to be his overriding fiscal priority. This would in theory distribute 40 percent of the increase in the state's growth revenues to cities and towns in order to reduce property taxes while maintaining adequate municipal services. In other words, he supposedly wants to cut taxes without cutting services. The governor's convention delegates will try to plan against Reagan's Propsed abolishment of Title I Education funds and other programs as well.

Some other changes might be in store as well. Opponents of the death penalty, which passed by referendum last week, fear that Governor King will call a special "lame duck" legislative session to get Capital Punishment on the books before Dukakis can take office and veto it. The referendum only won by a 6 to 4 margin, and Dukakis, a staunch opponent of the death penalty, has urged the legislature to think twice before "putting peoples' lives in the hands of a governor."

The anti-Reagan resentment that has swept over the country hit home especially hard in Massachusetts. Republicans lost every major race for statewide office. The Democrats regained one State Senate and two House seats, as well as the state offices of attorney general, secretary, treasurer and auditor. The only incumbent to lose was someone who left the Democratic Party at the same time Reagan was elected and ran as a Republican. Statewide, Democrats now run the state from top to bottom.

Governor-elect Dukakis summed up the 1982 elections fairly well when he said, "There's no question that the people are better served by a two-party system. But as long as the Republican party is going to embrace policies so harmful to the state, it is going to have trouble attracting the young people they need."

A new college life on the rebound

Editor's note: Georgette Roberts is one of a selected group of "older students" (over 25) here at the University.

So here I am at UMass and I've got to write a paper on a LeGuin science-fiction story using John Berger's point of view as an art historian. I suppose I could call one of my kids to find out how one writes such a paper, but the kids are so far away. The last phone call I accepted from one of them cost me $41.35. Is any humanities paper worth it?

Georgette Roberts

At that rate, Reagan might have to increase my grant next year or I might just end up being one of the dropout statistics I've heard about. It's a wonder I didn't drop out my first two weeks here. Such a bunch of people with their eyes to the ground. I wait 30 years to go to college, and what does everybody do? They look at the ground.

It's a wonder they don't get lost, looking at the ground all the time. After all, most of the ground looks the same around here, except for the ground on North Pleasant Street. Now, that's a masterpiece of slow motion engineering.

I've been rerouted at least 15 times since Sept. 5. It's been a lot of fun counting the rocks which have been recycled from the earth to provide diversion for UMass pedestrians. Maybe that's why everyone looks down. Maybe I shouldn't take it so personally. Maybe they're counting rocks too.

Now, students waiting for a bus are more interesting. At least, they are looking up. Of course, that's the only way they can see the bus coming, but it is at least possible to mention what a nice day it is. And if the bus doesn't pull in too soon, you might get an answer. But, the success of "people watching" at any bus stop is predicated on not having any impossible assignments to rush back to your room for. It takes time to figure out the bus schedules so you can get at least two sentences in before the exodus.

And there's always the Campus Center. Plenty of people there. My first time in, I was met by a veritable flood of humanity, all going the other way. Still haven't figured out where they were coming from that I wasn't. It took me two weeks to work up my courage to try again. By then, most of them had found nice comfortable seats in the lobby or in the cafeteria where they were either sleeping, or busy reading the Collegian. But nobody was looking up.

How do you say "hello" to somebody who's not looking up? Maybe there should be a "hello" day on campus. Anybody who goes by anybody without saying "hello" would have to carry a red helium-filled balloon for the rest of the day.

Balloons are great ice breakers. I know, I carried one across campus from the Rand Theatre one day. People actually looked up and smiled! A few asked where the balloon came from and went after their own. Such a sign of life I had not seen since I got here.

Or maybe they came to life and smiled because I looked silly carrying a balloon at my age. After all, my youngest daughter was a freshman here last year, and I'm just following in her footsteps. Maybe that was it. But that can't explain all those other people looking down.

You don't have to be older to be lonely. Maybe you are just trying to remember what Mother said about "speaking to strangers." Well, I'm a mother, and I say, "forget it." Down with anonymity. Anonymity is no fun. We're at college to open our eyes, and meeting new people is part of the process.

And writing silly papers relating art history to a science-fiction story is also part of it. Viva the Humanities, long live the Red Balloon.

'A TABLE, IF YOU PLEASE, FAR FROM THE MADDING NOUVEAU BROKE.'

Random Notes

By the way, have you ever thought about wire? That long, round strip of metal we all take for granted? Exactly. Common, simple, everyday wire. I know this may be a little too deep for some, but wire is it. It is supreme. There is no comparison to the power of wire. I don't mean power in terms of electricity. I mean whoever possesses the most wire in this world can, essentially, rule it! You may think I'm crazy, or maybe even stupid. But at least I was accepted into this school, but that's another story.

Anyway, think about it. Wire. Look at your stereo and think where you would be if there were no such thing as wire. How about the alarm clock that wakes you in the morning? Or the Walkperson you carry around to class everyday. That's right, wire.

The telephone, the televlvision, refrigerator (warm beer), even the heater in your waterbed uses wire. This world revolved around wire.

How about the military? Aircraft needs wire. RADAR needs wire. All High-Tech communication must have wire. All the military forces of the world depend on those thin strands of copper.

If we could control the wire in this country, we could control the military. Interesting? There is no question about it. Wire is where it's at. It is the base on which all technology stands.

Now who's crazy?

If we control the military, we wouldn't have to worry about drafting people, we wouldn't have to worry about a nuclear war, we wouldn't even have to worry about Ronald Reagan. He's already proved to us he's nothing without T.V. or movies.

If we control wire, we could have world peace. See, it's that easy.

Radio, television, and filmmaking industries all depend on wire. The horizons are endless.

I'm surprised a new religion hasn't sprung-up revolving around the earthly powers of this copper formation. It is truly a gift of the gods.

I may be wrong, but if you ask me, I think were barking up the wrong tree. You know, we're at the wrong end of the horse. We don't need to protest, or rally. All we need to do is collect and control wire.

We need to make our opinions known. Do it through wire. We have to tell the rest of the people of this nation that we can make a change. We can be a part of the democratic process, through wire. Our voices will be heard through wire.

So, next time you sit around the T.V., turn on your Walkperson, or answer the phone, remember that the influence you need to let your opinions be heard, the power that could change your world, has been in the palm of your hand since Alexander Graham Bell shouted to Watson all those years ago.

Knowledge isn't the answer, wire is.

(Maybe I am crazy.)

Ondine a charming fairy tale

ONDINE
By Jean Giraudoux
Sunday, November 7
Lab Theatre, Mt. Holyoke College

By LETITIA ORD
Collegian Correspondent

Theater is distinguished from both film and television by the fact that the action occurs in the present, before the eyes of the audience. Theater has the capability of encouraging the audience's emotions to respond actively. Because the action is live, a theater audience is much more susceptible to the effects of a presentation. Ideally, every theatrical production should take advantage of this unique audience-actor relationship. Those that do not, however, may still successfully entertain an audience via a television-esque route.

This is the manner in which Ondine entertains its audience. The show opened this past weekend and will continue Thursday the 11th through to Sunday the 14th.

Jean Giraudoux presents us with Hans, a young knight, who wanders into Ondine's enchanted world and is bewitched by her beauty. The water nymph Ondine is also madly in love. The two return to his world in the center of the King's palace. Needless to say, the union doesn't work out.

Moments in the show were quite funny, and the entire second act was an absolute scream. The visual presentation of this act alone was well worth the price of admission. The set designers, in addition to the director, should be commended highly for the atmosphere they collectively evoked; it framed the humorous action with a slightly absurd dream-like clarity that was most appropriate.

On the whole, the individual performances were good. Peggy Golden as Ondine gave a solid performance which grew in strength as the play progressed and as her situation became more tragic. The cause for her attraction to Hans, however, was not immediately apparent.

You may not leave Ondine questioning the fate of humanity, but if you do go, you will undoubtably be charmed by this fairy tale.

Play by Play

by Pam Medalek

The UMass Theatre Guild opens its fall season with an adaptation of the Broadway musical Seesaw, which has been described as "a typical boy meets girl with ulcer story," and was written by Michael Bennette sho is also the author of Dreamgirls and A Chorus Line. Performances are at 8 p.m. on November 12-14, and 18-20.

Homeland is an original production by the UMass Third World Theatre. It was co-written by Steve Friedman and Selaelo Maredi and takes the audience from Johannesburg, South Africa to Greenwich, Connecticut. Its story revolves around Bob Kennelworth, a White South African businessman, en route to the U.S. for a General Motors business conference. Bob takes his family and their black maid on his journey across the ocean. The Kennelworths stay with another white family that is associated with General Motors. Coincidentally, this white family also has a black worker in their household. The comedy revolves around the similiarities and differences between the two families and the two Black women.

Presented in Hampden Theatre in Southwest, Homeland plays November 18-20 and December 2-4. Tickets are $2 for students and $3 for the general public.

Enter Desiree Jones, a play written by Amherst College students Howard Gould and Jerry Noble, is an original musical comedy about romantic life-styles at Amherst College. Performances will be given November 19-21 at 8 p.m. in the Fayerweather Theatre, Amherst College. Admission is $1.00.

Mass Appeal, a Broadway comedy hit written by Bill C. Davis, opens November 18 at Stage West in West Springfield. The play centers around a rebellious young seminary student who questions the Catholic Church and a veteran priest who savors good wine, big cars, and a day at the races. The show stars Mark Dolson and Tim Farley. For special student matinee times and prices, call 413-781-4470.

SLEEP CONVENTION (MCA)
Trees

By DEAN RANZO
Collegian Staff

Beautiful! That about sums up Sleep Convention by the newest member of the electric pop avant-garde, Trees. With the exception of some backing vocals and percussion, Trees is a one man soporific manifestation. Dane Conover sings, plays various synthesizers, treated piano, 6 and 12 string electric guitars, bass, and percussion.

Trees' music is so hypnotic it's hard to concentrate on anything else when the record's playing, except perhaps love-making. The ever so delicate piano and dreamy, trailing vocals on "Wildwood," with continual rainfall and inconspicuous synthesizers in the background make for quite a mellifluous song. The same narcotic melody is present on "Red Car" where Conover expresses his skepticism towards nuclear weapons:

> Red Car driving in the sunset > so far there isn't any object > no thing no mortal can control > no sign of any intervention > so far there isn't any reason
> Red Car

The sleepy melody is very appropriate here because it gives the subject a chance to sink in. The rest of the songs have a more mystical meaning though, which is why the album is so easy to take.

"Delta Sleep" is so smooth and contenting it could hypnotize Svengali. Rolling drums, eerie guitar riffs and the combination of Conover's iron-melting voice with romantic female whispers and backing vocals make up this delight.

"Midnight in America" is a wild tune that's a little more upbeat, yet holds the spirit of the album through some fine synthesizer and vocal arrangements.

"Shock Of The New" and "Gotta Moon" are strictly more upbeat and pop-oriented than the rest of the album, lending danceable beats and rhythms. Either would be an instant hit if it got airplay.

Sleep Convention is a very hypnotic and relaxing album, yet the music is full and very melodic in the spirit of Bruce Wolley. The music is well mixed and arranged and flows unscathed; it's a definite winner. Buy this album and listen to it before you go to bed, I guarantee the next thing you know it'll be time for your 9:05.

Gallery Prints

by Julie Schilke

Editor's Note: this is the first of a weekly series by Julie Schilke previewing gallery events on campus.

There is plenty of activity in campus galleries this month. A variety of artist's work is spread out all over the campus. Here is a glimpse of what is being exhibited in the area.

Amherst Weavers: Vision Shared, November 10-24 at Herter Gallery. This is the fifth annual group show of work done by the Amherst Weavers. Rugs, wall hangings and clothing are woven together in an exhibit which shows the functions and decorative uses of textiles.

Rita Deanin Abbey: From Desert to Bible Vistas, November 10-24 at Herter Gallery. Abbey's exhibit of paintings will open today. She is familiar with the desert and carries the landscape into her work. As a result, her work becomes a response to the landscape itself. From Desert to Bible Vistas is a series of paintings with a message beneath the sand.

Harry Bartnick: Photorealist paintings. November 2-19 at Hampden Gallery. The paintings jarring in their realism.

Pauline Stiriss: closes November 13 at the Student Union Gallery. People, people, people, all over the walls. Strange titles and compositions. This is not only a gallery filled with paintings, it is a sideshow of faces. This exhibit won't be around much longer. Stop in for a minute!

Theatre provides talent outlet

By WENDY WALSH
Collegian Correspondent

The Northampton based Sidewalk Children's Theatre Company needs talent in order to reach its goal of providing quality performing art.

Established and directed by Kathy Eisenhour, the three-year old non-profit organization provides free outdoor summer theater in Pulaski Park, Northampton, in addition to touring throughout Western Massachusetts during the year.

Last summer's repertoire included a musical production of The Emperor's New Clothes, and an adaption of an African tribal folk tale entitled Who's in Rabbit's House? In keeping with the company's goal of providing area residents with the opportunity to develop and showcase their talents, STC welcomes any original scripts.

STC tours during most of the year. They have performed for many social service agencies, schools, and libraries, for extremely low booking rates.

"We set our rates with a special consideration for recent funding cuts to the types of organizations for which we perform," Eisenhour said.

Attracting male talent is the biggest problem STC has. Eisenhour finds it confusing "that more talented men, especially theatre students, are not responding to periodic audition calls."

She added that the only thing amateur about their shows is their budget. "We provide professional entertainment that exposes area families to the magic of live theater," she said.

The STC touring productions are very compact. With an average of 6-10 characters per show, there is a little lighting and only simple sets. This makes the productions more attractive to prospective bookers with only a small play space.

STC is currently working on a Christmas production entitled "Winter Solice." A four person cast will perform this anthology of music and tales about winter and Christmas.

Eisenhour has sixteen years of theater related experience as an actress, director, choreographer, and stage manager. She has appeared in community, summer stock, off-Broadway and regional theater productions, as well as in two independent films in New York City.

She began STC in 1980 to dedicate herself to providing area children and their families with professional performing arts on an on-going basis.

STC's programs are expanding and community support continues to grow.

RESERVING YOUR CURRENT ROOM ASSIGNMENT

If you intend to keep your present dormitory assignment, personally sign up with your Head of Residence/Cluster Coordinator/Residence Hall Manager/Resident Director on Monday, November 15. DEADLINE FOR ROOM RESERVATION IS MONDAY, NOVEMBER 15.

If you want to keep your present dormitory assignment while also submitting a Preference Form you must do the following:

1. Sign up for a room in your dorm on either Monday, November 15 or Tuesday, November 16.
2. Fill out a Preference Form. On the Preference Form in the lower right corner is a box you must "check" if you wish to be returned to your dorm if your dorm or area choices cannot be met.

YOUR OLD DORMITORY ASSIGNMENT IS GUARANTEED ONLY IF YOU DO BOTH STEPS.

CHANGING YOUR ROOM ASSIGNMENT

If you wish to move to another room in the same dormitory, you must sign up with your Head of Residence/Cluster Coordinator/Residence Hall Manager/Resident Director. DEADLINE FOR MOVING WITHIN A DORMITORY IS TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 16.

If you wish to move to another dormitory, you must complete a Housing Preference Form. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING COMPLETED HOUSING PREFERENCE FORMS TO THE HOUSING ASSIGNMENT OFFICE IS WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 24. Preference Forms may be dropped off at any Area Management Coordinator's Office (AMC) (Southwest - JFK Lobby, Northeast/Sylvan - Leach Basement. Central/Orchard Hill - 101 Baker).

ROOMMATE REQUESTS

If you wish to move to another dormitory to room with a student already assigned to that dormitory, you must together complete a ROOMMATE REQUEST FORM. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING ROOMMATE REQUEST FORMS TO THE HOUSING ASSIGNMENT OFFICE IS WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 17.

If you wish to become roommates with a student in a dormitory to which neither of you is currently assigned, you must each complete a Housing Preference Form. These forms should be identical (with the exception of the "check box") and stapled together. DEADLINE FOR RETURNING HOUSING PREFERENCE FORMS IS WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 24.

IN-HOUSE ROOM REQUEST FORMS

If, during the regular In-House Room Choosing period, you were unable to secure a particular type of accomodation (a particular single or double room), please contact your Head of Residence/Cluster Coordinator/Residence Hall Manager/Resident Director and fill out an In-House Room Request Form. Rooms that become available during Intersession will be assigned according to seniority, to those students who have filled out this form and returned it to their Head of Residence/Cluster Coordinator/Residence Hall Manager/Resident Director.

QUESTIONS?

If you still have questions about the Room Choosing process please contact your House Staff or the Housing Assignment Office (545-2100), 235 Whitmore. Thank you.

Hypercurricula...

"Hypercurricula," a listing of events held at the University of Massachusetts and the surrounding area, is published daily in the Collegian. Events are listed on the day they will take place and are listed only once. Announcements MUST be submitted on "Hypercurricula" forms available in the Collegian office, 113 Campus Center, and returned by 3:45 P.M. Friday before the event is to be held. All submissions should be written in the same style as they appear in the paper.

"Hypercurricula" notices not submitted on the standard form and not submitted by the Friday before the week the event will take place will not be run. Due to space limitations, the Collegian cannot guarantee printing of all "Hypercurricula" notices. Priority will be given to UMass organizations.

JOIN THE LITE BEER TUG-OF-WAR.

Last year we conducted our Lite Tug-of-War contest on college campuses across the nation in an effort to resolve the eternal argument about Lite Beer..."less filling" or "tastes great"? This question as you may recall was never fully answered in our memorable "Battle of the Big Guys" commercial. After carefully tabulating the results of last year's contests, we found that the majority of campuses actually felt strongly both ways. So sign up today to join the Lite Beer Tug-of-War, and let us know how your campus feels about Lite Beer from Miller.

No more punches for Sugar Ray

BALTIMORE (AP) — World welterweight champion Sugar Ray Leonard, who admitted he vacillated until the last minute, announced his retirement from boxing last night.

"The final decision was made tonight, right here in the ring," Leonard said after making the announcement to a crowd of more than 9,000 in the Baltimore Civic Center, where he launched his pro career in 1977.

In answer to a question shouted from ringside, Leonard explained his indecision during the six months since an operation to correct a detached retina.

"Every day it was a different answer," he said. "I didn't want to mislead the public."

Leonard said he had thought about returning to competition for a time, but added: "Then I forgot about it."

Answering another question from the audience, Leonard said: "The feeling is gone. I will not come back. That's it."

During his formal announcement, during which he thanked his family and all those connected with his career both in and out of the ring, Leonard looked toward middleweight champion Marvin Hagler, a possible opponent who would it was thought would produce a purse of $15 million or more for Leonard.

"The fight with that great man would be one of the greatest in the history of boxing," Leonard said. "It would be Fort Knox, and he's the only man who could make it happen. Unfortunately, it will never happen."

Hagler, one of the invited guests who spoke to Leonard as he sat in the ring listening to accolades, also made reference to a possible bout with the welterweight champion.

"Leonard and Hearns (Thomas Hearns, whom Leonard defeated to become undisputed welterweight champion) was the showdown, but we've got to be the fight of the century," Hagler said.

Prior to that, however, Hagler said: "I'd like to see Leonard go out with style, the way that he is."

Leonard had not fought since Feb. 15, and his well-publicized decision came six months to the day since the 26-year-old welterweight champion underwent surgery to correct a detached retina in his left eye.

The production was billed as "An Evening With Sugar Ray Leonard," with Howard Cosell serving as master of ceremonies. Entertainer Wayne Newton and a host of prominent boxers were on hand to hear Leonard make his announcement from the same ring where he launched his professional career in 1977.

VIP's paid $100 for cocktails and ringside seats, with the general public charged $1 and $2 for seats in the Civic Center. Proceeds benefitted Baltimore's summer jobs program for youth.

At the conclusion of the hoopla, Leonard faced questions from the fans and members of the media.

He had played the event to the hilt the way one of the invited guests, former heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali, used to do during his equally orchestrated career.

In August, Leonard said he could, indeed, walk away from a sport that has earned him some $35 million in purses and millions more from other sources.

The Sting tastes victory

By JIM SAMIA
Collegian Correspondent

The Sting took the intramural co-rec soccer title and capped off an undefeated season by beating the Whips 2-0 yesterday.

The Sting got the only goal it would need in the first half on a nice shot by Jadene Yok. The winners added an insurance goal in the second half as Nick Michael put the game on ice for the Sting.

The Sting finished the regular season with a 5-0 record and easily swept through the previous three playoff games. The Whips finished the season at 4-1, their only loss coming at the hands of the Sting.

In the intramural women's football final Monday Sandy Fletcher hooked up with Mary Ann Lombardi on a 52 yard touchdown pass for the only points of the Wimps 7-0 victory over the Pretenders.

Despite three interceptions for the Pretenders they were unable to stop the one big play that won the game for the Wimps. The Wimps blocked a field goal attempt by the Pretenders to preserve their shutout.

In the intramural cross country finals, Phi Mu Delta won the team championship. Leading the way for Phi Mu Delta was Bob Ross who won the men's undergraduate title. Eileen Fury won the women's event and Jeff Teeters was the graduate men's champion.

Spikers must sweep to .500

The University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team faces a situation where they must take their remaining regular season matches to finish up with a .500 record on the year. Tonight, they have a chance to even their record at 24-24 as they travel to Springfield to play Springfield College and Northeastern.

"Springfield has a very solid team," said head coach Elaine Sorino. "We will have to play well, block and dig for the ball."

Sortino is planning on shaking up the line-up for the match. Players are going to be switching positions. UMass is fortunate to have enough depth to be able to institute such a move.

The Minutewomen, who have won eight of their last eleven, are ranked fifth in New England (division II) while Springfield is ranked third.

UMass is coming off of a disappointing finish in the Massachusetts state tournament this past weekend and Sortino hopes that the Minutewomen can get back into the swing of things tonight.

The Intramuralist

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

I can remember watching Len Berman on channel four in Boston before he headed for big time sportscasterland. My favorite thing to watch Len do was the sports fantasy.

For non-Boston people, sports fantasy was a contest where Mr. or Mrs. America had a chance to live out their sports fantasy.

I always wondered what I would do if I was allowed to live out a sports fantasy of my own. Maybe I'd play one-on-one with Dave Cowens since he was my boyhood idol (yes, Cowens is THAT old.) Playing catch with Carlton Fisk wouldn't be too shaby either. I thought about it for a while and then I stopped watching channel four's news and forgot about it.

Several years passed and I entered college, the University of Massachusetts to be exact. I still wasn't thinking about Len Berman but, all of a sudden, I had a sports fantasy that I just had to work out.

It wasn't anything that was too out of the ordinary. It seemed as if I could do it if I tried and so I decided that I would not graduate until my picture rested on the venerable halls of Boyden Gymnasium as some sort of campus intramural champion.

It was at this point in my life that I became The Intramuralist.

The Intramuralist would play anything. He was willing to give up an hour of study time on the night before an exam to play in his co-rec volleyball team, he just had to get his picture on that wall.

Swimming, football, tennis, track, soccer and basketball, he tried them all but to no avail. His teams just never seemed to make it.

Semesters passed and The Intramuralist was still without a championship. All of a sudden it was time to graduate and the goal hadn't been met. Whatever was he to do?

The Intramuralist didn't graduate on time. He stayed on and persevered. Ultimate frisbee and bowling came next. But, still no championship.

Then it happened; Monday The Intramuralist, disguised as an out of shape sportswriter, slipped into the picture for the intramural cross country title on the feet of five faster teammates and a horde of buddies. He had made it. His smiling face will rest on the wall outside the intramural office door for one year alongside the faces of other fellow intramuralists who also have tasted the sweet nectar of an intramural championship at UMass.

And now, I have returned to my normal self and I realize that it was nice and I had fun but, I'd better get a job soon because I can't stay here forever. They won't let me.

But, I am getting a copy of that picture.

Editors note: Jim Floyd is the second from the left in the back row and there's no need to give him a hand. He already has one.

Super 'D' key to women's success

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Call them the No-Name defense.

They don't have a nickname, but they should. They are the Universtiy of Massachusetts women's soccer team and they have one of the best defensive units in the country.

And it is this defense that could catapult them to a national championship, against some of the best defensive teams in the nation.

It has been the Massachusetts defense that has carried this team this year. They have given up only seven goals this season and only one goal at home, during the recent playoff win over the University of Rochester.

"The defense has been very important to us," said head coach Kalekeni Banda. "Without good defense, we couldn't play with the fast tempo that we use."

While many parts of the UMass women's soccer team have been freshman dominated, the defense was designed with experience in mind. Senior co-captains Jackie Gaw and Debbie Pickett, sophomore Lori Stukes and freshamn Beth Semonik anchor the Minutewomen defense.

Junior Deanna Denault and sophomore Deirdre Barrett are also available to come off the bench and they are added security.

The Minutewomen won every game this year during the regular season by shutout and hold a 13 game unscored upon streak at home, dating back to 1981. Part of the success this year has been the improvement of the fullbacks on the defensive line.

Last year, the defense was a bit slow, so to compensate for speedier front lines that UMass would face, Banda made some changes. He moved Jackie Gaw up from sweeper back to stopper. And it has worked to perfection.

"She has responded unbelievably well (at stopper back)," said Banda. To add more speed, Debbie Pickett was moved from her halfback position to fullback. Pickett has good speed and frequently carries the ball all the way up to the front. The senior from Hadley has five assists on the year, which tops among fullbacks.

On the other side is Lori Stukes, a sophomore, but one of the more dominating players on the field.

"Lori is a very mature player. She learned very fast as a freshman," said Gaw.

In the back is freshman Beth Semonik at the sweeper position.

"Beth does a very good job and she handles the pressure well," commented Banda. It's hard to make a mistake behind Gaw, just for the simple reason that not much gets by her.

"They are very fast," said top ranked UConn (in the nation) head coach Len Tsantiris. "UMass clears the ball very well and they don't have many weaknesses."

But the defensive line doesn't end with the fullbacks. The forward line plays good defense and that is a big reason why UMass has been so successful. The forwards keep constant pressure on the other defenders and if UMass is always on offense, then the other team can't be.

"The forwards are doing their job and playing good defense up front. They steal the ball, pressure and turn and put it. They make the defense's job a lot easier," said Banda.

"They are a very skilled team," said University of Rochester coach Terry Gurnett. "They beat us to the ball."

Against Central Florida, on Sunday, it will be a match up of two of the nation's top defensive teams. Central has only given up two goals, one to Cortland State and one to Missouri-St. Louis.

"We match up pretty well," said Banda, and for the defense to stop the Floridians, "we will have to be extra quick."

And if UMass topples Central, then it is a semi-final date, most-likely, with UConn who has given up only three goals.

So, it will be the "No-Name UMass defense against the country's top defensive teams for the national championship. As it was once said, your best offense is a good defense.

Wendy Ward will play a key role on this years Minutewomen basketball team.

Women's basketball: only a few veterans

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the Final installment of a two part preview of UMass women's basketball.

With eight rookies on this year's University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, a great deal of leadership and responsibility will fall upon the shoulders of the four returning veterans. It will be important for the veterans to help smooth out the Minutewomen's game in the early goings of the season.

Marlene Susienka, who won three golf tournaments this fall on the golf team, is the only senior on the squad. Junior Wendy Ward and two sophomores, Patty Maguire and Jennifer Todd, are the other veterans beside Susienka.

"We are just going to take each game as it comes," said head coach Mary Ann Odzarski. "It will be hard to say now how we'll do because of all the freshmen, but we're going to go out and do the best job that we can."

Susienka and Ward are the returning guards for Odzarski's hoopsters. Ward, a junior, will handle the point guard position this winter for the Minutewomen. Ward led the team in assists last year with 51 and averaged 7.2 points a game for a 181 total. The Brooklyn native is one of the quickest members on the team and that is one of the reasons she was second on the team with steals last year with 36.

Susienka is also help as she was third on the team last year in assists, with 44. She scored a career high of 20 points against Temple last winter and started most of the year. Marlene scored the most points in her collegiate career last year, 125 for a 5.4 game average, and will be counted on to score again this year.

Maguire started to come along at the end of last year and even started a few games. She showed improvement in rebounding that UMass hopes to put to good use.

Todd, while being hurt towards the end of last year, is expected to help the rebounding game and transition game. Both Todd and Maguire are fowards.

Odzarski hopes to have most of the wrinkles ironed out before UMass' opener against Siena on November 21. The coach has four goals that she hopes the squad will achieve.

"We have to rebound and control the boards, play good defense, work on our transition game and have some team play," said Odzarski. "We want to score some layups and not readily give them up."

With the height of centers Kelly Collins (6'2), Nadia Chomentowski (6'0), Jerrie Bernier (5'10) and Maguire (5'10), UMass should improve their offensive and defensive rebounding.

"We don't want a losing season," said Odzarski. That will be a challenging job for the Minutewomen who have some heavyweights on the schedule.

UMass has teams such as Big East powers Boston College, UConn, Syracuse, Providence and St. Johns to play. UM also entertains Holy Cross, Harvard, Rhode Island and New Hampshire at home this season. UMass will also compete in the Atlantic Ten championships at Rutgers on March 4-6 with the winner getting an automatic bid to the NCAA tourney.

"We are looking forward to Siena and if we work on our rebounding, fast breaks and if we are patient on offense then we should do well," said Odzarski.

It will take a lot of work but this season should be an exciting one for the Minutewomen who are taking the same road as the men did last season. UM is rebuilding with freshmen. Add some veterans and there is an exciting recipe for the 1982-83 UMass Minutewomen.

Men's soccer team drops last game to Harvard

By BOB BROCK
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — The University of Massachusetts men's varsity soccer team finished their 1982 season on a disappointing note by losing to Harvard University yesterday, 3-2.

More disheartening than the loss, though was the fact that the Minutemen failed to achieve their pre-season goal of having a winning season. With yesterday's loss, the Minutemen closed out the year at 7-8-2.

After spotting the Crimson a 3-0 lead by the middle of the second period, UMass came back late in the second half to make matters interesting. Kevin Flynn, followed up on a nice play by Kyaran Khamati, and got UM on the board with about 15 miutes remaining in the game. Khamati made a nice move, dribbling through a few Harvard defenders and then let his shot go. The ball was then deflected over to Flynn who drove it home.

UMass came within one at the 81-minute mark when Mike Gibbons took a neat pass from Flynn and drove it by Harvard goalkeeper Phil Toogan. The remaining nine minutes of the match was totally dominated by the UM booters but they failed to get the equalizer.

Neither team dominated the entire contest because shots on goal were deadlocked between the two clubs and they left the field at halftime tied at 0-0.

UMass came out for the second half with Tim Searls replacing starting goalkeeper Jeff Smith. Smith was injured when he and a Harvard defender went up for the ball. They collided and Smith injured his ankle.

Barely one minute into the second half Harvard got on the board with a goal by Lance Ayrault. Steve Higginson picked up the assist.

Just 10 minutes later Ayrault struck again. He took a cross from Lane Kenworthy and put Harvard up 2-0. Throughout the second half Harvard took full advantage of UMass mistakes. The miscue that spelled defeat for the Minutemen came 68:09 into the match when Harvard's Leo Langillzo took advantage of a mishandled ball and scored to put the Crimson up 3-0.

Despite the disappointing loss to end the season, UMass head coach Jeff Gettler said his team all played well. The effort just fell short, according to Gettler.

Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev, whose death Wednesday from an apparent heart attack set off world-wide speculation as to his successor will be.

Brezhnev's funeral planned as speculation on successor begins

MOSCOW (AP) — The new Soviet leaders, faced with a transfer of Kremlin power following the death of President Leonid I. Brezhnev, named former KGB chief Yuri V. Andropov to head a committee planning a state funeral for the man who ruled the Soviet Union for 18 years.

They announced that Brezhnev would be buried Monday beside the Kremlin wall on Red Square and that a four-day period of national mourning would begin today.

The Communist Party and government, indicating Brezhnev's foreign policy would be continued, reiterated his policy to "ensure detente and disarmament" with the West, but warned it would deal a "crushing retaliatory strike" if threatened by attack.

Brezhnev, 75, died Wednesday of an apparent heart attack. The announcement was withheld for 26½ hours but when it was made, blacktrimmed flags quickly were raised around Moscow. Public reaction to Brezhnev's death was surprisingly subdued.

President Reagan, in a condolence letter, called Brezhnev "one of the world's most important figures for nearly two decades," and said he looked forward to working with the new Kremlin leadership "toward an improved relationship with the Soviet Union."

White House officials said it was highly unlikely Reagan would be at the funeral Monday, but that a high-level U.S. delegation would attend.

No one was immediately named to succeed Brezhnev as president, or to take over the more important post as chief of the Communist Party. But Western experts tend to believe the power vacuum will be filled in the short run by a collective leadership including Andropov, 68, and longtime Brezhnev aide Konstantin Chernenko, 71.

By naming Andropov to head the committee planning an elaborate funeral ceremony, the leadership immediately put Andropov forward as a leading candidate.

Some sources said Chernenko ultimately might take over, but that Moscow Communist Party boss Viktor V. Grishin could emerge as a compromise. Another man once considered in line for a leading post, Andrei Kirilenko, is said to be in poor health and to have retired from the Kremlin leadership.

The Soviet Central Committee, with more than 300 members, formally votes on a new party chief and the parliamentary leadership chooses the president.

But until the succession question is settled, Western analysts believe a collective leadership drawn from the 12-man Politburo will govern. Defense Minister Dimitri F. Ustinov, Premier Nikolai A. Tikhonov and Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko were expected to play key roles in the succession.

In the interim, the funeral committee chaired by Andropov decided Brezhnev will be buried on Red Square after lying in state for three days. Tass said the part Central Committeee had orderd four days of mourning beginning today, and the closing of all primary and secondary schools for the burial.

Possible Soviet policy changes seen by professors

By JOHN F. HUDSON
Collegian Staff

The sudden, though not unexpected, death of Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev will have long-term implications for Russian domestic and foreign policy according to two Five-College professors of Soviet politics and government.

Amherst College Russian studies Professor William Taubman said he felt there will be possibilities for change in the Soviet government.

"I would predict that the Russians may make one more friendly overture to President Reagan," Taubman said. "In the last few weeks, Brezhnev and others in the Soviet leadership had been concluding that they just couldn't deal with Reagan. Now with Brezhnev's death, the new leadership may send signals, privately or publicly, that they want to give Reagan one more try."

Professor Karl Ryavec of the University of Massachusetts political science department said, "As far as changing of Russia's policy toward the U.S. is concerned, after clarification by the Russian government of just who the ruling group of the U.S.S.R. will be, then they can begin to start thinking of changing certain things. More importantly though, we really shouldn't anticipate any policy changes until the question of power is resolved."

One of the inherent problems in the Soviet political system has been the lack of any formal or constitutional formula for the smooth transition of power after the death or ouster of any leader. One example of this is the events which transpired following the death of Josef Stalin in March, 1953. Nikita Khrushchev was not able to consolidate his power until 1957 when he defeated a group of pro-Stalinists in a vote within the Central Committee. This informality of sorts was seen again in 1964 with the forced retirement of Khrushchev. Although Brezhnev was named immediate successor, it is generally acknowledged that a collective leadership ruled the Soviet Union until Brezhnev outlined a comprehensive program of domestic and foreign policy at the 24th Party Congress in 1971.

Commenting on this unique fact of Soviet Politics, Ryavec pointed out that the events of the next few days may signal division within the ruling elite.

"If a new General Secretary is not chosen soon, it may indicate a disagreement within the Politburo, the chief policy body in the U.S.S.R. If a successor is named, it is questionable whether or not he will be able to hold onto it. It may turn out to be something like committee-rule, with one top-man sharing the limelight with two or three others."

The struggle for power at the top may also significantly affect Soviet policy in the future according to Professor Taubman.

"The problems that the U.S.S.R. is currently facing, Afghanistan and Poland, for example, must be focused by any new leadership," he said. "Yet when the battle for the leadership begins, you may see an increased tendency to consider breaking away from the continuity of the Brezhnev years.

At this point, they could go in two opposite directions. They could crack down at home, such as a crackdown on dissidents, toughen towards the U.S. in foreign policy actions. They could also turn around and provide more consumer goods at home and become more accomodating abroad in foreign relations."

Elimination of discrimination is slowed by 'anti-feminists'

By GAYLE McGILL
Collegian Correspondent

The Reagan administration and new right organizations are proposing changes which could result in the weakening of Title IX, an act which prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in any federally funded school or college.

One of the writers of the act, Holly Knox, spoke last night at Smith College about the effects the law has had in the past ten years and efforts which are being made today to block the changes.

"At the college level before Title IX, for every dollar being spent for men's sports, women's programs received two cents," Knox said.

The difference today, Knox said, is 16 cents going for women's programs to every one dollar for men's sports.

Knox also spoke of the discrimination in the admissions process prior to Title IX.

"Many colleges had quotas restricting the number of women accepted, women had to have a much higher academic record than the men applying even to be considered," she said.

Knox said that due to Title IX, colleges and universities have had to lift their restrictive admission policies.

"In the past ten years there has been a dramatic increase in the enrollment of women in graduate and professional schools. Law and medical schools have tripled the enrollment of women. The percentage of women in dental school has gone up ten times in ten years," Knox said.

These changes came about because women were organized, Knox said.

"None of these things changed by themselves. There have been women pushing to make those changes happen and protecting them from being eroded," she said.

Knox said since Title IX was passed there have been several attempts to weaken it. The latest attempt came from Sen. Orrin Hatch, chairman of the Senate Human Resources Committee.

Knox called the Reagan administration "anti-feminist".

"The Reagan administration is attacking women's rights by going after small programs explicitly written to support opportunities for women. We never realized how important these programs were until we saw the lengths the right wing would go to to try to kill them," Knox said.

Shuttle launches first private satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — From a space shuttle launch pad 184 miles above Earth, the exuberant crew of Columbia sent the first of two communications satellites spinning into orbit yesterday. With that, the era of commercial space flight was open for business.

It happened just eight hours after the shuttle cut through blue skies over the Atlantic and settled in for its fifth flight.

Mission specialist Joseph Lenoir started the satellite spinning, triggering a 90-minute countdown for SBS-C, the spacecraft belonging to Satellite Business Systems of McLean, Va.

"You got a lot of happy people down here, you guys do good work," radioed Mission Control.

The satellite, a 3¼-ton cylinder that will be used for video, data and voice communications, was spinning at 52 revolutions per minute when it was released to an orbit of its own.

A few minutes later, his colleague, Joseph Allen, radioed "We still have that beautiful satellite in sight. It's traveling just below us."

NASA was getting paid for the shuttle's task, but not very much.

The Veterans Day launch was the first ever of four men in one spacecraft. With NASA's customers paying attention, Columbia left exactly on time for its five-day journey.

"It was as near perfect as we could probably expect," said launch director Al O'Hara. "It couldn't get any better."

Flight director Tommy Holloway said the flight was going exceptionally well and that the crewmen were "in good spirits, enjoying themselves and doing a very excellent job."

"It was a fine ride, I can tell you," commander Vance Brand said of the ship's fifth liftoff in 19 months.

Reagan says U.S. to better relations following Brezhnev

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan assured the Soviet Union last night that he hopes for a better superpower relationship "in a dangerous time" following the death of President Leonid I. Brezhnev.

In a nationally broadcast news conference, Reagan declared "our goal is and will remain a search for peace."

The president said he intends to keep pushing for a treaty to reduce strategic nuclear weapons. But "We should not delude ourselves," he said. "Peace is a product of strength, not weakness."

Reagan indicated that Vice President George Bush probably would head the U.S delegation to Brezhnev's funeral. As for why he wouldn't do so himself, Reagan said "it was a plain case of looking at the schedule. It was felt it would be better for George to head that delegation."

Mixing an attitude of conciliation with one of resolve, the president told the emerging Soviet leadership that the United States faces the future with confidence. And, he said, "we as a free people must always be prepared for change so when it comes we are ready to meet new opportunities and challenges."

Asked whether he plans any new initiative to lessen tensions, the president sighed slightly and said "we have been trying to do that in the area of quiet diplomacy." But, he said, "it is going to require actions and not words."

Calling on the Soviet Union for peaceful moves, Reagan said with a smile: "It takes two to tango."

On the domestic front, Reagan acknowledged there is "under discussion" a Cabinet proposal to boost gasoline taxes by five cents per gallon in order to rebuild the nation's decaying bridges and highways and create jobs in the face of 10.4 percent unemployment. But no decision has been made, he said.

"We think we are on the right course," the president said of his economic program.

In an obvious reference to Democratic calls for a multibillion-dollar public works program, Reagan declared "We are doing those things that we think are proper. We are not going to go down the dead-end street that just leaves us set for another recession."

Massachusetts teachers protest lack of contract

BOSTON — Teachers in 59 of 430 school districts in Massachusetts are working without contracts, according to a teachers' union, and some have begun protesting.

Teachers in Brookline, Newton, Westwood, Old Rochester, Easthampton and Granby have begun to picket or, in some cases, to report just before school is scheduled to begin and leave immediately afterwards, according to the Massachusetts Teachers Association.

School officials blame the tardiness in agreeing on new pacts on budget cuts and cutbacks in federal aid to education.

Henry Greiner, a field representative for the Massachusetts Association of School Committees, said the number of districts without contracts is "pretty significant ... and higher than usual for this time of year."

"Money, of course, is always an issue, and so is job security — the latter, especially for the last four years or so," said Greiner, who also is on the Lee school board.

"I think this high number of ongoing negotiations also reflects the fact that school committees, with the loss of fiscal autonomy have to face political reality," he said. School committees lost fiscal autonomy in the wake of taxcutting Proposition 2½, passed in 1980.

"It's not that many don't want to give teachers raises. It's that town meetings and municipal bodies, last year, were making further cuts, and so, the bargaining is tougher now."

Carol Doherty, president of the association, which, along with the Massachusetts Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, represents most Bay State teachers, said some 3,000 teachers are expected to be laid off this year.

King sees Legislature passing death penalty

BOSTON — Gov. Edward J. King said yesterday he believes "the Legislature will be responding to the demands of the public" and enact a death penalty statute.

With time running out on his term in office, and the House and Senate far apart on specifics, King said that, "We will end up, I'm very confident, with a death penalty."

It's now a race against time for King and others who want state government to follow up on the election referendum in which voters approved the death penalty 3-to-2.

The referendum was for a constitutional amendment reversing state Supreme Court rulings that ban capital punishment in the state. But the Legislature and the governor must approve a statute before Massachusetts can join the 37 other states with the penalty.

Poll shows blacks oppose death penalty by 3-1

WASHINGTON — During debate in the Massachusetts Senate over the death penalty, opponents argued that blacks and the poor would be the ones strapped into the electric chair.

According to an AP-NBC poll, 75 percent of blacks surveyed in Massachusetts were against the death penalty.

The proposal to reinstate the death penalty in Massachusetts was approved by Massachusetts voters by a margin of almost 3-2 in a Nov. 2 referendum.

But of the voters who were interviewed in the AP-NBC poll as they left polling places across Massachusetts on Election Day, 55 percent of the whites and only 15 percent of the blacks said they voted to restore the death penalty.

Senate approves appointment to vice chancellor search

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate Wednesday night voted to approve Linda Garofalo as the student representative to the search committee for vice chancellor for University Relations and Development.

Garofalo was recommended to the senate by Student Government Association (SGA) President Jim Murphy and will fill the position vacated by Ken Moore, who graduated in June. Moore will remain on the committee, however, as a non-student.

The committee, which has been functioning since last semester, has already completed paper screenings and a first round of interviews, and expects to hire a candidate by the end of the semester.

Garofalo, 19, a sophomore psychology major from Wayne, N.J. was a senator last year, but is not involved in the SGA this semester.

"Rather than appoint a typical SGA person," Murphy said he sought to involve other students, and expressed confidence Garofalo would be able to acclimate to the committee in time to be productive.

In other business, the senate voted to fund the salary of the Off-Campus Housing director, Joan Levinson, through next June. Extending the contract for Levinson, which would have expired in December, was opposed by some senators who argued the position should instead be filled by a student. However, the extension passed by voice vote. Senators agreed a student should be hired for the job next semester and that Levinson should be retained to assist in orientating her successor.

The senate also voted to confirm results of committee chair elections held the previous week.

However, the Finance Committee's results, in which Mimi Turchinetz defeated incumbent Siobhan Powers, was rejected by the senate, 25-24. Powers claimed the election should be invalidated because members were incorrectly informed that they must have served on the committee at least one semester to be eligible to run.

Group for older undergraduates is geared to peer support

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

Although only a handful of people attended the first older students meeting in the Campus Center Wednesday, a new student organization at the University of Massachusetts was born that promises to add many more members in the future to perform a needed service to the UMass community.

A new Reorganized Student Organization called the Twenty-Five Plus Club has been established at UMass for the purpose of serving as a social and emotional support group for any undergraduate who will be at least 25 years old at the time of their graduation.

The main driving force behind the group is 47-year-old Georgette Roberts, a freshman botany major from Vermont, who said the new group will be an informal social organization for older student to get to know each other and to hopefully "avoid some of the pitfalls" older people face when entering a large university predominated by younger people.

"There is a real need for an organization where older students can relate and identify with one another," Roberts said. "Up until now there has been no older student group that has displayed specific needs that need attending."

One older student who attended the introductory meeting said he knew very few undergraduates of any age and, because of this, felt somewhat "isolated." Roberts said this is a common problem that student over twenty-five face.

"Older students are widely spread among the kids and nobody knows who they are. Everyone thinks they are a professor and no one would ever imagine them to be a freshman undergraduate," she said.

Currently there are 1,400 undergraduates over the age of 25 at UMass and they constitute about 7.3 percent to the total University undergraduate population. The majority of these students are between the ages of 25-30, while those over 30 years of age make up 1.8 percent of the population.

Roberts said she wishes to draw as many people out of this population as possible, whether they be single, married or divorced.

"There will no lines drawn. This is just a contact organization for people to get to know each other and hopefully place a name to a face when they see them on campus," she said.

The club will be holding weekly meetings and trying to gather more members by making posters, having a wine and cheese party in early December, and possibly having "Country and Western night" in the future, Roberts said.

"A group such as this will help us identify the needs of older students and their resolutions. There is a need for activities which provide opportunities to meet other students with common interests," she said.

Roberts said she has received considerable amount of support from the Dean of Students office and the Older Students Services Network (OSSN), who have both acknowledged there is a common concern among many people to improve life on campus for older students.

Pearl Moser, who is working on the project out of the Dean of Students office, said the Dean has recognized that there are older students on Campus who have needs that require addressing. The OSSN has also been working very hard on the issue, trying to get more older student involvement and further address students' needs, Moser said.

There has been a recent decline in student registration across the country, Roberts said, but behind it all, there has been an increase in older student registration, which is why a group like this is so important.

"Towards the end, they are a valuable resource," she said. "If the schoool loses one older student because he is lonely, then they have lost the income for that student."

UM research into alternative energy sources perseveres

Professors see a future for wind, solar power

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Research is ongoing in the field of alternative energy sources at the University of Massachusetts.

Windpower, solar energy and uses for coal are currently undergoing investigation in studies conducted by professors in the UMass School of Engineering. The studies are funded by the United States Department of Energy and various utility companies.

"We are now in a position to look seriously (to alternative energy sources for power)," said Professor Frank Kaminsky of the industrial engineering department, who is currently involved in wind power research.

"Ten years ago people laughed at us — now they're not," he said.

The professors agreed the energy sources they are researching are viable alternatives to fuel and nuclear power for the future. While implementation of the systems may be a while off due to cost-efficiency, the professors stressed the need for public support in their research.

"There's no support (for this kind of power) right now," said Jon G. McGowan of the mechanical engineering department. "It may take a '73 or '78 oil crunch to get people awake."

Even though oil prices remain low, conditions in the fuel market are a lot worse than people realize, McGowan said. "Even GM (General Motors) is admitting it now."

Solar power is one system which would be cheaper than our current system, McGowan said. He is currently performing an evaluation of the solar heating concept on a Vermont slab house which entails monitoring heat temperature and energy flows. The house is representative of houses in this area and thus similar dwellings could be constructed in Massachusetts, McGowan said. If the experiment is successful in Vermont, it would work here, he said, as that state has a more demanding heating season.

Wind power, in most cases an energy source for the future because of its cost, will be used in a New Bedford sewage treatment plant following a wind analysis of the city McGowan recently completed. While studies of wind power in Western Massachusetts have not proved cost efficient, McGowan plans to begin research at Holyoke Community College in the near future.

The forces of weather are translated into energy by a wind mill and solar panels at the experimental home on Orchard Hill.

A complete data base for future consideration of wind farms in Western Massachusetts and Connecticut will be available upon the completion of two years of research in January by Kaminsky and Professor Robert Kirchhoff of the mechanical engineering department. Since Northeast Utilities, the sponsor of the research, does not plan to pursue the project immediately, the data may be of interest to private investors who can construct the farms and sell the power to utilities.

About $12 million has been invested in this way in California, where greater tax incentives are given, Kaminsky said.

As for coal, "we haven't come up with an environmentally safe manner (in which to burn it)," said Professor Thomas Blake of the mechanical engineering department. His research centers mainly on ways to make that element more cost-efficient, he said.

Recent decreases in governmental support seen as a hindrance

By ANNE McCORY
Collegian Staff

A lack of governmental priority has hampered research at the University of Massachusetts examining the prospect of using wind power and other forms of energy according to a UMass mechanical engineering professor.

"No one has come close to doing what I feel has to be done," said William Heronemus, founder in 1969 of the Wind Energy Program at UMass.

The large scale research necessary to fully develop alternative energy sources "cannot be financed by private investment," Heronemus said. Funds amounting to one-third to one-half of the current defense budget would be needed to finance the studies, he said. But that proposal would be "absurd" and unacceptable to the American people, he said.

He attributed the problems in energy studies to administration of the governmental agencies controlling research grants. UMass originally began its studies under the guidance of the National Science Foundation. In 1974, the Energy Research and Development Association (ERDA) took over the role. The United States Department of Energy replaced that agency in 1976 under the Carter administration and has been "disinclined to do anything of an educational nature," Heronemus said.

Although the Department of Energy is currently sponsoring several studies on wind and solar power at UMass, Heronemus said the grants available now are much less than what they used to be. He has received no governmental support for his work in the last four years, he said.

Governmental funding goes instead to financing research such as fusion heat, which involves a concept similar to that used in the hydrogen bomb, Heronemus said. This method creates "intense radioactive fields which must be shielded" and could lead to "a gradual increase in earth's temperature," Heronemus said. Fusion heat would create "horrendous possibilities for ecological change," he added.

Group helps incarcerated mothers face special hardships in prison

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

The difficulties of being a mother in prison and the services to those women provided by Aid to Incarcerated Mother (AIM), a self-help organization which helps unite women in prison with their families, were portrayed this week in a videotape entitled "Help Me to Fight."

AIM has worked to unite mothers in Framingham prison with their children since 1980 and "is doing things the mothers cannot do for themselves because they are confined," said a woman in the video.

The videotape was shown in conjunction with "Mothers in Prison," a presentation given by AIM members Molly Baldwin and Debbie Wald.

"Women go to prison primarily because they are poor," Wald said. She added most women are incarcerated for prostitution, shoplifting, writing bad checks and drug addiction.

Most of the women in prison are poor or third world women, "they are sent to prison for economic reasons," she said.

"When you look at women in prison you get a view of the worst society has imposed upon women," Wald said.

She said in prisons there has been a question over whether women need rehabilitation. Men in prison are given job training, but the model for women is more based upon training them for domestic services or socializing them to be nicer, more gentle people.

Wald said prisons were first created by the Quakers as a means of reforming the criminal. She said the Quaker idea of benevolent reform was not applied to women. Women were divided into good and bad women, the ones who committed crimes, were considered fallen and beyond reform.

Wald stated that to look at women in prison one must look at the sexual nature of the women involved.

"A large number of the women were involved in sexual abuse or were abused as children," Baldwin said.

Baldwin said young women and prostitutes suffer the most from the sexual labels placed on offenders. She said many incarcerated women started as juvenile offenders, when they are labeled as "promiscuous" and "incorrigible."

At any given time up to 80 percent of the women awaiting trial are doing time for prostitution, Baldwin said.

Newman Club begins holiday donation drive

The Newman Club Community Action Program is accepting food and donations to provide a more bounteous Thanksgiving for needy families in the Pioneer Valley community.

Last year, the club put Thanksgiving dinners on the tables of 40 families that otherwise might not have been able to enjoy the holiday.

"It gives you a chance to give thanks by giving to others," said Mary Szetela, a club member. "It is a time for giving thanks."

"One woman wrote back to us and said 'hey if it wasn't for you, we might not have had a Thanksgiving dinner'," Szetela said. "That is enough to make you at least buy a can of green beans at the store and bring it to the church."

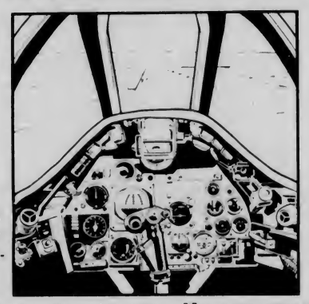
The Newman Center at the University of Massausetts is a center for various Catholic activities. The Thanksgiving food drive is sponsored by the Newman Club Community Action Program at the Newman Center.

"It (the food drive) invites all members of the Community — it encompasses the entire community — to share some of the blessings that they have, with those who are less fortunate," Szetela said.

Gifts of food may be placed in available baskets under a food drive display window at the Newman Center until the weekend of Nov. 19. On Nov. 20 and 21, donations may be made as part of the offertory at all Masses at the Center.

"This year's drive has a new twist," Szetela said. She explained that Louis' Foods on North Pleasant St. in Amherst is offering a reimbursement for donators to the food drive. The store is offering a five percent discount to people who purchase $30 or more in merchandise at the store and have a receipt showing a donation to the Newman Thanksgiving food drive.

This Desk Can Reach Mach 2.



Some desk jobs are more exciting than others.

As a Navy pilot or flight officer, your desk can be a sophisticated combination of supersonic jet aircraft and advanced electronic equipment. But you can handle it. Because Navy flight training gives you the navigation, aerodynamics and other technical know-how you need.

In return, Navy aviation demands something of you as an officer: Leadership.

Your path to leadership starts with officer training that's among the most demanding in the military. It's intensive leadership and professional schooling combined with rigorous Navy flight training. And it's all geared to prepare you and other college graduates for the unique challenge of Navy aviation. The program is tough but rewarding.

One important reward for Navy officers is decision-making authority. In the air, and on the ground, you have management responsibility from the beginning. And your responsibility grows as you gain experience. No company can give you this kind of leadership responsibility this fast. And nothing beats the sheer excitement of Navy flying.

The salary is exciting, too. Right away, you'll earn about $18,000 a year. That's better than the average corporation will pay you just out of college. And with regular Navy promotions and other pay increases, your annual salary will soar to $30,400 after four years. That's on top of a full package of benefits and privileges.

Before you settle down to an earth-bound desk job, reach for the sky. Reach for the coupon. Find out what it takes to be part of the Naval Aviation Team. You could have a desk that flies at twice the speed of sound.

University glass recycling project unaffected by new state bottle law

By JEFF POTTER
Collegian Correspondent

The passage of the Massachusetts bottle law will have little or no effect on the recycling project at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, said Julie Rypysc, education and outreach coordinator for the project.

The project, located in the Student Union, recycles mainly discarded computer and white office paper used by offices in Whitmore Administration Building and other buildings on campus. A large percentage of what they recycle is not bottles and cans, she said.

The bottle law "may take away our volume of glass," but with UMass being a big beer-drinking school, there may not be that drastic of a difference in the cans and bottles collected, Rypysc said.

"In terms of revenue, we get more from paper than we do from glass," she said.

The market demand for used paper and other materials for recycling is low because of a lack of interest and the economy, Lisa Vatske, secretary/treasurer for the project, said.

"Most people aren't interested in recyling," she said. With an unstable economy, the recycling project is not getting good prices for the materials, Vatske said.

The recycling project receives about four cents a pound for used white and computer paper and only $20 a ton for crushed glass, she said. The project receives even less for newspapers, which seems to be what people collect most, Vatske said.

The project picks up materials from areas on campus but does not collect from the dorms and dining commons, she said.

Vatske said the recycling project workers would like to pick up materials from other places on an off campus, but they do not have the funds or the staffing to do so. Also, the trucks used for collecting are not allowed off campus.

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) works with the project and picks up materials from the dorms, Vatske said. MassPIRG gives one credit to students who organize and collect cans, bottles, and newspapers for recycyling in the dorms, she said.

"What we really need is a shredder," Vatske said. Then we could collect the paper that otherwise would be considered confidential, she said. Whitmore and other building on campus will not allow the recycling project to take materials that could be confidential, she noted.

With a shredder, the project could shred the materials and then recycle them, Vatske said. The project could recycle cardboard and other goods from the dining commons and dorms she said.

A shredder would also cut the universities costs and create revenue for the project, she said.

UMass organization seeks to offer peer counseling and encouragement to students suffering from dyslexia

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Those students on campus who suffer from dyslexia, a perceptual defect of the brain that prohibits those affected from correctly reading letters and numbers, can find help and encouragement at the Dyslexic Student Organization (DSO).

The group is made up of dyslexic students who aid and counsel other students who suffer from dyslexia.

Approximately eight percent of the population of the United States suffers from dyslexia. At the University of Massachusetts, almost seven percent of the student population are dyslexic, said David Sprogis, a second-semester freshman who is president of the DSO.

"Dyslexia is not a disease. Rather, you are born with it. A dyslexic's brain has two things special with it. One is that the dendrites, or brain cells, that do the thinking (in the brain) have a lot more connections than in an average person's brain," he said.

Another difference between a dyslexic's brain and the average person's brain is that the part of the brain known as the corpus callosum is supposed to have a dominant side in it, Sprogis explained. This is not the case with a dyslexic's brain, he said.

There is no known cause of dyslexia. All doctors do know is that dyslexia is hereditary, he said.

"Four times as many men are dyslexic than are women," Sprogis said.

The DSO is made up of 40 students. Sprogis said the reason for the small number of students in the group is because many dyslexics are "just surviving in college and they don't want the hassle of being in the group. Many (dyslexics) think because they have made it to college there is no reason to complicate things."

Time is essential to dyslexics. Because they take a great deal longer with exams, they need the help and cooperation of their professors.

"Most professors and TA's on campus are aware of the problems facing dyslexics. They are usually very supportive and helpful to the students," he said. "Most professors realize that dyslexic students are not asking for anything outstanding. All they need is to have the exam read orally rather than reading it themselves."

One myth associated with dyslexics is that they are not as intelligent as the average person. Sprogis said that many dyslexics have higher IQ's than other people.

"Having dyslexia is like being a puppy. Your paws are too big for you, so you just stumble over them," he said.

Although the DSO does not have tutoring centers now, Sprogis said, he expects them to soon be available to students.

The next meeting of the DSO is Monday night at 7 in Bartlett Hall, Room 68. All students, whether they are dyslexic or not, are encouraged to attend and join the group.

Brains of frogs being probed as key to help UMass professor understand, treat human neurological disorders

By BECKY THATCHER
Collegian Correspondent

Frogs are helping to unravel the circuitry of the best computer ever made, the human brain.

Brain function and visual behavior in frogs is being studied by University of Massachusetts professor Katherine V. Fite, who is hoping to develop a model that will be useful in understanding the visual system of more developed vertebrates. Her work in this area may eventually help in the diagnosis and treatment of neurological disorders in humans, she said.

Fite teaches Psychology as a Natural Science, and The Visual Brain, Perspectives in Visual Neurosciences at UMass. The Amphibian Visual System, A Multidisciplinary Approach is one of many publications Fite has written explaining her discoveries. Fite said she found seven different areas which directly receive information from the eye.

"The idea proposed to explain this multiple representation is that redundancy enables the brain to continue to carry on important functions in the event of injury of disease," she said.

In collaboration with researchers Neil Montgomery, Micheline Taylor and Lynn Bengtsom, Fite completed a study on Optokinetic Nystagmus (OKN).

"OKN", Fite said, "is a fundamental kind of visual behavior — a visual reflex which keeps the image from slipping on the retina as the object moves through the visual field. This reflex is important because without it, the visual image would be constantly blurred."

The OKN reflex is characterized by the way humans visually track scenery past a train window, she said.

"The frog is a relatively simple animal," Fite said, "that shows this visual reflex in a very well developed manner. The OKN response is present in that animal in the same way that it is present in more complex species."

Knowledge of this response can help in the diagnosis of brain dysfunction, she explained.

"Patients who have abnormalities in the OKN reflex probably have damage in the lower brain," she said.

So little is known about connections between brain function and visual behavior, Fite said, the amphibian visual system may provide just the model needed to understand how that behavior originates, and ultimately, to understand why things go wrong.

Debate to be held at UMass

The Annual High School Debate Tournament will be held on Saturday and Sunday in Bartlett and Herter Halls. About 400 high school debaters from all over the Northeast will participate.

"Whether the United States should significantly Curtain Arms Sales to Other Countries?" will be the question debated at the tournament. After a general meeting at 10:45 a.m. on Saturday novice and varsity level debates will be held for the rest of the day.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey will be the guest speaker at the tournament breakfast in the Student Union Ballroom and will present the award to the high school debate coach of the year.

Elimination rounds of debates will be held rom 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday. The award ceremony will be held at 5:15 p.m. in Bartlett Hall and the final round of debates for novice and varsity teams will be at 6 p.m.

Asian month to be held

November has been designated Asian awareness month and to commemorate the occasion, the Five-College community will be conducting several concerts and presentations.

Noted musician Fred Houn will perform at 9:30 tonight in the Davis Student Center Ballroom at Smith College. Saturday's program includes a keynote address by festival organizer Elanor Wong at 9:30 a.m. at Wright Hall, followed by other speakers. "Commitment" will give a concert at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at Chapen Hall Mount Holyoke College.

The festivities will wrap up Sunday with a film at 11:30 a.m. on the 8th floor at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center followed by the "Dragon Thunder Arts Forum" at 2:30 p.m. at Hampshire College.

Gift drive needs donations

SPINAL SCREENING
AT THE
Amherst Chiropractic Center
November 1 - November 15

1. Head tilt
2. High shoulder
3. Low scapula
4. Spinal curvature
5. Low hip

Potential Danger signals of Irritated Nerves:
- Headaches, dizziness, blurred vision
- Neck pain, tight muscles, spasms
- Shoulder pain, pain down arms, numbness in hands
- Pain between shoulders, difficult breathing, abdominal pains
- Lower back pain, hip pain, pain down leg

Amherst Chiropractic Center is offering spinal check-ups and postural analysis for early detection of back problems.

TIME magazine says 75 million Americans have backache, and with each passing year, this astronomical fugure grows by 7,000,000.

Backache has become a catastrophic issue with the insurance companies and with our national economy. It is one of the top claims for disability. In addition to this, arthritis and rheumatic complaints affect 77 percent of our adult population, and every year millions sustain severe neck injuries from automobile collisions.

With the use of a few simple painless tests we will be able to determine the condition of the spine. Early detection of back problems is the best prevention for future back ailments.

The spinal screening will be offered without charge or obligation, at the

Amherst Chiropractic Center
190 University Dr., Amherst, MA

Doctors will be available for answering questions on treatment and prevention of back problems.

Please call 256-6700 for an appointment and bring a copy of this announcement with you.

★Brezhnev—

Any leader that emerges as the successor to Brezhnev will obviously have some effect on the future of the Soviet Union and also on the state of current U.S. — U.S.S.R. relations. Three candidates are generally agreed upon as the most likely successors. Yet all three have shortcomings which in the end could seriously handicap their ability to effectively emerge as the sole leader of the U.S.S.R.

Konstantine Chernenko is thought by many to be the obvious successor to Brezhnev. Yet Chernenko's close ties to Brezhnev since his promotion to full Politburo status in 1978 and his advanced age (71) seriously hurt his chances.

Another candidate, Yuri Andropov, may be hurt by his distinct ties to the secret police. Andropov is the former chief of the KGB, the notorious security arm of the Soviet government.

The third candidate prevalently mentioned is Victor Grishin, a member of the Politburo since 1967. Grishin may have problems in that he enjoys a relatively small power base as the Party First Secretary for the city of Moscow.

Tauban said he felt two scenarios presented themselves in the wake of Brezhnev's death.

"Andropov, Cherneko, and Grishin could all be given the three highest posts in the Party for the time being as a temporary measure, with a power struggle taking place later," Taubman said. "Also, since the leadership has had all this time to prepare for the death of Brezhnev, one leading figure may have already emerged. If I had to bet, I think Chernenko or Andropov will emerge as the leader."

The legacy which Brezhnev leaves behind stands second only to Stalin in the annals of Soviet history since the revolution in 1917. In the West, many see the dawn of detente in the early 1970s as the Soviet leader's greatest accomplishment during his 18 year tenure.

"He wanted peace," Ryavec said, "but couldn't restrain those who advocated the production of new weapons system within the party. After visiting the U.S.S.R. just last June, I can truly say he gave the Soviet people some peace from the hard life they have been forced to live for so long."

★recycling—

cardboard and other goods from the dining commons and dorms she said.

A shredder would also cut the universities costs and create revenue for the project, she said.

"The University generates thousands of tons of paper a year," Charlie Hopkins, administrator to the recycling project, said. With a shredder, UMass could recycle and cut the cost of its paper use, he said.

UMass contributes 60 percent of the waste in the Amherst landfill. The town is currently building a new facilty to meet the needs of the town and university, Hopkins said.

The town wants to start charging those who dump there. This could cost the University a great deal of money, he said.

The administration, which is exploring ways to reduce cost of waste disposal, has shown interest in the recycling project and may help the project recycle more of the university's used materials, Hopkins said.

Project workers hope someday to have a redemption center for students to drop off their bottles, cans and other materials for recycling. But, the group says the idea is still in the "dream stages."

The group supports the bottle law and despite the fact it may decrease their volume of collected glass, they hope it is successful.

Vatske said if the state and students took more interest in recycling, the project would be more successful.

The recycling project must be a cooperative effort, she said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

LAST COUNT IN COOK COUNTY

Another casualty in the battle of the bulge

Figuratively speaking, I need to lose weight. My skirts are snug and my jeans do not permit enough oxygenated blood to reach my extremities. I have to buy some bigger clothes or risk gangrene. Armed with my charge card, I enter the field of battle.

Nothing on the single digit racks will ever grace my frame. The 7's and 9's goad me as I creep past them to double digit terrain.

"Straight skirts add height."

"Avoid horizontal stripes, chubbo."

"Dark colors are slenderizing."

My mission is to discover the perfect optical illusion that can double as an outfit that looks smart with pumps.

The next foray is into "Better Sportswear." Each outfit is cleverly camouflaged to blend in with the next. The trick is to select your mauve alligator shirt from among the 317 other clones on the rack. Since mauve is a forbidden color (stick to gray, navy or black), I retreat. No prisoners were taken.

As I prepare to exit the field, I am snared by a half price clearance sale in "Designers." Alas, grown up clothes at juvenile prices. Charcoal suits with straight skirts and small collars, navy shirtwaists with sensible buttons. So what if I have to chop off the bottom half of the skirt? I'm only paying half price anyway. Besides, I can always do a reverse Scarlett O'Hara and make drapes out of my clothes.

I tote a suit into the dressing room. The sign reads: "These premises are monitored by female security personnel." Where? Is the mirror two-way? Does that pair of thick ankles in the next dressing stall belong to the store's KGB? I have an eerie feeling that the enemy is near. Some spy knows that my charcoal pin-striped straight-skirted suit is covering a multitude of sins. I scavenge for common pins in the carpet and am finally able to hoist the skirt to an acceptable length (or short as the case may be). Move a button here, tack a cuff there, and voila — the perfect trompe l'oeil.

I dodge the rack of filmy pastels with spaghetti straps and side slits as I head to the register to exchange plastic for the wool-cotton blend. Fatigued, I seek refuge in a nearby restaurant, wher I munch myself in salad and Tab and try to get rid of the numbness in my toes.

Suzanne Gesin is a graduate student in Public Administration serving an internship on Cape Cod. She just clears five feet.

Suzanne Gesin

In the "Juniors" section I am assaulted by row upon row of prairie skirts and frilly blouses that would be flattering if I suddenly shot up ten inches or developed a penchant for square dancing. Given the unlikelihood of a latent growth spurt or a revival of "Petticoat Junction," I abandon "Juniors" for a territory that sounds more promising. "Petites" (euphemism for "Dumpy"). Here I find prairie skirts and frilly blouses that have been pared down to fit people 5'2" and under. Squashed little suits and dresses line the racks which are low to the ground in deference to the clientele. I've always thought they should install "fun house" mirrors just to give the customers a chance to see themselves in dresses that are longer than they are wide. The selection ranges from junvenile to dowdy, insulting short shoppers who are neither developmentally arrested nor possessors of hopelessly poor taste.

Traffic safety at UMass

There was little evidence of the collision. A few black skid marks. A small stream of coke that slowly spread across the linoleum. The people involved were terse. Few words of apology were mumbled as all parties concerned went on their way.

Another accident between drivers heading home after a night of revelry at a local club? The ending of an old classic at Amherst Cinema? No way. This scenario happens countless times a day as students crash into each other all over campus. Research I have been doing on these accidents and their prevention has lead me to come up with the following proposals:

That a standard lane system be established on all walkways on campus. This lane system would be identical to those already in use on most roadways. Dotted yellow lines, solid yellow lines: the whole gamut of traffic-controlling paraphernalia. Students heading North will have to stay to the right. Those heading South will bear left. Travels to the South and West to only alternate odd numbered Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Mary Beth Hebert

That a system of fast and slow lanes be part of the new sidewalk system. Again, just as in a regular road situation, those who travel at slower rates of speed will be asked to stay to the right while those in a rush should keep to the left. This section of my proposal will be instrumental in keeping to a minimum those back smash-ups that so often occur. No longer will you plow into the heels of those people who have suddenly stopped to admire a "ride wanted" ad on the campus bulletin boards. No longer will you have to navigate around those groups that have chosen the middle of the Campus Center Concourse to discuss the latest happenings in Leverett.

That the determination as to which lane one should travel in be based on the following criteria:

1) The rate of speed in the slow lane will be equivalent of waiting in line for tickets at Union Records Unlimited or that of trying to get through the crowd to the bar at the Blue Wall Happy hour.

2) The rate of speed in the fast lane will be the equivalent of that of trying to dodge between the traffic in front of Southwest or the exit rate of people leaving the Dining Commons.

That it become illegal to suddenly stop in your lane without giving the people behind you the proper hand signal. Also, all lane changes will be subject to the same rules of courtesy that govern other road behavior.

That a new SGA organization called ZAP (ZooMass Allied Patrolmen) be formed to police these new proceedings. These people will have the power to issue warnings and tickets for people committing traffic violations. ZAP will be run by those individuals who ran the escort service and are still looking for a nice way to serve the UMass community.

With my proposal, I hope to clear some of the space here at UMass. I hope to make places a bit easier to get to and a lot easier to leave from. I want to stop the spontaneous traffic jams that always occur when I have exactly two minutes to get from the Campus Center to the grad tower for my math mid-term. And with judicious planning, I might even make the instructor late.

Doctor opens communications between Arabs and Jews

To the Editor:

Dr. Christopher Giannou was brought here Monday by the Palestine Solidarity Committee and the Northampton Committee on Central America, in connection with the Organization of Arab Students. Though "Nummo" News billed Dr. Giannou as a Canadian doctor who had "witnessed torture at the hands of the Israeli Forces," he surprised all of us and discredited the obvious misinformation of "Nummo" News.

Dr. Giannou was, indeed, a Canadian doctor who had worked in Lebanon for two years, but he related a realistic account of his experiences without laying blame and without submitting to audience manipulation.

Dr. Giannou is someone who, by assessing the situation in which he was involved, has concluded that peace will only come to Israel and the Palestinians when both sides stop laying blame and start talking. He made it very clear that sensationalism and non-recognition will only lead to more conflict and bloodshed. Dr. Giannou also stressed the individuality of the Arab-Israeli conflict, stating that it cannot be seen in the same manner as Zimbabwe, South Africa, or other examples brought up by a member of the audience.

I would like to thank the sponsoring committees and urge them to sponsor more speakers who might help open the channels of communication between Arabs and Jews on our campus. If we can talk to each other, we have a basis from which to see each other's needs and determinations, a basis for peace.

Comic raises awareness to a blatantly sexist problem

To the Editor:

There is but one redeeming feature to Mark Rollins' comic strip in the Friday, 5 November Collegian; it may arouse enough indignation, loathing and disgust in more intelligent people than the author that some useful discussion, and thus perhaps a modicum of social awareness, will result.

Rollins displayed a lack of sensitivity which, in this stage of the societal development of America, in the vanguard of progressive ideology which an eastern university is supposed to represent, is simply unacceptable.

You should sit down with the man and explain to him that making comments of such a blatantly racist (a black man using "rhythm" as birth control) and sexist (objectifying a woman by inferring that she is as easily disposable as a telephone number) nature are surely going to lead to only one end: the alienation of everyone who is sensitive to these issues not only from Rollins but by association the Collegian and to some extent the University as well.

I would appreciate seeing an apology, signed by both Rollins and the Collegian in the space usually occupied by "The UMass Zone."

Hypercurricula

"Hypercurricula," a listing of events held at the University of Massachusetts and the surrounding area, is published daily in the Collegian. Events are listed on the day they will take place and are listed only once. Announcements MUST be submitted on "Hypercurricula" forms available in the Collegian office, 113 Campus Center, and returned by 3:45 P.M. Friday before the event is to be held. All submissions should be written in the same style as they appear in the paper.

"Hypercurricula" notices not submitted on the standard form and not submitted by the Friday before the week the event will take place will not be run. Due to space limitations, the Collegian cannot guarantee printing of all "Hypercurricula" notices. Priority will be given to UMass organizations.

Eduardo Fernandez performed at the Fine Arts Center Wednesday night.

All the way from Uruguay

EDUARDO FERNANDEZ
Wednesday, November 10
Fine Arts Center

By ROGER ATWOOD
Collegian Staff

Eduardo Fernandez came a long way to play at the Fine Arts Center on Wednesday night. All the way from Uruguay.

The classical guitarist is now completing his seventh and most extensive tour of North America. Though his popularity has been growing with each tour, he still plays mostly for small, university audiences.

"I have gotten to know American hotels, buses, and concert halls quite well," said a tired-looking Fernandez in an interview, "but not much else. Touring keeps you very busy."

"Sometime before I leave Amherst," he said, "I would like to visit the Emily Dickinson House, since she is one of my favorites. But my schedule is very tight."

"I find I like almost any piece," he said, "but I do have a special affinity for 20th century composers and the Spanish Renaissance. And of course Bach."

Both genres and Bach were well-represented at his performance. He began with a stirring rendition of the 20th Century Swiss composer Frank Martin's "Quarte Pieces Breves," immediately captivating the audience with his delicate yet vigorous style.

Next, Fernandez gave an uplifting performance of Bach's "Suite No. 4 in E Major," and later "Tentos IV" by the 16th Century Spanish composer Luis Milan. Other composers on the program included the 19th Century Ialian Mauro Guiliani, and 20th Century Spaniards Isaac Albeniz and Federico Moreno-Torraba.

Fernandez's most surprising choice was a short piece called "The Last Song" by a little-known Paraguayan composer, Augustin Barrios. Barrios was the only Latin American composer featured in the performance.

"Some people ascribe certain traits to Latin American composition," said Fernandez, "but I think that nationalist thing has been played out. Every composer is a composer first, and his nationality is another matter."

Fernandez began playing guitar as a child, and has studied in Uruguay, Europe and the United States. Early on, he felt the influence of the Spanish master of classical guitar, Andres Segovia.

"Segovia really put classical guitar on the map," said Fernandez. "If it weren't for him, I probably wouldn't be here. He is truly our father figure."

"Segovia really communicates with his audience," Fernandez continued, "and his style is very inspiring. But of course I cannot copy him."

Once, in 1977, Fernandez played for Segovia. "He like it. He enjoyed my playing very much," said Fernandez proudly.

Fernandez has done some composing of his own in recent years, for recorder, harpsichord, and string quartet as well as guitar.

"Maybe someday I'll perform my own pieces," he said, "but for now, I don't dare."

At the Blue Wall: those incorrigible purveyors of bratty punk-pop, the Museum Direktors, will be on stage tonight. Cover's only $2.

At the Rusty Nail: Friday night, it's the foot stompin' R&B riffs of the James Montgomery Band; opening will be First Rate. Saturday night, it's the Rolling Clones, um, I mean the Flusing Brides, well, you know what I mean.

At the Showcase (formerly the WOK Lounge): Friday and Saturday night, it's the Rastafarian resonances of Loose Caboose.

Contemporary jazz guitarist Larry Coryell will be at the Iron Horse Sunday night for a show at 7 and 10 p.m. Tickets are $7 and are available at TIX. Coryell's virtuoso ability is in a class by itself and is well-worth the price.

At the Angora Ballroom (West Hartford): exoskeleton rock with Adam Ant Saturday night: lost and found rock from LA with Missing Persons on Tuesday at the 16th (check it out, lead vocalist Dale Bozzio has more squeaks in her delivery than a rabid Lene Lovich.)

At Flat Street (Brattleboro, Vt.): tix are still available for Greg Allman's performance on Tuesday night, ditto for the Missing Persons date next Thursday.

The Duke Ellington Committee, in conjunction with UPC and the UMass Arts Council, will present Clouds — a performance of contemporary Black Music — at 8 p.m. on Sunday, November 21st in the Student Union Ballroom. Tix are a steal at $6 for students and $7 for the general public and are available at Union Records and For the Record.

The English Beat's Thursday night show at the Campus Center Auditorium is definitely sold out. Perhaps through sleath, deceit, or treachery you can obtain yourself a pair of tix. Good luck.

Best Bets on home-grown vinyl: the self-titled EP by the Boston-based Sex Execs (Rounder) is my first recommendation. New wave swing? Zoot-suited punk? You decide. Modern Method Records' new EP release by November Group has actually been out for almost two months now, but it nonetheless demands attention. Give a listen to "Flatland" and the superlatively slick remix of "We Dance." Disciplined dance minimalism to party away your Marxist blues.

The Museum Direktors will be on stage tonight at the Blue Wall.

Good news for happy feet

SPECIAL BEAT SERVICE (IRS)
The English Beat

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

Trampled by countless pairs of dancing feet, devoured by wax-eating Victrola's, even immersed in rancid puddles of Old Milwaukee, my copy of the English Beat's first LP, I Just Can't Stop It, has been the victim of probably some of the more excruciating of torture methods known to modern man. Horrifying, yes, but these are the stuff that album egos are made of, signs that a record's been played, and played HARD.

But Freud aside, I Just Can't Stop It is easily one of my favorite dance records, and there can be little dispute that, in a larger sense, it has got to be up there with the first LP by the Specials or even the Selector as one of the best Ska revival works ever released.

For the longest time, I believed the Beat would never again match the gleeful splendor of that first record. Wha'appen? was a close, but flawed attempt. Then, along comes Special Beat Service, an album that finds our favorite rudies a little older and a little bit farther down the road.

Something's changed. The gay juxtaposed "English Beat" logo we've become accustomed to has been replaced by a more stylish one, resembling the trademark of one of those overnight-package delivery services. Missing as well, are the cute go-go girl and dance-step graphics which adorned the covers of the two previous records. The band members now hold serious, contemplative looks in the cover photo and they're dressed in tasteful, yet conservative attire. The Beat, pretty basically, have grown up. Their perceptions have expanded and deepened with experience, and Special Beat Service reflects the band's exploration of this new territory.

From the first song, "I Confess," it becomes plain that the frenetic BEAT which characterized the group's first two albums has been toned down to a more assured and disciplined sound. Here, the bouncing mad-dog bass and scattershot guitar which was the norm for the basic Beat sound, has been exchanged for a self-effacing bass line sprinkled with gentle piano tinklings.

Although ballads predominate, the record really runs the entire gamut from the moving, deeply evocative ambiance of "Save It For Later" (the obvious hit single) and "Jeanette" to the almost straight-ahead, ska inflected reggae of "Spar Wid Me" and "Pato and Roger." If you're looking for a dance number, "Ackee 1 2 3" has got enough infectious riffs to satisfy even the worst case of happy feet.

What the Beat hath wrought in Special Beat Service is a marvelous little synthesis of their first two records. Though none of the songs jump out and grab you like say "Mirror in the Bathroom" or "Twist and Crawl" from I Just Can't Stop It, the overall quality of the song is still there, they just work like "Can't Get Used to Losing You" from Wha'appen?, in much subtler ways.

The English Beat will be appearing at 9 p.m. on Tuesday, November 16, in Campus Center Auditorium.

Finely woven Silk Route

MUSIC AND DANCE OF THE SILK ROUTE
Tuesday, November 9
Fine Arts Center

By JULIE PROCOPIOW
Collegian Staff

And now for something completely different...Something different was exactly what the audience saw Tuesday evening, as the Asian Society presented its production of Music and Dance of the Silk Route.

The group consists of five musicians and dancers that perform with an obvious pride in their culture. Needless to say, the performance was delightful and enriched with a variety of different music and dance sequences unique to the culture of the Chinese people.

Two musicians opened the show with a number of short selections utilizing a guanzi, or a reed pipe, and a kumuzi, a three-stringed instrument that is usually played by holding it in front of oneself and plucking it with the fingers of the right hand. All of the pieces told a story or represented a poem of some sort, with the recurring theme of the life of herdsmen in the East Asian province of Kergez being the dominant image.

The second performer came out alone donning a white hat and bright floral-printed outfit. He entertained the audience with his instrument, a rewapu, that had a banjo-like sound to it. The string player was a source of great amusement as he presented a florish of highly complicated pieces, while sinultaneously adding a bit of humor in his comic facial expressions.

After another interlude of string playing, the first dance piece came on stage presenting a single woman dressed in a flowing robe characteristic of Chinese traditional dress. The dancer flitted gracefully on stage in a very expressive interpretation that illustrated the joy of falling in love.

The group's greatest attraction followed as a male ornamentally dressed prompted himself on stage with his lusheng, an "L" — shaped reed instrument played by the people of Miao. This instrument is traditionally played while the lusheng player simultaneously dances, requiring great coordination and stamina on the part of this musical athlete.

After a brief intermission, the performers seemed to start all over again interchanging dance sequences with music sequences. The rewapu player came out again and was followed by an interesting dance called the Mongolian Bowl and Wine Cup Dance, in which the dancer showed exquisite grace in balancing a bowl and cup on her head.

The performance closed with a final sequence of lusheng dance and music with the player proving, beyond the shadow of a doubt, his great command of the instrument and ability to control his dancing at the same time.

Due to the illness of some of the dancers, a number of the prescheduled dance pieces were cancelled, which was a bit disappointing, yet nevertheless unavoidable. The exuberant round of applause that followed the performance was an indication in itself that the show was a success at the FAC continues to please its audiences with varied and numerous visiting performers.

Brian Switzer is flanked by dancers in the UMass Music Theatre Guild's production of Seesaw. The musical comedy opened last night and will also play tonight and tomorrow, as well as next weekend. All performances are at 8 p.m. in Bowker auditorium. The Guild has an impeccable track record, don't miss Seesaw.

Paul Newman stars as a down-on-his-luck Boston attorney and Charlotte Rampling is the woman who enters his life as he is about to take on a case no one thinks he can win in The Verdict.

While we're waiting to see Roy Scheider as a chopper cop in the futuristic Blue Thunder, there's Still of the Night, scheduled to open next month. Scheider stars as a psychiatrist who begins to suspect a patient of being a murderess. Meryl Streep, now busy filming Silkwood, plays the patient in question. Once again, the press release spilled the beans about the film's "surprise" ending, but I won't reveal anything more than to say that the film had been titled Stab until about a month ago. The film was written and directed by Robert Benton (Kramer vs. Kramer).

The Challenge is also scheduled for release next month. Directed by John Frankenheimer, the actioner is set in Japan, where two brothers (Toshiro Mifune, Atsuo Nakamura) battle for possession of two fabled swords. The swords have been passed down the generations for hundreds of years, but one gets lost after World War II and ends up in the possession of California drifter Scott Glenn. Glenn (Urban Cowboy, Personal Best)is kidnapped and dragged into the action. John Sayles (Return of the Secaucus Seven) wrote most of the screenplay.

Also set in Japan, The Ninja will begin shooting in March. It is based on the novel by Eric Van Lustbader and will star an as yet unnamed unknown. Budgeted at $15 million, Irvin Kershner (The Empire Strikes Back) will direct.

Superman III is ready for release; The Batman is shooting now in Chicago. Where will these silly comic book adaptations end? Not with these two films anyway. The Silver Surfer is being prepared for producer Lee Kraer; CBS theatrical films is developing The Fantastic Four; and John Landis will direct Dick Tracy. Who will play the famous crimestopper? They're trying to sign Dan Aykroyd, but Landis has said he'd love to get Clint Eastwood to play the part.

Then there's The Shadow, which Leslie Newman (Superman) will write; Modesty Blaise, with Ann Turkel in the title role; and Greystoke, yet another version of Tarzan of the Apes, this time by Hugh Hudson, Davis Puttnam and Stan Canter, the men who made Chariots of Fire.

Advance word has it that Paul Newman gives his best performance in years in Sidney Lumet's The Verdict, which is due on December 17. Newman stars as a disillusioned Boston attorney whose last chance at resurrecting his faltering career comes in taking on a case no one thinks he can win. Also starring in the drama are Jack Warden, James Mason and Charlotte Rampling. The screenplay was written by playwright David Mamet. Should be good.

Local Best Bet: Casablanca. Maltese Falcon. Amherst Cinema. Through Saturday. Enough said.

Then there's Roommates at the Majestic. The first attempt in a while to mainstream pornography succeeds in the characterizations of it's three title characters, though the film's pornographic instincts ultimately demean it's worth. Interesting attempt though. Film students will enjoy it.

TRAILERS Trivia; The following characters appeared in what films? Jonathan E; Riff Randall; Frankie the Thumper; Joe Cujocko. The first person to tell me four correct answers will receive a new movie poster. Answer to last week's question: George Lazenby played James Bond in On Her Majesty's Secret Service.

Chan not to be missed

By ELAINE SENAY
Collegian Staff

Director Wayne Wang brings to mainstream audiences an insightful film about being a Chinese-American in Chan is Missing.

The film centers around two people living in San Francisco's Chinatown. Wood Moy plays Jo, an old man born in America, and Marc Hayashi plays his nephew, Steve, a young man embodying a mixture of both Chinese and American values.

They tease each other throughout the film about the stereotypes that native non-Chinese have about Chinese-Americans. This exchange between the two men provides much of the humor in Chan is Missing. Wang allows us into a Chinatown that only the Chinese-Americans see. We see how they perceive mainstream America as well as their own world. The director takes us on this journey by having Joe and Steve try to track down their friend and business partner, Chan, who has disappeared.

This search leads us into the homes and businesses of Chinatown. Through Jo and Steve's investigation, we meet Chinese-Americans of all backgrounds and attitudes. What makes this film clever as well as fun is how they are able to laugh at themselves just as they mock the non-Chinese.

Chan is Missing was made on an absurdly low budget of $20,000. It is in black and white which runs across the screen with all the technical roughness of a home movie. Instead of making you wish you hadn't come, it appeals to your sense of authenticity with its lack of Hollywood gloss.

Chan is Missing is a crumpled picture postcard of contemporary life in San Francisco's Chinatown. You are taken on a trip into another world. The culture shock of this film is not harsh, instead it is an insightful picture of a rich but hidden sub-culture within America.

Wood Moy is Jo in Wayne Wang's intriguing film, Chan is Missing.

Volleyball stumbles against Springfield, NU

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — Intensity. It is a great ally to have. For one game, the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team played with great intensity and they blew the opposition away. However, one does not win a best of three match with one game.

After demolishing Northeastern University in their opening match, UMass dropped two straight to NU and then dropped a match in two games, to Springfield College to pick up two losses, Wednesday night.

"We didn't have a good night," said Captain Patti Philbin. "We didn't communicate with each other." And that's when the Minutewomen started to run into problems.

Northeastern had all the problems they could handle in their first match with the Minutewomen as UMass waltzed over the Lady Huskies, 15-4. UMass' execution was excellent in this game and was highlighted by the serving of Kirsten Smith and Sally Maher.

However, in the second and third games, Massachusetts became complacent and Northeastern was right back into the match, thanks to some fine play by NU and some Minutewomen mistakes.

"We let up," said Philbin. "We played well, but not well enough to win." NU eked out a 14-16 second game win and took the third game, 13-15.

Massachusetts fared no better against the Springfield Chiefs who are ranked third in New England (division II). UMass went down in two games, 4-15, 9-15.

"We didn't talk enough (in the Springfield loss) or play together," said Philbin. "We weren't together." A big problem, especially during the Springfield match, was all the missed serves made by the Minutewomen.

UMass consistently missed served and that served to further frustrate the Minutewomen. UM worked so hard to gain possession of the ball and then when they got the ball, it was hit into the net or out-of-bounds.

Another problem was with the Minutewomen service reception, which was also off.

With the two defeats, UMass drops to 24-28 and now cannot finish with a .500 record, even if they win the two matches they have this weekend in their season-ending tournament in Princeton.

UMass, which had won the last eight of eleven, will face Princeton and West Virginia or Fairleigh-Dickinson.

"It is a good chance for us to finish the season on a winning note, commented Philbin. "We can compete with them."

For Philbin, the lone senior on the team, this weekend's Princeton Classic will be her last appearance in a UMass uniform. The co-captain, along with Patty Grant, has been the leader for the Minutewomen this year on and off the floor.

Swimmers look forward to Smith after Vermont rout

By BOB BROCK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's varsity swimming team will be looking to improve their record to 2-0 tomorrow when they host Smith College in the Boyden pool at 1:00 p.m.

The Minutewomen are coming off an impressive 102-46 victory over the University of Vermont in a meet held last Saturday in Burlington. Coach Valerie Turtle was pleased with her squad's big season-opening win.

"Overall we had a very good showing," Turtle remarked. "We're also starting off the season stronger this year which is nice," she added.

The UM swimmers were paced by four triple winners in the meet. Jenn Nicolai, Rosalie Nataupski, Laurie Keen and Elizabeth Feinberg each had three wins for UMass. Nicolai swam a leg of the victorious 200 medley relay team and added wins in the 100 IM (individual medley) and the 50 free. Nataupski swam the butterfly leg of the medley relay and also had impressive wins in the 200 butterfly and 100 butterfly.

Keen had wins in the medley relay and the 100 and 200 yard breastroke. Feinberg had wins in the 100 and 200 yard freestyles and swam a leg of the winning 400 yard relay team.

UMass also fared well in the diving events as senior Jean Bushee took both the one meter and three meter events. She scored 185.45 points on the one meter board and totaled 212.50 points on the high board. Other UM swimmers who grabbed first places were Debbie Chisholm, who swam a leg on the 200 yard medley relay, and Sue Freitas, who won the 100 breastroke in an impressive 1:06.80.

The Minutewomen are now looking ahead to tomorrow's meet with Smith. They will also be out to avenge last year's loss to the Smith swimmers.

"They are a strong team," Coach Turtle said. But she also added that things should be a bit different this time around. "I think we are stronger this year than last," Turtle said.

Besides tomorrow's meet with Smith, the UM swimmers will see their cross-town rivals again next Thursday when the UMass women swimmers will host the Pioneer Valley Relays. Teams expected to compete are UMass, Smith, Amherst College, Mount Holyoke, Springfield College and Williams College.

The meet will not count in overall season records, but is designed to promote swimming in the area among the area colleges. It will get under way in Boyden pool Thursday at 4:00 p.m.

Men's cross-country travels to IC4A champs

By JOHN WHITE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's cross-country team winds down its season this weekend when they travel to Lehigh, Pennsylvania to participate in the IC4A Championships. The 10,000 meter race will also be featured as the qualifying race for the NCAA Championships.

This is the first year that the race will be serving that dual-purpose and coach Ken O'Brien foresees an interesting contest.

"With such teams as Providence (the defending IC4A champs), Villanova, Princeton, and Fairleigh-Dickinson taking part, the finish could be an exciting, if not unusual, one," said O'Brien.

"I expect that we might be able to finish in the top half of the 40 school field. We will need a good day from most of our top runners though," observed O'Brien.

"Belmont Park, where the race is being held, is the same course that we ran for the Lehigh Invitationals, so that could help our effort a little," added O'Brien.

One of the "top runners" that O'Brien referred to is junior, Rich Doiron. He has been a top finisher in many of the major meets for the Minutemen this season such as the Eastern Intercollegiate Athletic Assoc. and the Atlantic Ten Championships. Last week at the New Englands, UMass finished a disappointing 11th place. Their best performance came from Doirons' 19th palce finish in what O'Brien called," a slightly sub-par race against such a degree of competition."

The meet was taken by Providence College for the ninth straight year. PC took six of the top seven places to insure their dominance.

"Providence is in a class by themselves for the Northeast region and will have to be considered one of the favorites for the IC4A-NCAA race," stated O'Brien.

So, this final race will hopefully feature a great finish and a Better showing by the UMass harriers.

Ariel Fowler: more than just a tennis star

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

Ariel Fowler is what is known as a hard worker and a good learner. The Duxbury, Massachusetts native has only been playing tennis for six years, yet she has been teaching the sport for over five years and was ranked #12 in Women's A Singles last year by the New England Lawn Tennis Association.

The 21 year old psychology major played for four years at Duxbury High School. Each year she played, her team made it to the state championships, but lost in the semifinals.

After high school she went to Flaglar College in St. Augustine, Fla. for two and a half years and learned doubles while she played there, before transferring to the University of Massachusetts last semester.

"I came to UMass because it is a bigger school, and it has so much more to offer, not just academically. Also the tennis competition is much tougher in New England," said Ariel.

Last spring, the Minutewomen made it to the MAIAW National Championships in Colorado and Fowler played number four singles and number two doubles. This year she started off at number two doubles and wound up playing number two singles as well. She won the Massachusetts state championships at number two singles and made it to the finals at number two doubles before being eliminated.

"Ariel is a good learner, a good team leader and a real hard worker," said women's varsity tennis coach John Beal. "She should be able to use her experience and psychology in some sort of tennis teaching capacity," said Beal.

"I don't know if I have what it takes to make it at the pro level. It takes a lot of money and personal dedication," said Ariel. "I practice a lot, but the competition in the pros would be brutal. I'm pretty satisfied with teaching at this point."

Fowler said she likes to go out and do the best she can, and most of the time she is satisfied with her play.

"My forehand is a definite strength, but overall I feel pretty comfortable with all of my strokes. If something is not quite right a coach can be quite helpful. Coach Beal has helped me a lot. He knows the game so well, and has taught me a lot both physically and mentally," said Fowler.

"I hope to teach tennis in a club or resort. I like to teach and play. I enjoy the sport so much that I would like to pass it on to others in the field," said Fowler.

She has had the experience of teaching for the last few summers. She taught at the Duxbury Recreational Department from 1977-1980, and worked with children and adults. In 1981, she taught adults only at the All-American Sports Camps, which was held at Amherst College. This past summer, she taught a children's camp with offense/defense at Curry College in Milton, Massachusetts.

Tennis is definitely not the only sport Ariel has played. She has been on both ski and swim teams before high school and was on her high school ski team for one year. She played for her high school basketball team for three years.

As a freshman and sophomore she played on the junior varsity hoop team, and as a junior she played on the varsity before giving it up in her senior year to concentrate on tennis more. She also likes to play soccer and just about any sport, but puts the most time into tennis because she likes that best.

Now, she looks forward to a good spring season for the varsity team now that they have more experience to go along with their hard work. After that, the tennis clubs will have something to look forward to.

Minutemen hope to cage Wildcats

Share of YC at stake

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

If you were a bone shivering, beer guzzling, hot dog munching tailgater before, during, and after the University of Massachusetts-Boston College football game last Saturday at Alumni Stadium, I'm sure the Minutemen's 34-21 loss to the Eagles was a bit easier to take thanks to mid-week key payments to your local keg organizer.

If you've yet to indulge in this social aspect of attending a college football game, two more opportunities present themselves this year, beginning when the (3-6) Minutemen host the Wildcats of the University of New Hampshire (4-5) tomorrow at Alumni Stadium

No, it won't be Doug Flutie and then the sometimes nationally ranked Eagles coming to Alumni Stadium to attract the fans, but this clash certainly possesses the ingredients for an exciting Yankee Conference game.

It's surely a case of all or nothing for UMass head coach Bob Pickett and his Minutemen team. A win would give UMass a piece of the Yankee Conference crown, along with Maine, Boston University, and possibly, of all teams, UConn.

While the Minutemen can control their own destiny as far as sharing the crown, they really don't have a shot at the NCAA playoff berth that goes to the declared conference champion since both their league losses came against Maine and BU, conceivably eliminating UMass from playoff consideration by the second tie-breaker rule.

It appears as if history will repeat itself. Last year UMass beat New Hampshire 20-9 in Durham to tie Rhode Island for Yankee Conference championship, only to see Rhody go on to the nationals via their 16-10 victory over the Minutemen earlier in the year.

"Prior to each season our football team sets objectives," said Pickett. "The first objective we set is to win the Yankee Conference Championship."

Rich Jenkins rambles for some yardage during last week's loss to Boston College.

With an outright title not a possibility, the Minutemen will have beat a New Hampshire team that has beaten BU and lost to Connecticut and Rhode Island by a combined total of six points, to get a share of a title they have won outright or shared in five of the last six seasons.

The Wildcats have dropped some tough games but consistently score in the twenties.

"Offensively this team is similar to the team we beat last year with one exception," said Pickett. "Rick Leclerc at quarterback. He's doing well."

Leclerc, from Agawam, has completed 40 percent of his passes this year for 654 yards.

The Minutemen will go with Jim Simeone at quarterback for the third straight week and the freshman from Farmington, Connecticut, has already started collecting for his college scrapbook.

Simeone was chosen ECAC Rookie-of-the-Week for his performance last week against Boston College when he went 7 for 15 passing for 150 yards and two touchdowns.

It is a day in which the University of Massachusetts football team will try to squeeze a partial championship out of a strange, injury-riddled season.

It is also a day in which we will see if tailgating at UMass is here to stay or if it was just another UMass flash in the pan college fad.

Women's teams heading into NCAA playoffs

Soccer vs. Central Florida

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

A very positive and confident University of Masachusetts women's soccer team set off for Florida yesterday with hopes of coming back a game closer to being National champions.

The Minutewomen, who beat the University of Rochester to advance to the quarterfinals of the NCAA tournament, will play the third-ranked University of Central Florida on Sunday at 1:00. Florida finished its season with an 8-0-2 record, shutting out every team they've defeated.

Unfortunately, the Minutewomen will be without two key players. Top scorer Debbie Harackiewicz is sidelined with a severely sprained ankle. Harackiewicz, whose ankle is in a cast, was injured in the Rochester game last weekend when the UR goalie fell on her leg.

UMass goalie Tammie Easton is also not going to Florida because of swollen lymph glands in both hips. Easton, who was in goal for the game against Rochester, is in the hospital in her hometown West Springfield for tests. Banda said what happened to Easton was totally unexpected.

"We have two women to replace," Banda said, "and it's tough on them and the others. But, the women are reacting positively."

Ellen Taggart and Sharon Dagget, both forwards, will be going in place of Harackiewicz and Easton.

Although UCF has two of the best goaltenders in the country, according to Banda, the defense is a little shakey and can make mistakes if pressured." The women are going to play a "high tempo game and the pressure we put on the backs is going to be the key for our game. Our offense is going to be a little tired."

Among the teams UCF have played are second ranked University of Missouri at St. Louis who Florida tied twice 1-1 and 0-0. Florida defeated 16th ranked Cincinati 7-0, and 19th ranked Cortland State 2-1.

Florida has outscored its opponents 52-2 and outshot them 308-46.

"They have the overall talent," Banda said, "and they're as good as we are. We've been tested (scored upon and come back) so we're going into this game with a little bit of ease. We're in the same ballpark, so it's even up right now."

The Minutewomen left yesterday for their Sunday game so they could get used to the "different environment, have a chance to practice on Friday and Saturday and get used to the heat." Banda said that the traveling is going to be a hassle.

"It's not fun, not resting. There's so many plans and you fidget and think about what's going to happen," commented Banda.

If the Minutewomen win in Florida, this weekend, they will go back to Orlando Florida the following weekend for the final four, which include the semi-finals and finals. Banda predicted the score to be close 1-0 or 2-1.

"We've passed the test in our own league. Being number one (in the Northeast region) hasn't come easy, but the team has come through to be one of the top teams in the country," Banda said.

Stickers face Hawkeyes

Tomorrow, the University of Massachusetts field hockey team will be facing University of Iowa in the first round of the NCAA National Championships, at the University of Connecticut in Storrs.

Although the University of Iowa has played primarily midwestern teams like Michigan and Northwestern, the Minutewomen have remained east of the Mississippi for their entire season. The two teams have also had some similar opponents.

However, if one were to compare these two teams by comparing the results of their games against similar opponents, one would run into some obstacles.

Iowa, top ranked in the nation for several weeks at the start of the season lost to Old Dominion University, 4-0. This dropped the Hawkeye's ranking substantially. (UMass lost to ODU 5-1, with no real damage done to UM's ranking.)

While the Minutewomen had little trouble disposing of University of New Hampshire 5-0, it took Iowa two overtimes to beat UNH by a score of 1-0.

Iowa is still a very highly regarded team, according to UMass co-captain Ro Tudryn.

"They're a tough draw," Tudryn said, "but not as tough a draw as we could have gotten."

UMass finished their regular season with a 14-3-1 record, with their losses coming at the hands of ODU, Temple, and UConn. The tie came at the hands of the University of Rhode Island.

If the stickers should win tomorrow against Iowa, they will be matched against UConn in the quarterfinals round, to be played Sunday in Storrs. The UConn stickers received a bye in the first round of the tournament.

Last season, the Minutewomen lost to UConn in the finals this tournament by a score of 3-1.

With that loss hanging over their heads, and the 2-0 loss to the Huskies last weekend just behind them, Pam Hixon's stickers are looking forward to another confrontation with their number one arch-rival.

The stickers are almost all healthy. Hixon had a strong bench.

"I have had the opportunity to play all of the girls this season, thanks to the new substitution rules this season," Hixon said.

Forward Tish Stevens, who injured her knee in a game against Boston University two weeks ago, might be back for tomorrow's game. Either way, the stickers will be playing their regular brand of field hockey; a brand that leaves UMass' opponents lying in the dust. Maybe you'll need a gas mask at UConn this weekend.

Freshman Megan Donnelly, a UMass middie, was elected to the first team All-American last week. Donnelly, who has scored nine goals so far this season for UMass, is the only freshman on a squad.

Megan's All-American team will be playing the USA Field Hockey team, a team of which former UMass sticker Judy Strong is a member, later this year.

Former governer Foster Furcolo acknowledges applause Saturday at the formal dedication of the School of Education building named for him.

Dignitaries visit campus for naming of building

A host of Massachusetts' higher education dignitaries were on hand Saturday to preside at a ceremony held to rename the School of Education building to "Furcolo Hall" at the University of Massachusetts in honor of former governor Foster Furcolo.

An audience of more than 300 people in Marksmeadow Auditorium heard Furcolo's work in the field of higher education praised by UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey in a speech to open the day's events. He was followed by Robert Quinn, chairman of the Board of Trustees, who served as the master of ceremonies.

Joseph Califano, former Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) for the Carter Administration, delivered the keynote address, in which he contrasted the contributions of Furcolo in the widening of access to education to all, with the current Administration's attitude of cutting back on funds available for deserving students.

Of all the recent budget cuts in social programs, Califano said "none is so shortsighted, so certain to lose the war by winning the wrong battle, so subversive of our national interest and so offensive to fundamental precepts of social justice as the hatcheting of higher education."

Califano had few kind words for President Ronald Reagan's education policy, as he remarked, "We have at the head of our nation an extraordinarily gifted pied piper of politics but I cannot believe the American people want to follow him back to the days when the amount of education a young citizen of this country received depended not on his or her ability to absorb it but how thick Daddy's wallet was."

Califano praised Furcolo for leading the state out of those "dark days" by promoting financial assistance for education for qualified students.

"He put in place laws and resources necessary to begin the job of providing educational opportunity to every person in this state," Califano said.

Janet Gorman Murphy, president of Lyndon State College in Vermont and a lifelong friend of Furcolo, delivered a tribute to the former governor recognizing his efforts on behalf of higher education in the state and on a national level.

Murphy, a 1958 graduate of UMass and recipient of a doctorate from the School of Education, said, "Governor Furcolo, more than any other governor in the history of our state, set a philosophical tone of access to higher educational institutions for Massachusetts citizens that survived many administrations and can be seen today."

Furcolo is credited as the father of the state's community colleges, which were established during his tenure as governor from 1957-1961. In reference to this, Murphy said "his creation of the community college system reflected a personal philosophy that spoke of the right of every qualified citizen of the Commonwealth, notwithstanding his social, economic, political, ethnic or religious background, to higher education and the state had an obligation to fulfill that right."

David Bartley, Secretary of the state Office of Administration and Finance, spoke on behalf of Governor Edward King, whose helicopter was unable to fly from Boston because of bad weather, saying "The future of the Commonwealth is the next generation and that is what our dedication should remind us of."

Furcolo expressed his thanks for the ceremony and stressed the need to continue working for access for all to education.

"If we had but one gift we could pass on to our children and their children, other than the gift of health of course, I'm certain that it would be education," Furcolo said. "It's very meaningful to me today to have this recognition."

"I can't thank you enough," he said.

Former official says building repairs ignored

No answer given on UMass repair

By MARK J. WELCH

For almost 20 years, Evan Johnston helped build the University of Massachusetts. Now, he's trying to get someone to fix the buildings his agency financed — but no one seems to be responding.

"In a way, I hate to get back into it," said Johnston, a former vice-chairman of the UMass Building Authority. "But I'm fighting for a system."

Johnston has been involved with the University since he entered the school in 1942, and has worked in a number of UMass offices in the past 23 years. But now, he is set apart from the University. He said that many administrators won't even deal with him anymore.

"I'm what they call a 'whistle-blower,'" he said.

In 1978, Johnston served as chairman of a UMass Building Authority committee investigating problems found in buildings financed by that agency. Since then, he has pressed for action on the problems, but very little has been done about what he says is at least a $28 million problem.

The 1960's and 70's were years of "horrendous growth," Johnston said. With the University taking 1500 more students each year, the UMBA financed over $80 million worth of buildings, mostly student dormitories.

"We just grew too fast," Johnston said.

The Building Authority was not closely attuned to the campus, Johnston said, and thus could only assume that the University's reassurances about the quality of the buildings were true. When problems with the Campus Center Garage came to light, however, the authority established a Committee on Policies and Proceedures to investigate problems which existed in all the buildings. Johnston, who was appointed to the authority in 1964, said the committee used information from a number of consultant's reports to prepare its own report. One of the reports, on problems in the dormitories, had been sitting on a shelf for over a year without action when they found it — although it had recommended over $20 million in "energy" repairs.

In October 1978, Johnston's committee filed its report, and in January 1979 he filed a report of his own, detailing additional problems. When no action was taken, Johnston said he filed a third report in July 1979.

At the same time, Johnston cooperated with the state commission investigating state and county buildings — the Ward Commission. The Ward Commission report cited a number of the same problems as Johnston's committee.

State corruption affected campus

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

Corruption involving state buildings reached epidemic proportions between the period of 1969-80, and a special commission designed to make recommendations to eliminate the problems, has had its work go largely ignored due to political pressure, said Evan Johnston, former chairman of the Policies and Procedures Committee for the University of Massachusetts Building Authority.

Many of the buildings in question are on the UMass campus. Major problems exist within the Campus Center, the Campus Center Garage, Southwest Residential Area and North Village along with many other structures, Johnston said. More than $10 billion worth of state buildings built during this 13 year period were inspected by the Ward Commission. They found 77 percent of the buildings to be in "poor" shape because of improper original construction.

Estimated costs to repair the structures totalled $2½ billion. To restore the garage to first class condition would cost $½ million.

Johnston said state leadership turned a deaf ear on the matter of corruption within the system. He said Speaker of the House Thomas McGee, D-Lynn, actively worked against Ward Commission recommendations while Gov. Edward J. King did not seem to care about the problems.

The incoming administration of Michael S. Dukakis will apparently work in conjunction with Ward Commission proposals according to Dukakis, in a campaign promise made this fall.

During the 13 year period, only 32 of the 468 roof constructors in Massachusetts did all the state work, Johnston said.

U.S. Vice President George Bush (L) stands with Secretary of State George Schultz and Ambassador Arthur Hartman on Sunday before the casket of the late Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev.

Bush and Shultz meet for Brezhnev funeral

MOSCOW (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Schultz flew to Moscow yesterday for Leonid I. Brezhnev's funeral, and said he wanted the new Kremlin leadership to know the United States is ready for "constructive" East-West ties.

Vice President George Bush arrived from Nigeria to join Shultz, and both planned a visit to the House of Unions where the late Soviet president's body lay in state. Bush broke away from a seven-nation African tour to lead the U.S. delegation at the Brezhnev funeral.

Bush is the first American vice president to visit Moscow since Dwight D. Eisenhower's vice president Richard M. Nixon came here in 1959 to meet with Soviet leader Nikita S. Khrushchev.

Brezhnev, who died Wednesday of an apparent heart attack after leading the Soviet Union for 18 years, will be given a hero's burial today in Red Square. He was 75 years old.

Speaking to reporters at the home of U.S. Ambassador Arthur A. Hartman, Shultz said: "If constructive behavior emerges on the part of the Soviet Union, the United States is prepared to respond and is prepared for a more constructive relationship than we have had in past years."

He refused to comment about Yuri V. Andropov, who succeeded Brezhnev as general secretary of the nation's ruling Communist Party. He also said he and Bush would like to meet with Soviet leaders but that no sessions had been scheduled.

In a tough speech Friday when he was named to succeed Brezhnev, Andropov, former head of the KGB secret police, said "we know well that the imperialists will never meet one's pleas for peace. It can only be defended by relying on the invincible might of the Soviet armed forces."

The Soviets use the term imperialists to refer to the West.

Neither Andropov nor Defense Minister Dmitri F. Ustinov, in a speech the same day, mentioned detente with the West, which Brezhnev proclaimed as the cornerstone of his foreign policy.

Though Shultz declined to speculate on what foreign policy Andropov might follow, he said the new Soviet leader's Friday remarks did not signal shift by the Kremlin.

Walesa arrives home from jail

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa, held under martial law internment for 11 months as chief of the outlawed Solidarity Union, returned to his Gdansk home yesterday to the cheers and shouts of hundreds of supporters, reporters at the scene said.

Walesa returned to the drab, first-floor apartment in the Baltic port city's Zaspa district shortly before 10:30 p.m. — 4:30 p.m. EST. He was greeted by his wife Danuta, their seven children and friends who had maintained a four-day vigil after the government had said he would be released.

Walesa had been held at a government lodge in southeastern Poland near the Soviet border after the government imposed martial law Dec. 13 and suspended Solidarity. The independent union was outlawed by Parliament last month.

Walesa's return had been shrouded in speculation and a wall of official silence since the authorities announced last Thursday that he would be freed.

US to walk after Soviets set record

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space shuttle astronauts readied their gear yesterday for America's first space walk in nine years, as two Soviet cosmonauts coasted to an endurance record for man-in-space.

The Soviets had logged 185 days — six months — aboard Salyut 7.

The space walk by Columbia's two mission specialists, scheduled for 7:50 EST today, depended on William Lenoir's stomach. His queasiness had forced NASA to order a one-day delay; yesterday he was working without complaint.

Sailing high above Africa, astronaut Joseph Allen peered into the space shuttle's open cargo bay yesterday and reported, "We're looking forward to going out there tomorrow — looks like it needs some dusting and cleaning."

Mission Control: "We can't wait to get started." Lenoir and Allen will sit in their space suits for three hours, breathing pure oxygen, before venturing out.

"We are absolutely confident that Bill is going to be feeling well," said Flight Director Tommy Holloway. "The important thing is that he's hungry, he's eating as much as he wants to eat and he feels comfortable."

As Columbia moved through the third day of its five-day flight, Anatoly Berezovoy and Valentin Lebedev, aboard the Soviet space station Salyut 7 since May 13, broke the manned space flight endurance record. Lebedev was the last man to take a space walk — last July 30.

Yesterday was a light day aboard Columbia. Flight officials swapped yesterday and today's activities after Lenoir called in sick.

"The doctor has instructed him to drink fluids and eat light meals," a NASA spokesman said of Lenoir's recovery. Later, Lenoir took part in an "electro-oculogram experiment" — a previously scheduled test to help solve the question of why so many astronauts become ill in weightlessness.

Commander Vance Brand commented "We're the first of many fearless foursomes on future missions," and pilot Robert Overmyer mentioned that "We're not much at talking, but we sure eat a lot."

Columbia is scheduled to land tomorrow on the concrete runway at Edwards AFB in California, its mission a success with or without an astronaut excursion into space.

Begin's wife dies in Israel, prime minister cuts US trip

JERUSALEM — A grief-stricken Prime Minister Menachem Begin rushed home from the United States yesterday after his wife of 43 years died while being treated at a Jersualem hospital.

Israelis, entering official mourning for their dead in the Tyre, Lebanon, blast at Israeli military headquarters last week, were told by the Cabinet that the explosion was accidental, not sabotage as had been suspected. The blast leveled the seven-story building and killed 75 Israelis and 14 Arabs.

The solemn Israeli mood already had caused Begin to cancel entertainment events during his appearance before a Los Angeles Jewish group late Saturday.

Then he received word that his wife, Aliza, had died in Jerusalem's Hadassah Hospital. Mrs. Begin, 62, had a long history of asthma and respiratory problems and had been hospitalized for five weeks. Hospital spokeswoman Margalit Toledano said Mrs. Begin suffered "sudden cardiac arrest" and died at 1:30 a.m. yesterday, 6:30 p.m. EST Saturday.

City hotel workers to strike if no contract in two weeks

BOSTON — Union leaders negotiating a new contract for Boston's hotel employees say a strike is possible if agreement isn't reached by the Nov. 30 deadline.

Local 26 of the Hotel Restaurant Institutional Employees and Bartenders Union is seeking increased wages, a different health plan and an audit of the employees' pension fund.

The Greater Boston Hotel and Motor Inn Association says it is prepared to increase wages and improve the health plan, but says any settlement must be one that ensures the hotels' ability to remain competitive.

Lynn family that died in fire had been ordered to vacate

LYNN, Mass. — A family who perished when fire raged through their boarded up, unheated tenement had been ordered to leave the building but hadn't found a new home, friends say.

The bodies of Eleanor Carideo, 36, her sons, Clint, 5¼, and Elliot, 2¼, and Arthur Lowe, 58, were found Saturday on the third floor of the brick building, according to District Fire Chief Paul Kirby.

The woman's other child, 3-year-old Eleanor, was rescued, treated for smoke inhalation and placed with a family, said Detective Capt. Joseph Coppinger.

Three other adults living in the building, identified as Mack Reed, 39, his wife Joanne, 37, and James Foley, 32, also were rescued.

"We all had received notice to vacate the building some time ago," said Mrs. Reed, 37, sobbing after escaping the fire.

Berlin occupation vital says former city mayor

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Berlin is the only place in the world where its citizens pray they will continue to be occupied, said the former mayor of West Berlin during a lecture on Saturday at the University of Massachusetts.

Dietrich Stobbe, mayor of West Berlin from 1977 to 1981, spoke on "Berlin and the East/West Conflict" to about 20 people. The occupation of West Berlin is vital to its security, he said.

"The Americans are still in Berlin as a victorious power over Hitler," he said. "Peace is more important than national goals like the reunification of Germany or the freeing of an Eastern country. We can't risk war."

"Europe is a divided continent. Germany is a divided nation and Berlin is a divided city. Those facts still influence politics in Germany significantly," he said.

"The truth is Germany started World War II and lost it. The division is a consequence of what we did in the past," Stobbe said.

"The wall was built on the line which marked the sphere of interest but it was already marked in 1944 and was built in 1961. When the wall was built we Germans had to reaccess. We learned a rough military balance is needed to maintain peace," he said.

Although military security is necessary in West Berlin, military power is not the way to the communism in East Berlin.

"The best way to beat communism is by way of peaceful means. It is to penetrate their society with our thinking and our values," he said.

"Both super powers (the United States and the Soviet Union) have the power to protect their own political interests, but have not the power to roll back communism or from Moscow's view, interfere in Central Europe," he said. "This you can see clearly in Berlin."

The reunification of Berlin is not possible and will not be possible for a long time, if ever, Stobbe said.

Both super powers, as a result of World War II have the moral right to occupy Berlin.

However, "they should not and cannot risk a move which would lead to World War III," he said.

Now in West Berlin, "the basic idea was to say we can't change things. We should speak up and tell people the truth. All the old policies of the 50's were nothing less than an illusion," he said.

The new idea is in conflict with the policies of the Reagan administration. "The problem is we will lose the fruits of detente if the United States foreign policy will continue to prefer confrontation to cooperation."

"I am ready to say let's bring more freedom to East Germany, but let's live with peace in Europe," he said. "I am not convinced the younger generation will accept that policy. They start dreaming again," he said. "I hope the generations in the United States will understand that position."

'Hands-on' involvement important at Stockbridge

By DIANE SINICO
Collegian Correspondent

It is 6:30 a.m. and the fog has barely lifted, leaving the treetops still invisible, as Mark Whelihan trudges down to the barns located across the street from Boyden Gymnasium.

Whelihan is a 20-year-old animal science major in the Stockbridge School of Agriculture here at the University of Massachusetts. He is presently working on a swine project where he, and other members of his group, are responsible for the proper care of a group of piglets. The piglets must be fed before nine a.m., around 3:30 p.m., and just the runts must be fed again around 11:30 p.m. Whelihan feeds them at 6:30 a.m. because of his early class schedule.

The purpose of a project like this is to teach the students everything involved in raising farm animals by placing them in charge of the animals' care.

The piglets are fed different types of mixtures and their weight gain or loss is then monitored and compared, so that the students can determine which blend has produced the best results in the animals.

The students are also responsible for tagging their ears, cutting their teeth, and keeping their pens clean.

Whelihan explained that the runts receive that extra feeding because they are sickly and probably won't pull through.

"We are just trying to keep them alive," he said.

Among the many other projects taking place now are: the Lambing Project, where pregnant ewes are carefully monitored and watched before, during and after their delivery: the Sheep Project, where the newborn lambs are taken care of; and a different sort of project termed "Restorations of the Presidential Gardens."

This restoration project is taking place in front of the Chancellor's House. It is headed by several arboriculture and park management majors, but they hope it will expand to involve other majors within the Stockbridge School.

The project is intended to beautify and remove any hazards, such as weed trees, from the area. It is also an effort to get Stockbridge students "back on campus" said Mark Noonan, a 20-year-old senior arboriculture and park management major, who is in charge of the project.

According to Noonan, up until 1961, when unions took over, the Stockbridge students were responsible for much of the landscaping and preservation of the campus.

Leo Canuel, another arboriculture and park management major and the Chairman of the Steering Committee for the project agrees with Noonan.

Canuel said he feels the Stockbridge students should be working on campus again so everyone can see what it is that they do and how they work. He said that not only will the Stockbridge students receive "hands-on training," but all students will be able to enjoy the beauty and safety of the campus.

Besides projects like these, the students also participate in the Stockbridge Student Senate, the Shorthorn — the Stockbridge newspaper, various clubs, and many activities such as hay rides, Christmas parties, and banquets.

The Stockbridge School of Agriculture is a two-year technical college founded in 1918, and is part of the College of Food and Natural Resources. It is headed by Dean John W. Denison and Associate Director Iona Mae Reynolds. The school consists opf seven different majors and offers an associate of science degree.

The schedules for most majors have been pre-selected and don't allow time for electives, however, University courses are open to those that do, just as Stockbridge courses are open to all University students.

Most of the programs also require a five-month placement training beginning in April of the students' freshman year and ending with their return to school in the fall.

After graduation, most of the students enter the business world, but up to 40 percent transfer into closely related four year programs here and elsewhere.

The school received its new name in 1928 when it changed from The Two-Year Course, to the Stockbridge School of Agriculture at Massachusetts Agriculture College.

It was named after Levi Stockbridge, a farmer born in North Hadley in 1820. He did not attend the college, but was crucial in securing the acceptance by the state of the provisions of the Morrill Act. This federal act established "Land Grant" colleges and later helped secure the location of the Massachusetts Agricultural College at Amherst. He went on to become a professor and later president of the college.

Trustees table fee review

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts trustee committee last week rejected and delayed action on a policy which would cause significant increases in student room and board charges and fees.

The UMass Board of Trustees Committee on Budget and Financial Affairs rejected the report of the Task Force on Trust Fund Management because it did not list any possible financial impact the proposal would cause, according to Student Government Association President and Student Trustee Jim Murphy.

The task force was appointed by UMass President David C. Knapp last year to formulate policies and proceedures for trust fund budgeting and specifically deal with the problem of "full costing," which would require that each trust fund pay all expenses incurred by it from the University or other trust funds.

Currently, some services are provided by the University using state funds, saving money for trust funds like the dining commons and residence halls, which would otherwise need fee increases to pay the expenses.

The report included a "Manual for Management of Trust Funds" as well as a "Trustee Policy for Trust Fund Management," which were considered separately by the trustees, Murphy said.

"They all agreed that there should be a policy, but that's where the agreement ended," Murphy said. As a result, the report was tabled until February so more facts may be obtained.

Another problem with the report, according to Mitch Gaslin, chair of the SGA Committee on Rents and Fees, was that the report made no mention of student input in the budgeting process. In the past, students have participated in an annual "fee review" and thus examine proposals for fee increases.

The omission was not deliberate, according to Rosemarie Strother of the Office of Planning and Budget and a member of the task force. Strother noted that the report was meant to cover all three UMass campuses, and the fee review was applicable to the Amherst campus only.

"We will continue to have the fee review process as we have had it each year," Strother stressed.

Originally, there had been a student representative on the task force, former SGA Co-President Larry Kocot. Kocot graduated in May, however, and no replacement was made.

"Larry had definitely planned to write a minority report," said Strother. However, he was unable to do so because of other requirements after his graduation, she said.

Palestinians 'just want a homeland' according to UN rep

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

To the Palestinians, the Palestinian question is not a political issue.

They just want a homeland.

This was the message of a lecture given Friday night by the secretary general to the United Nations Conference on the Question of Palestine at Amherst College.

Lucille Mair spoke on "The United Nations and the Palestinian Question" to 35 people. Problems regarding the Palestinian situation and the steps currently being taken by the United Nations, will be evaluated during the U.N. conference on the Palestinian question, Mair said.

"The question of Palestine has been on the agenda of the United Nations for 30 years," she said. "The invasion of Lebanon was only one event in the long historical process in which the United Nations became involved."

Palestinians are convinced only a home and a country will give them an identity, Mair said.

"The abiding bond is that feeling for a homeland, which touches on the nerve center of this issue which has threatened world peace for 30 years," Mair said.

"Over the years we have seen the geographic expansion of Israel. We have seen Palestinians scattered through Israel," she said. "But it was not really until the creation of the Palestine Liberation Organization in 1967 that Palestinians began to speak out and began to be seen as a people with a history."

"The United Nations has at no time denied recognition of Israel. The question of the security of Israel could not be questioned by the United Nations," she said. "The question of the security of Israel is a matter of highest priority to Western nations, primarily to the United States."

"The question of Palestine has produced endless United Nations resolutions. Fifty-two peace proposals have been introduced to the U.N.," she said.

The United Nations also recognizes the right to representation. The Palestinians have identified the PLO as representative and the U.N. has done the same, she said.

"The growing desperation of the Palestinian people themselves has sustained them as a restless, formidable people," Mair said. "The Palestinians feel that without a settlement of their problem, there can be no peace in the region."

Mair said she feels there are unexplored aspects in the elements of fear in the Palestinian question.

"There is the element of fear: fear of war, of superior military forces. My feeling is the Arab states of those regions really don't want war. They are terrified of war," she said.

The United Nations Conference on the Question of Palestine, which will be held in Paris next summer, will have 153 nations participating, Mair said.

IS THE IDEA OF WEARING A UNIFORM KEEPING YOU OUT OF ARMY ROTC?

Whether you realize it or not, you're probably wearing a type of uniform right now.
There's nothing wrong with it. But an Army ROTC uniform could make you stand out from the crowd.
And ROTC will help you become more outstanding. Because you'll develop into a leader of people and a manager of money and equipment.
So how about switching "uniforms" for a few hours each week?

Asian-American culture reflected in art to celebrate Asian Awareness Month

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

They are a generation developing an outlet to express their experience in America.

The outlet is a reflection of their traditionally value-latent culture.

They are Asian-Americans and art is their mode of expression.

Jazz musician Fred Houn's performance at Smith College Friday marked the opening of the Asian-American Arts Conference and Festival this weekend. The conference and festival, coordinated by Eleanor Wong of Smith, was sponsored by Five College Inc., as part of month long events commerating November as "Asian Awareness Month."

The theme of the conference was "Asian-American Arts: Its Presence and Reality."

The conference officially began Saturday morning with a panel discussion which addressed questions concerning the relationship between Asian-American art and the community and the influences of the artist.

The panel consisted of: Tisa Chang, founder and director of the Pan-Asian Repertory Theatre and a professional actress; Jason Hwang, jazz violinist and member of "Commitment"; Corky Lee, photographer; Jon Wing Lum, filmaker; and Roberta Uno, director of the Third World Theatre Series at the University of Massachusetts, who acted as the panels moderator.

The conference, Houn said in his keynote address Saturday morning in Wright Hall at Smith College, was "an important occasion to exchange works and ideas and learn about the rich Asian-American culture."

"Asian-American artists are oppressed by stereotypes," Houn said. Openings for Asian actors and actresses are few and they are often stereotyped as servants, prostitutes and cooks, he said.

There is a tradition, a fundamental characteristic of the Asian-American experience that strives for equality, justice, self respect and dignity, said Houn, who has previously performed at the Kool Jazz Festival and at UMass.

The tradition began in Asia and withstood the suppressive detainment of immigrants at the Angel Island off the San Francisco coast before 1940. In the sixties it emerged as more individual Asian-American artists were recognized and American Universities began to incorporate Asian language and literature studies into their curriculum.

Now, Asian-Americans face the danger of "forced assimilation" into the larger white culture, Houn said.

"We must speak for ourselves," Houn said.

And the manner in which to do so is art.

"It is our experience we are trying to express, and art is the way to express it," said Lum, director of the film "To Be Ourselves."

Assimilation is not the last answer or ultimate dread however. Chang's Pan-Asian Repertory Theatre, she said, offers the "opportunity for performing artists to work in the professional mainstream while providing a repetoire for Asian-Americans.

Following the panel discussion were workshops by various artists including Houn and Lum and performances by "Commmittment" and the Pan-Asian Repertory Theatre Saturday night at Mount Holyoke College.

The weekend ended with films in the UMass Campus Center, readings and a photography exhibit by Lee at Hampshire College.

Israeli professor says Arafat 'moderate' and disapproves of present US aid

By GAYLE McGILL
Collegian Correspondent

It is time the Israeli government started to trust the Palestine Liberation Organization and that the United States stopped giving unconditional aid to the Israeli government, according to a professor from Hebrew University in Israel.

In a lecture given last night at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center, Professor Israel Loeff said that as a member of the intellectual community in Israel he feels he must speak on his views of the political struggle going on in Lebanon.

"The unconditional aid the United States gives to Israel might be good for the Israeli government but it is not good for the state of Israel," Loeff said.

Loeff went on to add that he believes the people of the United States should question the policies of their government.

"Any criticism of policy will be helpful in the longrun to the peace movement in Israel," Loeff said. "A peace agreement in Lebanon is impossible without the recognition of Jewish self-determination."

Loeff also said that no territory should be acquired by the use of arms.

Loeff implied that the West Bank territory gained by Israel in the 1968 conflict should be given back to the Palestinians.

"Arafat is a moderate PLO leader, there are people in the PLO who are far more extreme," Loeff said.

Palestinians dislike other Arab countries, Loeff said, because they see themselves apart from the rest of the Arab world.

"The Palestinians thought the Arab countries would come and rescue them, but they didn't, and this has complicated the issue," Loeff said.

Borders and territories should not be the main focus of the struggle, but the ability for all to live in peace, Loeff said.

"This is the most difficult situation facing the world at the present time, Israel hasn't been right all the time. Just as the PLO hasn't been wrong all of the time," Loeff said.

Loeff said he believes it would be in the best interest of Israel to change their current policy.

"There is no guarantee that Israel will win the next war. We must not think only of today but of the future generations," LOEFF SAID.

The lecture was sponsored by the Northampton-Amherst Chapter of the New Jewish Agenda Organization.

Women's Week

★Johnston

Johnston described what followed as "a flurry of activity followed by a peaceful calm, followed by business as usual." Although a few bills were passed, he said, they were watered down, and the problems at UMass still exist.

But the investigation did have an effect, Johnston said. People at UMass stopped cooperating with him.

"We got a very cold shoulder," said Johnston. "Vice-Chancellor (George) Beatty called it (the investigation), 'extraneous interference.'"

"I could never understand why Mr. Beatty would never talk to me," Johnston said. "We were blowing the whistle, in a way...but not on people. They (the University) didn't want the bad publicity."

"It really bothered me a lot. Some of these people thought of me as an ogre, even though they hadn't met me," Johnston said.

When Beatty left in July 1981, Johnston said he offered details of the building problems to John L. DeNyse, Beatty's replacement, but Johnston said DeNyse never answered his letters. Since then, Johnston said, he has written to other administrators, state agencies and legislators, all without reply.

"A no would be better than nothing," Johnston said.

Johnston said he really doesn't want to work on the building problems any more. Instead, he said, he would prefer to work on the "Northeast Metric Resource Center," which he established at UMass in 1974. He is more interested in that than in the building problems, but he says he is dedicated to getting something done now.

"The thing I worry about," Johston said, " is that they keep doing the same things over and over again."

★Ward—

Many of the roofs constructed at UMass have had to be replaced in their second or third year of existence. Johnston said all the roofs in Southwest Residentail Area have had to be repaired and the complex is only 15 years old.

"There's absolutely no reason why a flat roof even in this climate can't last 20 or 30 years. I know that because I was a roofer," Johnston said.

But contractors denied access to state jobs unless they are financial contributors to political campaigns, Johnston said. A list of finalists for a state contracting job usually included a dot next to the name of the firm that had made the most campaign contributions. That firm would invariably get the job, Johnston said.

Furthermore, a company that had been sued over poor workmanship on a particular job could still get other jobs because there was no communication on the matter, Johnston said.

The Ward Commission has recommended that companies which do not meet pre-set specifications be automatically debarred from state jobs.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

A separation from Reaganomics

Some Republicans had a tough time of it on November 2nd, and why not? We all know, thanks to the Democratic National Committee and Democratic candidates, that "Republican" and "Reaganomics" are synonomous. We also know, thanks to certain Democratic candidates, that Republicans do not want a nuclear weapons freeze and therefore must want nuclear war. Republican candidates deserved to take a beating, since all they want to do is destroy the ecomony and then start a nuclear war to take care of whatever is left, right? Wrong. Many Republicans faced especially tough races or even defeat simply because they were the target of accusations or incinuations which identified them with unpopular policies or ideas.

Jeff Kelley

Reaganomics, about which there are some common misconceptions, was the most damaging albatross which was unfairly hung around the necks of Republicans this November. Many voters are skeptical about Reaganomics, but they would have done well to remember that our current economic program is the brainchild of our President, not the entire Republican Party. Many Republicans, like many Democrats, went along with the President mainly because they just wanted to give his ideas a chance; a good number of Republicans might have liked to have seen changes in the way President Reagan's economic program was instituted. Yet, when election time rolled around, all Republians were held accountahble for the President's particular brand of economic theory.

This practice of branding all Republicans with responsibility for a policy which has received mixed reviews is especially distressing considering that it was a bi-partisan coalition in Congress that put President Reagan's ideas into law. Because President Reagan's proposals were supported by a good number of Democrats in the Senate and the House, many Republicans are no more responsible for Reaganomics than are many Democrats. It was the Republicans, however, who paid the price for any bad feelings Reaganomics has generated.

Another issue which was unfairly used against some Republicans is the nuclear weapons freeze. Many Republicans oppose the kind of freeze that most liberals support. This does not, however, justify the nuclear scare tactics used by some Democrats against their Republican opponents. Governor Gerry Brown of California, for example, responded to his opponents opposition to a nuclear freeze by running a television advertisement which showed a nuclear explosion followed by a young boy who said, "I want to go on living." Senator Kennedy has approached the nuclear freeze issue in a similar way, tending to imply that opponents of his particular nuclear freeze proposal are maniacs bent on leading the world down the path to nuclear destruction. This sort of arrogant naivete only hurts the chances of acheiving the ultimate goal of freedom from fear of nuclear war.

Certainly not all Democratic candidates who won their respective races did so as a result of unfair campaign practices. There were, however, a number of Republican candidates who were the victims of unfounded negative campaigns launched by their opponents. Much of the voting population, which might already have held some misconceptions about Republican candidates, was an easy target for mud-slinging Democrats and irresponsible campaign tactics. Had this past election been held under different more fair circumstances the outcome for at least a few Republicans would have been very different.

Opportunity for peace

The death of Leonid Brezhnev has been viewed by many as a dangerous time, one of uncertainty and chaos in the Soviet Union. This death, though, offers President Reagan the perfect chance to extend an olive branch of peace to Moscow. In terms of political timing and diplomatic opportunity, Reagan is now at a crossroads in his shaping of U.S. foreign policy.

The time is ripe for Reagan to talk peace with the Soviets for many reasons. Though Yuri Andropov quickly ascended to the top in terms of Soviet political power, the struggle for total preeminence is bound to go on at least for another year or two. When Brezhnev came to power in 1964, for example, it took a full seven years for him to realistically lay claim to political supremacy. Andorpov is now General Secretary of the Communist Party, but he has yet to gain control of the state bureaucracy, an institution which he must control if he hopes to hold onto his present position as tentative Russian leader.

John F. Hudson

It is this uncertainty which President Reagan must now deal with. In the past, his administration took a hard stance against the Soviets. Reagan now has two choices in the wake of a new Soviet leadership. He cold become even tougher. By doing this though, he would push an already paranoid Russia into an even more defensive posture, The chances for a Soviet withdrawl from Afghanistan or a lessening of the pressure on Poland would diminish.

Conversely, Reagan could ease up in his tirade against the Soviets. After almost two years of name calling, threats and empty gestures of peace, President Reagan can now offer some type of substantial peace initiative to the Soviets. He began to move in this general direction on Saturday when he officially lifted the sanctions against the Soviet natural-gas pipeline. By choosing to do this, Reagan is sending a tacit signal to the Soviets that perhaps now he will be willing to deal with them in a more thoughtful, pragmatic manner.

The effects of this softening of Reagan's policy towards Russia has obvious benefits. Economically, the lifting of the sanctions will help both West European economies and our own. The war of words which has been operating at full speed between the two superpowers can perhaps now lessen. And most importantly, by easing up on the Soviets, it will be easier for Reagan, if he chooses, to make the cuts in defense which are so dearly needed at this time. The prospects for a $200 million defecit in the coming fiscal year make this last possibility especially important.

Reagan can perhaps make it easier for a more liberal regime to eventually rise to power in Russia. By easing up on Soviets the President makes it simpler for those in the Soviet Union who sincerely want peace to rise to the top. Less pressure on Moscow, will make it harder for the generals to get their way in Soviets politics.

With the change of leadership in Moscow, the U.S. now has a perfect opportunity to help shape the future leadership in Russia. By changing its feathers from those of a hawk to those of a dove, the U.S. can greatly improve the chances for a peaceful future. It is a change which is long overdue.

Zone elicits thought, not insult

To the Editor:

This is in reference to the UMass Zone (November 15) comic. In a comic strip, how does one call attention to a serious problem: unwanted, or unplanned pregnancy?

I suppose one could have three or four panels of someone lecturing the reader on the whys and hows of birth control. But, sadly, it would be either ignored or forgotten.

If, however, one uses a "blatently sexist" scenario which startles the reader, it will be remembered. I may have "alienated" a few readers, but I also feel that I made people think.

If my actions cause only one person to take a more active role in his/her use of birth control, then it was worth stepping on a few toes.

A plea to end irresponsibility

To the Editor:

Once again a child's right to live is being threatened. In response to Mimi Turchinetz's article in the November 9th issue of the Collegian we would like to expose a sobering fact about abortion. We write this article on Veteran's Day; a day in remembrance of U.S. soldiers who were killed. Tragically however, more innocent children were killed in 1979 due to abortion than were soldiers that died in the history of the U.S.

We agree that all women should have reproductive freedom. It is a woman's option in almost all cases to choose whether she wants to risk becoming pregnant. The solution to this epidemic then is not to kill innocent children who are the products of irresponsibility but to prevent this irresponsibility in the first place.

It's ironic to see how much legislation is passed for the protection of animals. Such legislation is evidence for the value that is placed on animal life. Is not human life even more valuable?

We are confident that we speak for a significant number of silent people who also want to end the murdering of innocent children. "Who'll speak up for the little ones, helpless and half abandoned? They've got a right to choose life they don't want to lose. I've got to speak up. Won't you?"

Nancy wings it with taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan used helicopters from the presidential fleet on three occasions when she traveled alone to Camp David, Md., at a cost to taxpayers of $3,110, White House records show.

As a matter of practice, first ladies rarely use helicopters when they are traveling solo, even on official trips.

Instead of making the journey by car, which takes about 90 minutes, the first lady took a helicopter round trip to inspect the presidential retreat in the Catoctin Mountains for the first time on Jan. 29, 1981. She was accompianied by her Los Angeles decorator, Ted Graber.

A one-way helicopter trip to the isloated camp, about 60 miles from the nation's capital, takes 35 minutes and costs taxpayers $777.72.

That figure is based on an operating cost, provided by the White House, of $1,334 per hour for the VIP Marine helicopters that feature two airline-style upholstered chairs facing each other, sofa-like banks of seats on either side, and a bar.

Mrs. Reagan made one-way helicopter trips last Sept. 10 and Oct. 29. Both times she was meeting her husband, who had flown a separate VIP helicopter to Camp David from Andrews Air Force Base following out-of-town trips.

On all three occasions, the president's wife boarded the helicopter at the Pentagon, rather than the White House South Lawn. Only the president — or special guests on rare occasions — depart from the White House.

Pat Metheny, who played at John M. Greene Hall at Smith Friday.

Metheny at Smith

PAT METHENY GROUP
John M. Greene Hall, Smith College
Friday November 12

By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Correspondent

What a strange valley we live in. In New York and Boston Pat Metheny regularly sells out concerts with little or no publicity. Meanwhile, in Northampton, he can't even fill the John M. Greene Hall. If you didn't attend the Pat Metheny show this past Friday night, you were in good company; only ¾ of the hall was full. Too bad, it was an excellent show.

Pat Metheny, currently the biggest name in jazz guitar, certainly proved he deserves the honors bestowed upon him. He played for two and a half hours and, to quote a friend, was; "awesome, totally awesome."

While many of the compositions performed were known to the audience from Pat's albums, nearly half the concert contained unrecorded original material. Nana Vasconcelos, the group's new percussionist, added an exotic flavor to Pat's older material and has certainly become an intergral member of the group. Pat did not just play his own compositions, one of the highlights of the show was a piece by Keith Jarret "Wind Up." Probably the most exiciting part of the show was during drummer, Dan Gottlieb's solo. In the middle of the solo, all the members of the group began playing various percussion instruments, each player performing a different rhythm. They increased the tempo and the volume, and then, without warning stoped on cue. Then, just as suddenly, the band began playing again without a single member missing a beat. This ability to perform in ensemble was what impressed me most about the band. Whether playing a straight-ahead bebop jazz number or a heavy rock fusion piece, the group was communicating with one another constantly. This sort of high caliber misicianship is incredible to listen to.

Everyone got at least one major solo, but the show really belonged to Pat Metheny. He got nearly every known sound out of his guitar, from chimes to pure harmonics. On some songs he used a new digital prototype electric guitar which may well become the instrument of the future. The show was so good the band was called back for two encores.

To sum, its too bad groups like Metheny's do not come to our area more often. But then again, it's no wonder if no one attends the concerts. By the way, where were you Friday night?

The English Beat: A preview

By PHILLIP PLANTE
Collegian Staff

One of the originators of post-punk British ska, The English Beat, bring their eight member dance band to the Campus Center Auditorium tomorrow night in what might be one of the best UPC shows this semester.

Based in the industrial city of Birmingham, England, the Beat remain articulate and intelligent representatives of one of the most troubled generations of youth in British history and members of one of the most critically respected bands in England.

In Britain, where the police can arrest people for "suspicious" actions, it's not unusual for pop groups such as The Beat, Sex Pistols, or The Clash to have their music banned. Singles from Wha'ppen?, the second Beat album, were banned due to their political nature. The band will be playing those same cuts here at UMass however.

Developing in the waning days of the punk movement, ska combines the calypso reggae rhythms of England's considerable West Indian community with the rock and roll punk sounds of the white youth. Ranking Roger, the drummer for the Beat, worked for a headlining punk band before hooking up with the Beat.

Originally a four piece band, the Beat first gained exposure playing with the already established Selecter. The Specials, who had recently formed Two-toned records, offered the Beat a chance to cut a single. "Tears of a Clown" (a Smokey Robinson classic) made the top ten in Britain, and began their steady climb. Beat concert appearances almost always sell out and two of their albums, I Just Can't Stop It and Wha'ppen? are among the five top-selling albums in the U.K. today. The Beat's new album, Special Beat Service, though less politically oriented, is just as upbeat and danceable.

The show starts at 9 p.m. Tuesday and be warned— dancing is encouraged. The C.C.A. chairs have been removed for the benefit of those who would dance in spite of them— enjoy.

Seesaw has ups and downs

SEESAW
Bowker Auditorium
Friday, November 12

By PAM MADNICK
Collegian Staff

"It's not where you start, it's where you finish." If these lyrics really hold meaning for the members of the Music Theatre Guild, they are sure to finish on top next weekend.

The Guild opened its forty-seventh season this weekend in Bowker Auditorium with Michael Bennett's Seesaw. The production was directed by Billy Collura and choreographed by Alicia Cunningham.

Seesaw centers around a tall lawyer from Omaha, Nebraska who falls in love with a short Jewish dancer from New York.

Tracy Nina Singer was outstanding as Gittel Mosca. Her characterization and singing were excellent and resembled a Barbara Streisand of years past. She goes all out when she sings "Welcome to Holiday Inn" as a sexy receptionist aiming to please Jerry. Although she's the funniest person in the musical, you really hurt for her when she sings "Nobody Does It Like Me," about ruined relationships. Poor Gittel! For such a small person, Singer really has a powerful voice with unbelievable potential.

Brian Switzer may have been cast for his height, but he did a fine job portraying Jerry Ryan. His facial expressions during "My City," where he was teased and tackled by five naughty neighborhood girls are unforgettable.

A major standout of Seesaw was Paul Mulcahy, who plays David, Gittel's dance instructor. Mulcahy, who starred last year in the Guild production of Sugar, loves being on stage and you can tell. He had good contact with the audience and excellent expression especially during "It's Not Where You Start." Everything about him is captivating throughout.

Kathleen Marshall, as Sophie, gets the whole cast dancing during her wild "Ride Out the Storm," dressed in a pink and blue rugby sweater and black leather jeans. This one song reminded me of the Guild's spring production of Godspell because the audience really seemed involved.

The funniest scene in this whole story is when Sophie stars in the East 16th Street production of Hamlet in "its original Puerto Rican." As the majority of the cast sits on stage as the overly silly audience of the show within a show, Sophie drinks some poisoned wine and dies for a good three minutes — twirling around the stage, coughing all over the audience.

Visually, Seesaw was well-designed with bright costumes and flying scenery. Probably the best scene aesthetically was during the first number, when Mulcahy sang "Seesaw" against a backdrop of the Brooklyn Bridge and the entire cast frozen in different positions. As the song progresses, the cast comes alive in pairs of two, dressed in white flowing costumes.

Another great scene is during "Chapter 54, Number 1909," where the entire cast comes at the audience in a triangular shape reminiscent of A Chorus Line (another Bennett production.)

Overall, Seesaw was a good show. The first night, like any first night had too many technical flaws — the curtain lowering too soon, a loud stagehand in tap shoes moving scenery, an untimely spotlight. Nevertheless, the Guild worked out their technical problems last year by the second weekend and I have faith they will do so again this year.

WANTED:

The Collegian, in conjunction with the Union Video Center, will soon be launching a daily half-hour news program to be aired over the cable TV system in the Campus Center and Student Union Building. We need a coordinator to write, rewrite and edit wire copy and Collegian staff reports which will then be read over the cable TV. Low pay, but great opportunity to help create a new UMass student service. Some experience in writing and television work is helpful. Bring us your ideas. Apply to Ed Levine in the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, by Friday, Nov. 19. The Collegian and UVC are equal opportunity employers.

Stickers defeated in OT

By JENN KUPPER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's field hockey team are hanging up their skirts today, after ending their season in the first round of the NCAA tournament, with yesterday's loss to Iowa. Iowa defeated UMass on the UConn field 1-0 in double overtime.

Former coach of UM field hockey, Judith Davidson's Iowa team entered the NCAA tourney with the most wins of any team in the nation. As of yesterday's game they had 21 wins. Iowa goes on to play Connecticut tomorrow at UConn.

"My kids played well," said UM coach Hixon.

The first half of the game proved to all that the game was certainly being played by top teams. Iowa's play was pronounced by their quick reactions to UMass combinations, and ability to retrieve immediately. UMass' game was a put together effort from everybody. The energy they lacked for last week's UConn game was present yesterday.

Offensively and defensively, each member of the squad stood out alone at one point of time in the game. UMass' difficulty in scoring (which has been seen all season) was again present however.

At the 22 minute mark, UMass senior Sandy Kobel gave the game the punch it needed, unfortunately Kobel's beautiful flick into the Iowa goal was called back on a call of dangerous play. This flick and the call that followed it were the story of yesterday's game.

According to Hixon, "The officials took this game away from us." The flick was a clean shot above everybody. It dropped two inches from the top of the net. The question at hand was, who was that ball dangerous for? Certainly not the fully protected goalie, the only person it came close to.

Shortly after this upset in the game, Iowa put on the power and gave UM a big scare as they brought the ball down and scattered the Massachusetts defense everywhere. Junior Nancy Goode made a beautiful save for goalie Patty Shea, who was still recovering from the initial Iowa shot seconds before.

UMass' defense played for 20 minutes without newly named All-American team member — Megan Donnelly. Donnelly was out of the game momentarily due to knee problems. However, one link missing from the chain was not enough for Iowa to break through. The tremendous efforts of Goode, Chris Coughlin, Andrea Muccini, and co-captains Ro Tudryn and Carol Progulski prevented a score in the regulation period.

"We were there," said Hixon. "Iowa was good, but we out played them."

It took Iowa the second set of seven and a half minutes of overtime to put a score onto the board. Although Iowa walked off the field the victor, the outcome of yesterday's game will be under scrutiney for some time to come.

Hixon's team entered this season knowing that it was a rebuilding year. This year the team used a different formation with their eleven players on the field, they no longer had a Judy Strong to feed the ball to, and their offense was just as much the defense and vice versa.

Last year, the field hockey team made it to the NCAA championship game, succumbing to Connecticut 4-1. This year, one that was considered a building block to next year, they ended up with a record of 15-4-1, and played within the first round of the tournament. Next year should be quite a year for the stickwomen.

Yesterday's game was the last for seniors Tina Coffin, Tudryn and Sandy Kobel. Coffin and Tudryn will be seen in UMass uniforms soon enough, though, as they play on the softball and lacrosse teams respectively, in the spring.

Heartbreak in Florida

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

ORLANDO, FLA. — The hard working University of Massachusetts women's soccer team may have had the edge in play in yesterday's NCAA quarterfinal match against the third ranked and undefeated University of Central Florida, but luck was not its side as the squad was beaten 2-1.

In the 75 degree Florida weather and before a crowd of about 200, the two teams battled it out and played a physical, rough game of soccer.

"UMass was the best team we've faced all year," Central Florida coach Jim Brody said. "They didn't have very much luck."

The Minutewomen didn't have very much luck and UCF All- American goalie Amy Ford and defender Linda Gancitano didn't help much either. Ford made great saves all through the game, especially in the second period when the Minutewomen played their best. Gancitano played a key role for Florida and prevented some very close UMass scoring chances.

The three goals were all scored in the first half within a period of 7:27. UCF scored first exactly 13 minutes into the game. Stacey Nelson put the shot past UMass goalie Laurie Webber.

One minute and 25 seconds later, freshman Paula Stashis tied the score for UMass. Stashis got a nice cross from another freshman, Nadia Komarowski from the left side and beat Ford with a nice clean shot. It was only the third goal scored on UCF all season.

The tie didn't last long as the top scorer for Florida, Laura Dryden, beat Webber at the 39:27 mark to give UCF the 2-1 edge. That's where the score stayed despite several Minutewomen scoring opportunities.

Webber played a good game under pressure. She was replacing Tammie Easton who didn't make the trip to Florida because she unexpectedly got sick.

In the second half, UMass outplayed and dominated UCF. Many opportunities arose to score including when Stacey Flionis got around Gancitano and Ford. Flionis, who UM coach Kalekeni Banda said played excellent and created opportunities, took the shot but a fullback got back in time to make the save.

Freshman Jamie Watson had a close chance when she came down the middle with the ball and beat one defender and had Ford alone in the net. Watson shot low and hard from 10 yards out to the lefthand corner of the net but Ford made a great diving save.

Within two minutes of Watson's shot, Ellen Taggart was robbed of a possible goal by Gancitano. Beating the UCF defender, Taggart was ready to go in on the goalie, Ford, when Gancitano reached out and pulled her by the jersey. No penalty shot was rewarded because it happened outside of the box.

The frustrations of the afternoon were punctuated when UMass had a final scoring chance with just ten seconds left on the clock.

Christine Taggart crossed the ball from deep in the corner of the right side of the field to Stashis who took the shot on the bounce. It just went wide of the post and the season ended.

Volleyball team ends season

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

PRINCETON, N.J. — Some teams that have losing seasons can't end it fast enough. They want out. Not the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team. After a stirring end-of-the season win over Fairleigh-Dickinson, the UMass women were ready for more.

The Minutewomen spikers split their two matches in the Princeton Classic this weekend, losing one to Princeton while walloping Fairleigh-Dickinson University in the other game.

UMass toppled division I FDU in three straight matches 15-6, 15-7, 15-11 and never let up. Massachusetts put it all together in this match. The blocking was there, the serving was there, and the defense was there, propelling the Minutewomen to victory.

Captain Patti Philbin ended up her career in fine fashion by playing her best game of the year. Philbin and Leslie Smith combined to be a blocking force, a wall that FDU had a hard time breaching.

Offensively, Philbin led the way, too. She hit one spike so hard that it hit one FDU player in the face and left her on the floor for over a minute. Sally Maher and Sue Mudry "crushed the ball" and Leslie Smith never blocked better, according to Sortino.

Setters Patti Grant and Karen Gottesman played fantastic defense and the team overall played very well.

"It was an all-out effort and we never played that well this season," said Sortino.

Against Princeton, UMass played well but not well enough to win. UMass fell behind and just could not get back into the game and catch up. UM fell in three, 9-15, 8-15, 10-15.

With the split, UM ended up with a losing record, the first under Sortino, 25-27. But, UMass will only lose one player next year, the awesome Philbin. With 10 returning players, Massachusetts fortunes should be even better next season.

The UMass team improved immensely this season by playing a great deal of tough division I opponents over the course of the year. The potential to win is there.

Sortino summed it up well, "The FDU win was the most satisfying way to end up the season. I can't wait for next year!"

Wildcats not so wild to the Minutemen

UM has a piece of the YC pie

Jim Simeone had a stellar afternoon on Saturday as he went 11 for 16 in the passing department.

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

The most confusing and unpredictable Yankee Conference season in recent years is complete, and the University of Massachusetts secured a quarter of the conference crown with a punishing 27-0 stomping of the University of New Hampshire before 4,871 frostbiten fans at Alumni Stadium Saturday.

A Minuteman loss would have left the Minutemen in the conference basement with New Hampshire, but instead UMass coach Bob Pickett and his team put a nice finishing touch on what turned out to be a roller coaster ride through the 1982 Yankee Conference season.

"Coming back from Maine and on the ride back from BU, things really didn't look good," said Pickett, refering to the disastrous two week stretch when UMass dropped games to Maine 42-24, and BU 42-6.

UMass will share the title with the Black Bears, the Terriers and the Huskies from UConn, who defeated Rhode Island 26-21 Saturday to earn their portion of the title.

Now conference officials have the task of selecting the conference representative, probably Maine or BU, to the NCAA Division 1-AA playoffs which get underway in a couple of weeks.

There is no doubt that the University of Massachusetts football team that overmatched New Hampshire Saturday was a much better team than the one that struggled through a four week stretch earlier in the year. One big reason for the improvement is the addition of Jim Simeone to the Massachusetts offense.

The freshman quarterback had his second consecutive impressive game after a shaky opening performance against UConn, throwing 11-16 passing for 223 yards and a touchdown. At one time in the third quarter Simeone had hit nine of his first ten passes.

But it was the Umass defense, led by linebacker Craig Lesinski, who had two intereceptions, nine assisted tackles and also had a quarterback sack to his credit, that gave UMass such a convincing win over the Wildcats.

"It was a great accomplishment by our defense to shut down New Hampshire," said Pickett. "We beat a decent football team today."

Shut down is an understatement. The UMass defense held the Wildcats to 67 total yards, and extended an unbelievable streak. The last time the University of New Hampshire scored a touchdown against the University of Massachusetts was in the first quarter in a game played in 1978.

New Hampshire never really threatened to break the embarassing streak while the Minutemen completely dominated the line of scrimmage, piling up 476 total yards, and moved the ball almost at will in the second half.

After UMass went out to a rather boring 10-0 half time lead on a 13 yard touchdown run by pearson and a 22 yard Bob Ross field goal, UMass started to dominate action completely in the second half.

While New Hampshire quarterbacks Rick Leclerc and Chris Collins couldn't even get New Hampshire a second half first down, Simeone fired for seven for ten through the air for 177 second half yards.

On one scoring drive that covered 80 yards in 6 plays, Simeone hit Ron Mangarelli with a 41 yard bomb down the right sideline and then hit Mangarelli again with a 37 yard touchdown pass two plays later.

Mangarelli caught six passes for 139 yards on the day. He was injured in the fourth quarter after making an over the

Men's basketball: McLaughlin's second year

Rebuilding the hoop program

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

EDITORS NOTE: This is the first of a series of articles previewing this year's men's basketball team.

It was something along the line of the fall of the Roman Empire. The University of Massachusetts had enjoyed success with its basketball program for many years and then, all of a sudden, things started to turn sour.

The crumble was abrupt and unpleasant. The team that had once been the pride of the school was shunned by all but its most steadfast fans. Jokes about what was amounting to a monumental losing streak were prevalent not only around campus but also all over the state.

A veteran coach quit and his assistant took over for awhile but the end result was still the same: UMass basketball was the whipping post of division one basketball.

Last year, however, the team turned the corner. Despite posting a 7-20 record, the Minutemen were once again a team to be reckoned with. Basketball respectability returned to the Curry Hicks Cage and with it came the sellout crowds that had been missing for the previous couple of years.

The man behind the reselling of UMass basketball was a first year coach who had been a Minuteman in the days of NIT berths and 20 win seasons, head coach Tom McLaughlin.

McLaughlin became an instant personality at UMass. His charismatic style of coaching made him a marketable media figure. He, in turn, was able to let the UMass fans know that basketball was back on track again.

A major factor in McLaughlin's success is his ability to recruit quality ballplayers and "sell" the campus and the basketball program to them.

"Recruiting-wise, we've been as successful as we possibly could be," said McLaughlin of his first two years of drawing talent to perform in the Cage.

Success, in terms of the recruiting, can be measured through last year's two top performers Donald Russell and Horace Neysmith. Both Russell and Neysmith were freshmen and as such both were in McLaughlin's first recruiting class.

Along with Russell and Neysmith came George Ramming, Bobby Braun, Ron Young and a red-shirted Skip Connors. The only walk-on to make the squad was Hal Shaw.

That was last year's class. This year, McLaughlin once again pulled more than one rabbit out of his hat as he landed four more legitimate ballplayers in A.J. Wynder, John Hempel, Darryl Carter and Tom Emerson.

"I wanted the University of Massachusetts to have the best team that they could possibly have because I'm an alumni of the place and I believe that one of the ways that it can be enhanced academically is to have good athletic teams," said McLaughlin.

McLaughlin knows that the team isn't all the way there yet but, many of the pieces to the puzzle are now in hand and, with the proper placement, a whole basketball team will emerge.

"I think if we had drawn a plan and said 'This is what we're gonna do' it couldn't have happened any better," said McLaughlin.

It will be a question of how McLaughlin, and his assistants Mark Shea and Ron Gerlufsen, can handle the players, press and public this year. If they can do it as well as last year, then this season will be a whole lot of fun for everyone, especially the fans.

"When you're coaching at a university you're in the people business," said McLaughlin.

And it's a business that he is very good at.

"That's the tallest library in the world. . . You'll love it here. . ."

Truth Of Black Panther Murder Comes To Light

Fred Hampton, Black Panther Party member assassinated by Chicago cops.

By Keith Johnson

The truth about the death of Black Panther Party leader Fred Hampton is coming close to being recognized by the court, government, and the public. As of October 25, the civil rights lawsuit charging violations by city, state, and federal governments against Hampton and six other people is close to an end.

Fred Hampton was the chairman of the Illinios Black Panther Party. Perhaps because of the fact that CHicago is the center of Black political activity, Hampton became one of the most outspoken of the Black Panther leaders. He followed Marxist-Leninist political ideologies and supported the Black Panther self-defense policy.

The Black Panther Party organized itself under the idea of self-defense of the Black community. They bore arms and patrolled the streets to protect the community from unjustifiable police harrassment and arrest. These patrols would also carry copies of legal rights to insure that a confrontation with police would be dealt with on a legal basis. But the Black Panthers were also known for their community support projects such as the Breakfast for Children program.

On December 4, 1969, 14 Chicago policemen under the authority of Cook County State Attorney Edward Hanrahan raided an apartment at 2337 W. Monroe Street in Chicago. The police had a warrent for the search of illegal weapons in the apartment.

The police fired more than 80 rounds of gunfire into the apartment. There was a heavy concentration of machine gun and shotgun fire directed toward one living room wall and two bedrooms. There was never any evidence that any of the seven people in the apartment had fired a weapon.

At the end of the pre-dawn raid Fred Hampton and Black Panther Monty Clark of Peoria, Illinois were dead from gunshot wounds. It was later verified that Hampton never rised from the bed that he died in. Four other people in the apartment were also injured in the raid.

Later that day State Attorney Hanrahan held a press conference. At the conference he stated that the occupants of the apartment had fired first and that the police had returned fire. He exhibited a photograph of a shotgun riddled wall. It was later found by investigating reporters that the suspected bullet holes had actually been nail heads.

The Coroner's Jury came to a verdict of justifiable homocide. But a later Federal Grand Jury came to the conclusion that the police report stating that they fired in self-defense was false. But still no police were indicted on any charges.

In 1972, a lawsuit charging civil rights violations and asking $47.7 million in damages was filed against 28 defendants. The State Attorney was included as one of the defendants. Charges against 21 of the defendants were dropped by Federal District Judge Joseph Sam Perry before the case went to the jury. When the jury deadlocked in the case against the remaining defendants, Perry dismissed the charges on them also.

In 1979, the case was appealed and the court stated that the case against the defendants be given a new trial. This court indicated that there had been obstructions by government officials who withheld certain revalent documents that were essential to the case.

In 1980, after being appealed to the Supreme Court, the court refused to dismiss the case and ordered it sent back to the District Court.

The case is now about to be settled for approximately $1.85 million. The settlement will be paid by city, state, and federal governments. The mothers of Fred Hampton and Mark Clark will share the settlement along with the seven other plaintiffs.

Yet the money can not bring back the lives of Fred Hampton and Mark Clark. Nor can it cover the grief suffered by their family and friends. But what is more important is that the courts have proved that not only were the city, state and federal governments involved in the organized killing of Hampton and Clark, but that they also tried to cover up the murder. But to this day, although it has been noted that the police were all but guilty of murder, no police or government officials have been indicted.

The murders of Fred Hampton and Mark Clark are but two incidents in the history of the government's suppression of the Black liberation movement. The Black Panther Party was broken up through a series of arrests and killings. But what is ironic is that these two leaders join the list of other murdered leaders. Whether they were moderates such as Medger Evers and Martin Luther King, Jr. or so-called radicals such as Malcolm X, Fred Hampton and Mark Clark, they were all murdered in a time span of ten years. To believe that so many important Black people could have been killed by coincidence in that short time instead of an organized planned attack by powerful forces is absurd.

Direction Given For 'Human Relations' Effort

Black Provost Addresses Umass Faculty Symposium

By Angela Brown

J. Herman Blake addresses the Faculty Symposium on Human Relations in a talk entitled "Beyond Civility: Human Relations in the Academy" Photo by Sheila Smith

Faculty Symposium on Human Relations:

"While none of us are to blame for our history, we are all the consequences of it...we come from long years of trafficking in human beings. We come from long years of expelling others from their homeland and appropriating it to our own selfish purposes...."stated Dr. J. Herman Blake, Provost at the University of California, Santa Cruz, in a keynote address entitled "Beyond Civility" to the Faculty Symposium on Human Relations, last Thursday, November 11, 1982.

J. Herman Blake is widely known as one of the foremost leaders in the field of higher education. The address and the Symposium were given in an effort to "legitimize issues of human relations" according to UMass Assistant Provost Johnetta Cole, who gave introductions and welcomed participants. The event was attended by approximately 150-200 concerned faculty members and interested community observers.

Dr. Blake provided an insightful discussion of the history behind programs like "The Year Toward Civility" (Academic Year 81-82) and the necessity to go beyond such programs in an educational setting such as that of Amherst. He provided an in-depth analysis of the responsibilities of faculty to "...engage in a process of discovery, creativity and instruction which will benefit the people of this state and this nation." In Dr. Blake's words: "As the University begins to reflect more of the diversity of the society, a positive approach to human relations is an appropriate effort to build upon the richness of our diversity and make it a springboard to new understandings."

Provost Blake's presentation focussed primarily on the need for all of the Univeristy's teaching staff to incorporate issues of racism, sexism and anti-semitism into the broadest range of academic disciplines, and to incorporate these issues into the faculty-person's approach to undergraduate teaching in order to avoid perpetuating these problems. In addition to promoting the inclusion of issues of racism, etc. into the programmatic and curricular aspects of teaching, Dr. Blake also highlighted the importance of sensitivity to certain theoretical shortcomings which transmit a view of the world based on racist, sexist or otherwise oppressive premises. "Concepts such as the 'culturally deprived child', 'the disorganized Black family', 'the culture of poverty', and the like are both incorrect and offensive," said Dr. Blake.

He also emphasized the importance of initiating ongoing efforts on the questions of racism, sexism and so on, by calling for the full commitment of everyone whose involvement is necessary for success. The initiation of ongoing efforts was one of the professed goals of the Symposium on Human Relations, which was organized by the Working Group on Academic Resources, from the Chancellor's Commission on Civility.

"...If there is no substantive commitment from the faculty...and creative leadership from the administration then this entire convocation will be nothing more than a tinkling bell and a sounding cymbal, with nothing substative forthcoming," stated Dr. Blake.

Dr. Blake also warned against allowing the burden to fall upon the untenured, women and minority faculty, saying "untenured, women and minority must be spared from undue burdens so that they can establish their professional and research careers." "...There must be strong involvement of the tenured male, Anglo faculty who have much to gain from such a program as well as a lot to contribute."

Finally, Dr. Blake emphasized the importance of student input into the effort to eradicate racism, sexism and other forms of oppression. "We would not have learned anything at all at Santa Cruz if we had not developed sensitive and effective feedback mechanisms," he concluded.

Canadian Doctor Provides Hard Evidence Of Israel's Military Intervention in Lebanon

An Eyewitness Account On Lebanon War

by Tracey Bryant

Dr. Chris Giannou of Canada spoke to a UMass audience last , November 8

Dr. Chris Giannou, a Canadian surgeon recounted his experiences in Lebanon since the war. He worked in Lebanon with the Palestine Red Crescent Society, which is a member of the International League of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies based in Geneva. He worked in two hospitals during his two year stay in Lebanon. The first was the central Red Crescent hospital in the southern city of Nabatiyyah. He also intermittently worked as a surgeon with the Red Crescent hospital in Sidon. He witnessed the bombing of Sidon and the destruction of the Ain al-Hilweh refugee Camp.

He saw the largest refugee camp which held 80,000 people bombed , "and as usual after the bombardment was desolation. The terrain had been disfigured. There were black craters filled with rubble and debris."

One of the hospitals he was working in was hit several times. "The patients were afraid to stay in their beds. About 4,000 civilians in the hospital were fleeing refugee camps. They figured a hospital was safe- it wouldn't be bombed. One woman came in labor, we shoved her in the closet. She gave birth, was hit by a piece of shrapnel flying in through the window and died leaving a five hour old infant."

He said that though the Israeli government denied it, they did use cluster bombs. Cluster bombs are anti-personnel bombs-they leave buildings in tact while destroying people. He said that they also used phosphorous bombs which fix a person in the exact position of impact (like a statue), and then incinerates the person within two or three hours.

Among people- both Palestinians and Israeli soldiers, "There was a lot of confusion going on." Dr. Giannou said that one time Israeli planes dropped leaflets telling people to evacuate the camp. The leaflet did not reach into the camp, and did not specify where to evacuate to. A woman asked one Israeli soldier who told her to go down by the front, and on the way back to tell the other people, another soldier told her that they should stay in the camp. Dr. Giannou said that the soldiers were not always clear on exactly what was going on and what they were to do.

On two separate occasions, the Dr. met an Israeli soldier that was also a doctor. He said that both were men of "magnanimity." With rising emotion he told the audience that "we should all conduct ourselves in peace the way these two men conducted themselves in war." "They were more interested in saving lives" than in the Israeli army carrying out the specific momentary objective.

Dr. Giannou was eventually arrested. He, like the others taken prisoner, had to parade in front of three jeeps. "The most terrifying experience was having to stand in front of some hooded bastard totally unable to defend yourself." He said that there were men accusing other men left and right. The Israeli soldiers wanted to hear that they were PLO members. Dr. Giannou said that sometimes people accused others because of petty vendettas, but more often to ingratiate themselves with the soldiers; fear. One man would be singled out, an "X" marked on his shirt, and then he would be taken away. "This continued."

Dr. Giannou was taken to the Convent School of Sidon. Classrooms were used for interrogations and the courtyard was the detention area. Out in the courtyard, the heat ranged from 95 degrees to 105. There were beatings. He said that they ranged from simple kicks, slaps, etc. to beatings with the use of chair and table legs and he even saw a cat-o-nine-tails used on one person. Two prisoners he examined were dead from having been out in the sun for fifteen minutes after a severe beating by four or five Israeli soldiers.

Not all the soldiers were this brutal, the doctor insisted. He told the audience that some Israeli soldiers tried to put an end to the beatings and tried to alleviate the prisoners' suffering, by bringing them extra water or loosening the hand ties. But often the commanding officers witnessed the beatings,and they did nothing about them.

The Canadian and two Norwegian doctors were never beaten. The guards (soldiers) knew that they were doctors from their respective countries. "Each time new guards came to take the shift, they were informed," who were the Norwegians and the Canadian. "We were often engaged in discourse by some of the soldiers."

He was kept at the detention center for two days- June 13-15 (1982). He was then brought to the Megiddo (Armageddon) prison in the north of Israel until June 20. He was finally released after pressure from the Canadian government. The Norwegians were also released. He said that there were many others still in the detention camps that did no more or less than he, but who did not have the Canadian (or Norwegian) government behind them. Of the prison he remarked that, "It was ironic that the men received receipts with the words "prisoner of war" for their valuables-(like his Canadian passport), when they were not accorded prisoner of war status.

The War

There was "blind shelling of the civilian population." "There are wards and wards of children, because like Latin America, Africa and Asia, over 50 percent of the population is under 16 years of age." The doctor stated

NATIONAL NEWS

The Klan's New Face

by Joe Ganon

"Why are you here today "
"I like to be with 'good white people'."
"Why did you join the Klan "
"Because I like to be with 'good white people'."
"As opposed to whom "
"Unh-unh. No comment."

This exchange with the Klansman took place at a rally in Rockville, Maryland, sponsored by the Invisible Empire of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, on Nov. 6. The Klansman's reluctance to verbalize what was obviously implied in "good white people" illustrate the new face some Klan leaders are attempting to project in public, especially to the media.

Bill Wilkinson, the leader of the Invisible Empire, seems to personify this "new" Klan image. As the main, and only speaker at Rockville, billed as a "support your local police rally," Wilkinson was the voice of rational racism.

Addressing the 25 Klansmen, 40 journalists, and 300 policemen, Wilkinson claimed not to be a racist, but a "segregationist." He did not speak of the genetic inferiority or superiority of races, but, rather, of the naturalness of segregating the races. A process which would, "of course," be mutually benefitting to all.

Bill Wilkinson doesn't hate black people. Hell, he "doesn't even know any."

What Wilkinson does know, is that times have changed. He recognizes that crude racial slurs and stereotyping are no longer "acceptable" to respectable mainstream America. To accomodate this change, Wilkinson now speaks against affirmative action, forced bussing, crime and white flight.

With this kind of rhetoric masking his racist ideas, it is no surprise that Wilkinson points to the policies of the Reagan administration, as he did at Rockville, for proof that he has only the interests of the "white race" at heart.

But there should be no mistaking it: a new look does not constitute new actions. The National Anti-Klan Committee, based in Atlanta, Georgia, has documented no fewer than 500 cases of Klan violence in the past 18 months. The shotgunning of three black women in Chatanooga, Tennessee, and the video-taped murder of five anti-Klan activists in Greensboro, North Carolina, are only the two most notorious. For Blacks, Jews, gays, anti-Klan activists, or labor organizers in the South, the threat of Klan violence is a constant.

And that threat is growing. In a recent issue of the "Gay Community News" (GCN), an article filed from Atlanta ran a profile on the man responsible for the recent formation of the Confederation of Klans. Ed Fields, GCN reports,is the "Goebels" of the Confederation; an umbrella organization which has united seven Klan factions in eight states and Canada.

As the ideologue of the Confederation, Fields is promoting Klan unity which he envisions translating into political power. Fields has also taken it upon himself to build international ties between the Klan and European fascist organizations, like the British Movement in England.

Like Wilkinson, GCN reports, Fields is a rational racist who "likes polo shirts and talks like a college professor." However, even Fields cannot help but let his mask slip occasionally. The reporter for GCN recounted a speech given by Fields at a private rally sponsored by his New Order Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. (The paramilitary wing of his National States' Rights Party.) From the back of a pick-up truck, his face red with emotion, Fields shouted at the crowd that it would be far better if nuclear war destroyed America, as long as enough (50,000 or so) white people survived to rebuild the white race, than for America to continue on its slide into decadence.

That men like Fields and Wilkinson are demonstrating the political sophistication necessary to attempt to turn the Klan into a political force is frightening and outrageous.

But why now Why after years of bitter factionalizing was Ed Fields successful in forming the Confederation of Klans Why, after 50 years, does the Klan intend to demonstrate its strength by marching on Washington Nov. 27

Bill Wilkinson practically summed it up himself in Rockville: The Klan senses an ideological kinship with the Reagan administration. Hidden behind the myth of Reagan's mandate, but even more so in the policies of his administration, the Fields and Wilkinsons sense the feeling of frustration pervading white America.

Just as Reagan has profitted from the failure of liberalism to successfully manage the economy, or even to offer new ideas to old problems, so, too, do the Klan ideologues seek to capitalize on the easily manipulated fears of white America. Wilkinson and Fields are mimicking, in public, the rhetoric of Reaganism: states' rights, affirmative action, communism, welfare cheats, etc., while still retaining their old chimeras of race mixing, race wars, the spread of homosexuality, and the international jewish conspiracy.

The Ku Klux Klan, from its ideologues on down to its thugs, is a real and growing danger to the precious freedoms we still manage to extract from our political system.

But to fight the Klan, to defeat it, we cannot simply cut off its head. For the Klan to die we must remove from it the body of people who support it. They are people filled with fear, anxiety, desperation, and a sense of hopelessness which finds expression, no matter how demented or ugly or violent, in the Klan.

Until there is a progressive social movement which recognizes the depths of this contry's politcal problems, and can deal effectively with them, the Klan and groups like it, will remain, an increasingly louder voice speaking to a nation wandering in the dark.

Because the Klan is a social disease, does not mean that its influence cannot be minimized. That an organization with such a long history of lynching, arson, murder, and rape, can openly operate on a political and para-military level, is a statement in itself.

Yet our government has failed to use even harsh legal measures to stifle the Klan. The tragic and intolerable truth here is that the Klan is not now, nor ever has it been perceived as a threat to the U.S. government.

Bill Wilkinson doesn't want to hurt America. Hell, he just wants to make it safe for "good white people."

that, "Usually there were 50-60 patients per half hour." During the seizure of Beirut "there were 200-300 patients" per half hour. The most severely injured usually had to be sacrificed- "left to die in order to save the lives of ten who needed simple surgery." When Dr. Giannou left Beirut July 17, 1981, there were 700 dead and 1,000 wounded.

"There was a massacre before the massacre,"the doctor tated. "Winter in Lebanon is devastating. Even in peace time it is catastrophic. The infantile diarrhea is endemic." He said that the basic services like sanitation, water supply, etc.- the basic needs of the people, which the PLO had set up organizations to provide for, could no longer be carried out because of the invasion. "Many will face this winter with paper shelters."

"Lebanon is a country under military occupation," he continued. The people wander, are always on the move trying to avoid fighting; trying to avoid bullets and bombs.

Even the refugee camps and hospitals are not immune to bombings. "For fifteen years Israel has been doing police work," in Lebanon.

Israel, Israel's Objectives

"There is an Israeli paranoia about security." "Israel has the third strongest army in the world." "It's all right to have security, but it's always the Arabs that lose wars and land,"said Dr. Giannou. "There is no such thing as a defendable border today. The Israel-Egypt border is Israel's most secure border and that is because of a political understanding, not because it is militarily defendable." "When you define security only in military terms, you are militarizing your society."

"Israel," Dr. Giannou stated, "is becoming more and more militarized." "What you will have is a militarized state." "It has been said that Israel is no longer a state with an army, but an army with a state." The doctor also said that Begin has been called Defense Minister Sharon's first political prisoner.

Though 100,000 demonstrated in Tel Aviv against the war, Sharon continued to make statements to the Hebrew press-(The Jerusalem Post and others), that defined his intentions as militaristic and expansionary. In statements to the press, he has even mentioned Iran, asking what was to stop him once he secured some of the other regions. It has been said in some Israeli circles, "Sharon could lead us to Curachi if we let him." "Israel's strategic interests run from Chad to Iran", said Giannou. It is clear, Giannou continued, that Sharon intends for Israel to thoroughly control the region.

Also clear is the objectives of Israel for carrying out this war. "It has been printed in the Hebrew press that it is the Israeli government's avowed aim to annex the West Bank," and "to crush any political opposition by the Palestinian people." It has been stated by the government that their goal is "the eradication of any Palestinian structural influence". Dr. Giannou said that the government is attempting to rid the area-(the West Bank) of "any institutional Palestinian presence."

The Politics of the War

Chris Giannou said that the basic issue was, "do you believe in self-determination of people." "The Palestinians have the right to determine what kind of political structure they want." "The vast majority of Palestinians feel represented by the PLO. The relationship is an organic one." The PLO, "symbolizes their national aspirations."

He went on to say that "trying to make the PLO look like a small terrorist group lurking in corners, is a mistake." "In almost all cases, the main organization of a national liberation struggle is called terrorist. People walking around the UN today were called terrorists by colonial powers (during their struggle). The people of course refer to them as freedom fighters."

The Canadian doctor said that what is happening in Lebanon is the same as what has occurred in many Third World countries since World War II. He called it a colonial situation. He told the audience that, " settler colonies develop differently." "America is a settler colony. There was genocide against the indigenous people and enslavement of Blacks. South Africa simply enslaved the indigenous population- Blacks. Israel is a settler colony that used dispersal."

Giannou went on to say that Reagan's plan for the Middle East situation "is behind what is needed." "Recognize Israel's right to exist and we'll talk to you, isn't much." The PLO proposal, he furthered explained, implies that they will recognize Israel's right to exist if Israel guarantees that Palestinian rights will be recognized. Begin, Giannou reported, refuses to negotiate even if the PLO recognizes Israel's right to exist. He gave an example of how a U.S.-Israel negotiation talk might go. "Reagan will say, get rid of one of the settlements. Begin says three more settlements, and Reagan does nothing."

The U.S. government gives Israel 2.5 billion dollars for its military budget. "If Reagan was serious, he would cut off all aid to the whole region. He's cut out aid to Poland, the Soviet Union, etc. for less." "When Argentina invaded the Falklands, it was branded aggression, and sanctions were immediately imposed." "We no longer have to ask how did this happen " "A modern city, Beirut, has been laid seige to for five months, and the world sat back and watched." He ended his discussion saying, "You either back up your principles with deeds or it's called hypocrisy."

Malcolm X Center: A Resource for Black Students

By Keith W. Johnson

The Malcolm X Cultural Center is one of four area cultural centers here at UMass. Located in the lower level of the Berkshire Dining Commons in Southwest Residential Area, the center is the largest and most active cultural center on campus. The center tries to promote the pride of people of the Third World thru various programs and activities and is named after the great Black religious and humane right leader of the 1950's and 60's, Malik El Shabazz, otherwise known as Malcolm X.

SPOTLIGHT

The center is basically a gathering place for Third World students. It's television, ping-pong and pool tables make it a great place for a recreational break from study. But many nights one can find students studying in the center. There is even a small library located in the center.

A number of courses are also taught during the academic year. These courses study various aspects of the Third World community and some have, in the past, been affiliated with the Afro-American Studies Department. But most classes are coordinated thru the Southwest Residential College.

The nine-member student staff of the Malcolm X Center is ledby Co-Directors Phil Pasley and Neil Grant. The staff is advised by their teaching assistant (TA) Earl Brown. This staff not only organizes the programming of the Center but also represents the Third World students of Southwest as the Third World Caucus of the Southwest Assembly which funds the Center.

The Center sponsors various activities throughout the year such as Fun and Games nights, movies, lectures, workshops and is a very popular nightspot because of the many parties given there. Likewise, the Center is the primary sponsor of the Malcolm X Spring Picnic which is the most awaited event of the school year.

The Malcolm X Center is there for all Third World students and needs the support of the student community. For more information on courses or events, contact the Center at 545-2819.

The Malcolm X Center hours are: Sunday 2 P.M. - 10 P.M.
Monday 12 P.M. - 10 P.M.
Tuesday 12 P.M. - 10 P.M.
Wednesday 4 P.M. - 10 P.M.
Thursday 1 P.M. - 10 P.M.
Friday 1 P.M. - 11 P.M.

Reaganism At Umass ??

by Ed Cohen

Ronald Reagan has brought about a reinforcement of the "good old days" mentality, which includes an increase of racism and a lack of sensitivity towards people of color on the part of caucasions. We see, on the Federal level, that the war against the poor is causing a great decrease in social service benefits for low-income persons in the areas of medical programs, food stamps, educational services, and housing. Plenty of money is available for nuclear bombs, but not for education.

All of this is the mentality of Reaganomics. Whereas people of color constitute a large percentage of the low-income bracket, and continue to be lodged there, nothing is being done to rectify that situation. Local institutions, here in the Pioneer Valley, are quick to pick up the trend of insensibility of national climate. For example, University of Massachusetts president David Knapp has proclaimed that the University should raise its admissions standars by instituting tougher requirements. But, what does this mean for low-income students? And what does this mean for students of color who continue to be primarily from low-income backgrounds and therefore are more likely to have inadequate educations, due to the problems of public school education in poor communities.

Programs such as the Upward Bound Program, a pre-college preparatory program for low-income high school students are being cut back; from 440 programs nationally to only 175. The programs are destined to become less effective in helping a substantial number of poor students to achieve the higher admissions standards such as those proposed for UMass. In fact, there is a real danger that people who are sensitive to the needs of students of color, in particular, and low-income students in general, will be 'reorganized' out if the decision making process of this University, and others.

Even at the student level the mentality of Reaganism prevails. Every year an attempt is made to elliminate 'Third World' organizations from this campus and only vigilant action by concerned students prevents this from occuring. Racism is one of the leading factors behind these attempts, with certain students unable to understand why institutions like NUMMO News, Black Affairs, BMCP, and others should exist. On the most immediate level the effects of Reaganism touch us very closely. When caucasion students fail to be sensitive to the needs of students of color, then racism is successfull. Students need to organize to eliminate the dehumanizing effects of racism and prejudice.

IMF APPROVES $1.1 BILLION LOAN TO APARTHEID SOUTH AFRICA

On November 3, 1982 the International Monetary Fund approved a $1.1 billion loan to South Africa, a nation which practices policies of racial segregation and white dominance over the Black majority.

Clear objections have been raised in the UN, which ousted South Africa in 1974, on political questions such as its military agressions against neighboring Namibia and Angola. These objections were countered with statements that the IMF is "apolitical"; judging applicants solely on economic criteria. However, the U.S. has been successful in pressuirng the IMF to extend $85 billion in loans to El Salvador in blatant violation of these criteria. Thus, political interests are clearly a consideration influencing which nations are to receive Western assistance.

EVIDENCE OF MILITARY VIOLENCE UNCOVERED IN ARGENTINA

The New York Times has reported that approximately 1,000 unidentified bodies have turned up in Argentina in the past few weeks, and are widely believed to be the remains of some of the reported 6,000 people who disappeared during the 1970's uprising in that country.

Many human rights leaders, and the general public of Argentina are becoming increasingly convinced of the military's role in the violence. Consequently, some military officials have declared that the elections scheduled for 1984 should be postponed and/or voided if an agreement cannot be reached with civilian leaders to settle the problem of public outrage over this matter.

Rebuttal: Black Homecoming Not Segregationist

To the Editor:

I am writing in reaction to an article on the front page of the November first edition of the Collegian. Particularly, my attention was aroused by the UMass "Black Homecoming Parade."

The festive atmosphere of the accompanying photograph is to be appreciated, but the intent of a "Black Homecoming" is what I question. Who in their right mind holds the notion that black students whould have a different homecoming? Aren't we all (blacks, whites, etc.) involved in the festivties of the homecoming? Why shouldn't all students enjoy the event as a student body, without some of us isolating ourselves? To me there is a blatant segregationist attitude being displayed here. No wonder there is racism at our university, some students insist on grouping themselves in such a way that intimidates the majority. Isn't the aim of various cultural organizations to help assimilate, and also to alleviate the situation for the minority student? The insistence of some groups to remain in their own little "cults" only nurtures racist sentiments and eventually, hatred. The hypocrisy of that "homecoming" event is sadly farcical. segregation is clearly being promoted in an ominous way.

In conclusion, I would like to offer a general request. As powerless as I am, I would like to suggest to all campus ethnic organizations that they reevaluate their ultimate intentions. Is it to coexist and blend? Or is it more in "vogue" to remain cold and distant from the majority? Also, do present measures actually make headway in the quest for racial harmony?

By Keith W. Johnson

This article is a rebuttal to the above article which appeared in the editorial section of the Collegian on Wednesday, November 10th.

The question is raised as to why Black students have their own homecoming since the author seems to believe that the purpose of ethnic and cultural organizations on campus should be to assimilate with the majority.

He futher claims that the result of having such organizations and events is to intimidate the majority, nuture racism and hatred, and that "segregation is clearly being promoted in an ominous way."

One aspect of racism is sometimes the willful ignorance of people of other races. As the author stated, that type of ignorance does exist on campus. But nowhere is such ignorance exhibited more than in the article by Chris Bacich.

It's unfortunate if the existance of ethnic and cultural organizations "intimidates the majority," as the article states. That is not the motivation behind such organizations and activities and such spurious beliefs exist in the author's mind alone. To state that the actions of Black or other Third World organizations helps to create racism, is a classic example of blaming the victim for the situation. Is he, for example, "intimidated" by Hillel or the Newman Club?

Cultural organizations on campus try to promote the cultural pride of their members' heritage. America was built by people of all cultural backgrounds and there is nothing inappropriate in people taking pride in their history and promoting that pride.

The author is mistaken in believing that the aim of cultural organizations is to try to assimilate into the majority. We wish to exist, if allowed to, within the society. But we will not exchange our cultural identity in order to so. We demand the same right as others to promote and exhibit our history and heritage. It is a right that people of all races are entitled to.

As far as Black Homecoming is concerned, the Black students of this campus use this event as a way to turn a traditional collegiate event into a more cultural type of festivity. It should be remembered that all of our events were open to the entire public and many of them were free. Events such as the Gospel Jubilee and the Nikki Giovanni lecture were enjoyed by people of all colors.

If Black Homecoming Week or Third World organizations should not exist, then St. Patricks Day should not exist. Jewish holidays should not be legal holidays where people get off from work or school. Why don't they wait until Christmas and Easter so they can "assimilate" with the majority? Maybe Chris Bacich should leave Sunderland and go down to New York City and attempt to stop the Greek-American parade, the Puerto Rican Day parade, or the St. Patricks Day parade. Should Hillel and Ahora not exist because they intimidate the majority? This is ridiculous.

It is White people who have historically promoted racist beliefs and segregation. Black people pursuing their autonomy is a justifiable reaction to hundreds of years of oppression and segregation imposed upon us by this same majority which Chris Bacich wants us to assimilate with. But his article is important because it illustrates the persistence of a very old American idea: only white is right. Instead of questioning us, Mr. Bacich needs to ask himself why he bears and hates those who don't subscribe to this notion. That is his problem- and not ours.

Many try to ignore perspectives from and about the Third World community because they are unsettling to America's image of itself. But there can be no path to harmony which is not based on truth.

For those who wish to open their hearts and minds and want to know why Black students walked thru the middle of Amherst, I suggest that you not take Nummo News out of the center of the Collegian but read it. Don't skip the Black Affairs page and don't turn past Black Mass Communications Project on WMUA and tell your friends to do the same.

"Discovery" of Puerto Rico ?

Borinquen, "Land of Courage", was the name given to the island of Puerto Rico by it's natural inhabitants, the Taino people.

The Taino were a farming people. They grew corn, yuca, and tabacco, they domesticated animals and hunted small game; they wove cotton fabrics and used the fibers of the rubber tree. The Taino people fished and farmed, not to sell their crops and their catch, but for use in their daily lives. In Taino culture women were equal to men; they hunted, fished, and farmed. The women were also doctors, generals, and caciques.

There were rich deposits of gold in the mountains, and though the Indians mined it in small quantities, they did not buy it, sell it, or used it in commerce or trade.

"A clothed race will come. A clothed race will come to rule Borinquen. They will starve and torment them to death", prophesized a Taino cemi (priest). The Taino cemi warned that these clothed race will come in the quest for gold and that the Taino people will be exterminated.

November 19 is marked as the "discovery" of Puerto Rico. But, one has to question the validity of the word 'discovered'. How can someone 'discover' something or place for that matter, that has already been in existance for who knows how many centuries before the Europeans set foot on it, (actually stumbled upon it!). Historically, Europeans have re-written African, Asian and Latin American history to serve their own interests. Such is the case of the Puerto Rican history, where Puerto Rico comes into existence only after 1492.

When the Europeans reached Puerto Rico, they brought with them the guns and swords, the Christian cross and the Bible, along with brutality and avarice, machismo, smallpox and syphilis, and a lust for gold. The cross and the Bible notwithstanding,gold alone was sacred to the conquerers.

"To Love Me is to Love My Country".....Lolita Lebron tells her Story

On November 19th, we celebrate the birthday of Lolita Lebron, Puerto Rican Nationalist, who has dedicated her life for the struggle of Puerto Rican Independence.

On March 1, 1954, Lolita Lebron, Andres Figueroa Cordero, Rafael Cancel Miranda and Irvin Flores attacked one of the United States' control symbols over Puerto Rico, the Congress. The assault was in response to the enactment of the law 600, which declared that Puerto Rico was a "Commonwealth" under the jurisdiction of the United States. The United States tried to use this law to prove to the world that Puerto Rico was an internal matter of this country.

Lolita Lebron along with the other three Nationalist were imprisoned. She was unconditionaly released from the federal penitentiary after 25 years of incarceration; the following story was written by her while still in prison in 1976.

I am Lolita Lebron. Puerto Rican patriot and political prisoner; 56 years old, born November 19, 1919, at Lares, P.R., historical city of the first proclamation of the free and sovereign republic of the Puerto Rican nation.

Since July 25, 1898, Puerto Rico has been under U.S. domination. The U.S. established itself by the force of arms in the Puerto Rican nation as conqueror of our land, hearts and minds. The U.S. government controls all life existence of the people of Puerto Rico, exploiting our nation in order to increase its treasures and work power through colonialism and denial of our innate birthright of nationhood. It controls militarily, economically, socially, culturally.

As a little girl, I went to school where the first thing I learned was, after the bell rang and the line was formed, to place my little hand upon my heart to salute and pledge alligiance to the flag. I learned afterward that the flag was the highest symbol of the nation and that the nation was not Puerto Rico, but a faraway country named the United States of America. We were not taught the meaning of the words. Our education was taught in the English language by Puerto Rican teachers who had a strange sound or accent like this of mine.

My classmates were very pale, sickly looking children. Most of them were barefoot and in rags, with swollen stomachs, skinny bodies , nervous and uneasy. Among the pupils were a few stable, healthy looking and youthful children. These were the sons and daughters of the landowners. The meals at the school were bad, the sanitation horrible, the latrines flooded. The children of the so-called good families did have special privileges, such as receiving their lunches in the school through the maids of the houses.

Diseases were rampant among the people. The peasants' wooden homes belonged the the landowners and were very old and broken. The rain would fall inside. There was always mud around them. It was impossible to keep these little houses clean, because for one thing they were built very close to the soil. Pigs and ducks and cats came freely into these little houses.

The peons and their families worked long hours for the landowners. For this they got a few cents. They never owned their homes. My father worked all his life, but he got deathly sick at 42. He did not have a home in which to pass his last days, nor for his own widow and children. I was 17 years old when my father died.

In my childhood and adolescence, I had no interest but to contemplate the beauty of nature. I was a dreamer of faraway thoughts. I loved the moon, the sunset, the morning; I talked to the flowers; I journeyed in petals. What delightful journeys, the journeys of the children.

When I was in the sixth grade, I knew that life's lessons in the classroom and in my environment taught two principles: to do the will of God, and to do the will of the United States of America.

But one day I heard myself saying to myself: if I could make another world, I would make it a world where the hard working people would be able to live more abundantly, just like other people.

It seems to me that I still hear the sounds of the hammers as the peons constructed the caskets for the dead, whenever they died- that was quite often. They would do this at the warehouse of La Casa, which means the big house, and is designated as the supreme headquarters of the land-owner. Yes, I saw caskets close to sacks of coffee and of vegetables and fruits- the produce that the same dead peasants had produced. Yet they died young because of lack of proper food, proper human care and attention. The sight of naked children playing in the mud is heavy with me.

I saw a peasant wife taking a piece of meat out of the garbage cans of the landowners. This beautiful woman took that piece of meat from inside that garbage can and refried it at the wood stove of a little kit-

En la aurora eternal de los jazmines.

Todos cantan al sol desde su luz
un cantico de árboles.

Plañen los cafetales
sus himnos de azahar...
Danza la brisa
en torbellino sacro.

Rige su trompeta

A MI VIDA

Este verso me besa con nenita caricia
aromoda de esencias
y sabores a tierra...y sueño de coquí.

A tu seno me huele, en anil florecido con olores de hojas y de arroz y maíz, y a las piedras del río, y aquellas amapolas que en el ruedo del traje una vez te prendí.

Recuerdas aquel día de hermoso caraqueo
y dorados naranjos y café de rubí?
La maleza y el bosque suspirando rocíos
y en jugando de savias nuestro paso feliz?
La canasta preciosa rebosando verduras,
y el la le lo lai cantadito por tí?

Como tu retozabas mi pelo con la cinta!
y el trajecito rosa y el lazo de organdí
Mi muñeca de trenzas altanera y trigueña, y el delantal de rizos que contigo cosí!

Y tú siempre decías que era tu niña linda,
la mas hermosa flor de tu rico jardín!

Deslizaba serena el agua en la quebrada,
en suspiros ardientes de flauta y de violín,
pero Tingo tocaba más bello en el cuatro
sus canciones al alba, y sus coplas de Abril.
Y tu mirabas lindo...remojando la ropa,
y dándole con piedras al pantalon de dril,
el que papa se puso
el día de la boda,
y que tu, en la casta yegua prendías al cuadril.

Te escribire un poema
arrebujado en luna como el Morivivi!
un poema transido de ternura.....
como los puros besos que de niña te dí.

Pero ya no soy 'linda' como tú me decías!
La altura de mis años mi infancia tan sutil ha madurado en frondos crespúsculos que mecen mi verbo en el silencio...
cuando cuaja mi verso yo quiero para tí.

Black Music Grows Universal

by Victoria Carter

The J.R. Mitchell Universal Orchestra premiered two new works of contemporary music at the Bruno Walter Auditorium of Lincoln Center October 26, 1982: Walls of Africa Suite, by J.R. Mitchell, had its world premiere, and Concerto (Op.24) by Eric Ross had its premiere. Both were interesting departures from regular commercial offerings and featured non-traditional melodies which could not be anticipated and required serious listening.

J.R. Mitchell wrote his Walls of Africa Suite five years ago while teaching at Northeastern University in Boston. At the time was studing composition under Jaki Byard, George Russell and Gunther Schuller for his Masters degree in composition. Each movement of the suite represents and important part of the African-American history because Africa is the birthplace of the Black population. "Omuntu" is written to express the "love of a beautiful country". "Independence" gives a movement and time to each of the instruments used for especial effects and clarity . "The Black Master Race" can be interpreted in many different ways but to me it expresses the full power and feeling of Black folk here in the western world. This movement is very powerful and has meaning for people of all races. "Kwame Nkrumah" was written for the late President of Ghana and expresses freedom between the different instruments. It is one of the longest sections of the suite.The dialgue between section two and four prepare for a moving and free section. The last movement (Fatherland = Mother Continent) with the full orchestra at its improvisational peak climaxes. The third movement is a reflection of support for this final section.

The musicians were brought together by J.R. Mitchell from different parts of the East Coast and included: Babafumi Akunyun (Percussion), Jymie Cambell (Clarinet & Alto), Bob Carten (Clarinet & Alto), Vitoria Carter (Percussion), Hassan Dawkins (Contra-bass clarinet), Dan Jones (Basson), Michael Neal (Trumpet), Byard Lancaster (Piccolo, Bass clarinet), Walter Lee (Oboe & english horn), Akua Dixon (Cello), Lee Coker (Viola), Yoshiko Wakudo (Violin), J.R. Mitchell (Percussion & conductor), Odean Pope (Tenor), Eric Ross (Piano & electronics), Debbie Sandoval (French horn), Artie Simmons (Bass trombone), Michael Keith (Slide trombone), Youseff Yancy (Electric trumpet & theremin) and dancer, Atsuko Yuma. They gathered together to perform music not played by any other orchestra. It was a dynamic experience for the audience and the musicians since throughout the suite, the composer created space for improvisation.

The Concerto for Piano and Synthetic Orchestra (Op.24) is an intellectual peice which, according to composer Eric Ross, involves geometrical and mathematical techniques: "melodic, harmonic, rhythmic, inversion retrograde, retrograde inversion, transformational, mutiplicative funcitons, combinatorality, derivations,.....timbral, coloristic, and textural"* musical syntax to create a new musical space. It is a contemporary, classical peice performed and conducted from the piano by Eric Ross. The piano and orchestra were on tape and the live orchestra played together with the synthetic orchestra. This concerto consists of five movements: I.The Prologue II.Symphonic Dance III. Water Mood IV. Cadenza V. Finale Ligure. Each of the movements has its own feeling and color. Eric Ross has an interesting rhythmic goal in his music :"to create chron-ametrical music, to place music outside of 'real' or ontological time and into the realm of 'pure duration' or subjective time..." Atsuko Yuma brought his concept to sculptural reality as she danced to "Water Mood". Her performance was exciting and left the audience wanting more. Featured along with Atsuko Yuma was Youseff Yancy on Theremin, an electronic instrument that emits AM and FM radio waves. Youseff Yancy gave masterful, mystical performances in both the Walls of African Suite, and Concerto (Op.24).

Akua Dixon (Cello), and Kyoto Fujiwara (Contra-bass), both took beautiful, moving solos in Walls of Africa. Artie Simmons spole out on bass trombone and left a lasting impression. Dan Jones (Basson), Walter Lee (Oboe & english horn), Hassan Dawkins (Contra-bass clarinet), Odean Pope (Flute & tenor), Byard Lancaster (Piccolo, Bass clarinet), and Michael Neal (Trumpet), all added fire and intensity on horns in their respective solos. One of the highlights of "Walls of Africa" was the percussion section featuring J.R. Mitchell, Babafumi Akunyun, and Victoria Carter during the movement, "Kwame Nkrumah".

J.R. Mitchell and Eric Ross record for Doria Records which is Professor Mitchell's recording company. The concert was recorded live on video tape and audio recording. This creative and important moment was documented and can be found in the future on the Doria label.

UNTITLED

by James Robert Johnson

A baby is born in the ghetto
Unaware of the struggles before him
Innocent, of all crimes, of those around him.
Forced to grow up in a world so uncaring
Is it right or wrong?
Tis a question that I can answer only by saying that in this life there are two roads.
Neither of which guarantees him anything.
Yet he has only to take one wrong turn and he could lose everything.

As the baby grows into a man even then the struggles do not end. Why, because of a man's race, creed or color should he be shunned? No one knows. Yet these are the factors that matter so much in the world of today

Mankind as we know it has set standards based solely on these factors. Instead of a man's ability to perform.

Now that he has passed, the gifts of flowers and the tears of sadness come out like vultures over their prey.
Yet it is now too late to give of one's heart or to express feelings of love.
"He shouldn't have died so young," is the cry to be heard, but it is too late for such cries, far too late. If only we as a people could realize that there are so many babies who live this same life.
Maybe then, and only then will the flowers be given when their fragrance can be enjoyed. Rather than used as dressings for the graves of the departed.

Maybe then we can end these deaths of babies born in the ghetto.

chen and divided it among her five little hungry children.

Later I saw the same mother making herself an operation inside one of her breats, where she had developed a tumor, from a fall caused by fetching water. This mother, one day in the early morning, awoke her children from bed and told them to kneel with her, which they all did. She had a candle lit in front of us all kneeling there and with a stick of orange, went inside her breast to operate. This mother died of cancer- and for the country. Tuberculosis and cancer were among the most common diseases of the peasants of my childhood time.

I remember those fiestas...how my mother would make me ribbon bows for my hair, and the little children around me were so happy. Our fiestas were Lincoln's Day, Washington's Day, Columbus Day, Christmas Day, New Years' Day- our holidays.

My fathers dogs were named after American patriots because these dogs were supposed to be his best friends and guardians.

My childhood at school was unforgettable, of course. I still feel it for one thing: my childhood school was named Marianna Brasetti. We the children were never taught anything about who this woman was. I found out later that Marianna Brasetti was the woman who is known as the heroine of El Grito de Lares.

El Grito de Lares is the most distinguished historical event of my country. It was in this Grito de Lares that the first revolution for my country's liberation took place against the Spanish conquerors. And the first free and sovereign republic of the people of Puerto Rico was declared on September 23, 1868.

At 21, and amid a very difficult life and suffering, I was advised to do as the other poor women of my country were doing- to sail to New York City where there were opportunities.

My life experience in New York City grew to greater knowledge of human oppression, exploitation, negation. There came a day in which, after having tried for three days looking for jobs, getting left in the trains, walking under snowfalls, without money for lunch or shelter, I had to deny that I was a Puerto Rican woman in order to have a job.

I had heard the name of Don Pedro Albizu Campos and about the Ponce massacre, but as with most Puerto Ricans these events were not clear or present beyond the abstract of consciousness. Yet I can say that it was the Ponce massacre, where the university students were attacked and murdered by the U.S. bullets that cultivated instantly my personal duty to the fatherland.

Colonialsim, like male chauvinism, were things not heard in my life's younger years, although myself and thousands of women workers were victims of the two unjust and oppressive concepts of traditional society.

The Puerto Rican people have felt the tactics and strategies of colonialism and subjugation. They have been taught to be afraid of freedom or not to lift their voices for national identity. It is paramount in the making of colonialism that the colonized repudiate the birthright to nationhood and that they bind themselves to the concept of paternalism, wherein the Big Papa sucks off the resources and the vitality of the captive nations.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Third World Women's Task Force is sponsoring a film series this autumn semester, 1982, entitled: Third World Women in Liberation Struggles. In concert with each film presentation, there will also be a faculty member from the five college area to speak, answer questions, fill in gaps, update the film, and help lead a discussion. It is the hope of the Third World Women's Task Force that these presentations will provide a forum of discussion as well as education around topics of concern to the Third World, and specifically to the women of the Third World.

This is a lunchtime film series to be held every-other Thursday at noon until 1 p.m. These presentations are free of charge and open to all.

Due to the nature of the organization, and to the extremely limited budget we are working with, we are asking those groups and individuals like yourselves who share common interests to co-sponosr the series by making a monetary contribution, if possible. Any amount is both welcome and appreciated. We thank you for your interest in our program.

Third World Women in Liberation Struggles

November 18th Women Under Siege
A brand new film which looks at the participation of the women of a small Palestinian village located just six miles north of the Israeli border in their unique and often overlooked struggle. * Speaker TBA. Thursday, noon - 1 o'clock. U.Mass Campus Center. Room 903.

December 2nd A Vieled Revolution
From the same woman who produced Women Under Siege, comes this very recent account of the women's movement in Egypt. *Speaker TBA. Thursday, noon - 1 o'clock. U.Mass Campus Center. Room 904-08.

* Indicates that the speaker has not yet formally confirmed. TBA:to be arranged.

The Third World Women's Program and Task Force of Everywoman's Center is having a Fall Planning Meeting, from 10:00-1:00, November 20. The meeting will take place at the Everywoman's Center, Wilder Hall, UMass. Bring a bag lunch and a friend! For childcare information and details of the meeting contact Panna Putnum or Malika Jones at 545-0883.

The Scientific Principles of Fighting

Self defense, what is it?
Self defense is the ability to defend oneself, both mentally and physically, within any given situation and through means of learned conditioned highly focused reflexes, both offensively and defensively systems.

To develop conditioned reflexes that are highly focused you mobilize the needed motor skills, which are speed, power, timing, strength, and agility. Good fighting skills are very easy to learn. Please check out this class if you feel the need to learn another skill, in this case for self preservation. Classes are held per semester.

Classes: Females - Mondays, Thursdays and Sundays room 114 New Africa House
Time: 7:00 PM - 9:00 PM, Mondays and Thursdays
3:00 PM - 5:00 PM Sundays

Males: Tuesday, Wednesdays and Saturdays room 114 New Africa House
Time: 7:00 PM - 9:00 PM, Tuesdays and Wednesdays
3:00 PM - 5:00 PM, Saturdays
Registration room 325 New Africa House

Clouds, a contemporary Black musical performance will be happening Sunday, November 21, in the Student Union Ballroom at UMass. Clyde Criner will be performing with Akua Dixon, Gail Dixon, John Blake, Joe Ford, Victor Bailey, and Omar Hakim. The performance will begin at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are available at Union Records Unlimited, For the Record (Faces), and all Ticketron outlets; $6.00-students, $7.00 general public. Sponsored by the Duke Ellington Committee.

Chairperson re-elected to position

By KEN BAZINET
Special to the Collegian

Siobhan Powers, former chairperson of the Student Senate finance committee last night was re-elected by the committee to that position following some debate and a controversial week-long vacation.

Powers was axed by the committee last week when it elected Mimi Turchinetz to its chair. Turchinetz was denied the position when the senate failed to ratify the committee's results last Wednesday. Powers told the Senate Wednesday that misinformation had been given to Committee members on the eligibility of candidates for the chair. Powers won the support of the Senate sending the task of selecting a new chair back to the Committee.

The committee voted 8-6 in favor of Powers despite Mike Leary, a committee member, charging Powers with being irresponsible while serving as chair. Leary said Powers was the bearer of misinformation on funds being frozen and eligibility for finance chair. He also said he was witholding other information against Powers which he may use on the Senate floor tomorrow.

The 14 member finance committee controls almost $50,000 in funds which provide loans and assistance to several campus organizations.

Turchinetz told the committee she didn't feel Powers was accessible last summer or this fall.

"I definitely think Siobhan has the time behind her, but I don't feel she was accessible for the students."

Turchinetz also said she has a more realistic approach to dealing with the SGA than Powers.

Lisa Potter, SGA treasurer, called Powers "one of the more dedicated SGA members" and urged the committee to support her.

Powers said she was proud to run on her record and denied the charges. She was supported by several other speakers at last night's meeting, some of whom described her as "an experienced member of the SGA", and a "dedicated professional."

"I run on my past experience as chair of finance," she said. "I am involved in social issues and programming, and dedicated to fairness."

The Senate is expected to ratify Powers re-election tomorrow however some debate is expected. Leary said he was unsure whether he would bring up the matter himself, since the committee has chosen a clear candidate for the chair.

The 14 member finance committee controls almost $50,000 in funds which provide loans and assistance to several campus organizations.

In other Committee elections, Sheila Sullivan, presently chairperson of the SGA's Public Policy Committee was re-elected without any controversy.

The Committee, which handles legislative relations with the federal and state government concerning issues that effect students, then began outlining their agenda for the fall and spring.

Included in the possible legislation to be filed by the committee includes putting a student on the Board of Regents, on the UMass Building Authority and increasing the amount of state aid to students.

The election for chairperson of the Government Affairs Committee was to be held last night but was postponed due to lack of quorum.

Co-owners near ready to give up

By DAVE LINTON
Collegian Staff

The owners of the Gnomon Copy store on North Pleasant St. in Amherst will "throw in the towel" if a settlement is not reached with striking employees at a negotiation session at 1 p.m. tomorrow co-owner Catherine Iannacchino said yesterday.

Iannacchino said she has suffered a net loss of $15,000 since the end of October and will "give back the keys this weekend" to John Sytek, vice-president of the Gnomon Copy store chain, unless a settlement is reached. She said she is not optimistic.

She said the store now closes four hours earlier since last week and is only open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Iannacchino said she and her husband, co-owner Roland Wetherbee, will try to find another Gnomon Copy franchise if a settlement is not reached. She said they have been looking at five locations in three different states.

"I have all the things they don't have to worry about. I have a house and two kids and they like to eat," she said.

Stephen Roy, a striking employee, said the owners have been threatening to close since the beginning of October and he said he thinks it is possible.

If they do move to another location, Iannacchino said Sytek would take over ownership of the store and it would remain open with the present employees. She said she would take her copy machines and leave one machine for Sytek.

Roy said the corporation would try to keep the store open with a "skeleton" crew and try to break the union by hoping the strikers would give up and go away.

"I think we're talking about them taking a loss. It comes down to how much money they can lose before coming to their senses. Last year they spent about $18,000 for legal fees," he said.

"I'm pretty stubborn at this point. When we first went out on strike, I knew we'd be out this long.

We've been dealing with Sytek for a year and we're dealing indirectly with the corporation now. I've had conversations with Sytek and I know what kind of man he is," Roy said.

Iannacchino said she made the best offer she could at a negotiation session Friday. If the strikers don't accept the offer, she said, there is nothing more that she can do.

She said the strikers don't know how to read a profit sheet because they don't take into account the expenses of running a store. She said she lowers her profits to keep prices low and stay open longer hours because area copy stores do not meet students' needs.

"It's hard to talk to people that are convinced that they are correct. If I were them, I would come back in (to work) because the holidays are coming, it's getting colder, and they must be behind in their bills," Iannacchino said.

"I think the corporation has misread the community. They thought people would ignore the boycott," Roy said.

The strike began Sept. 8 and has continued without any major breakthroughs for a contract. Minor agreements have been reached but a major stumbling block in the negotiation process has been the company's plan to base wages on employee productivity and the strikers' efforts to modify the proposal.

The striking employees, who are members of United Electrical Workers' Union local 264, filed an unfair labor practices charge Nov. 10 with the National Labor Relations Board against management. The union charged management with failure to bargain in good faith and discrimination against union members.

Reagan concentratng more on unemployment with jobless rate over 10 percent and climbing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, showing heightened concern about unemployment, is studying proposals to lower joblessness among young people and workers on long-term layoff, officials said yesterday.

The officials, who did not want to be named, said President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers and the Labor Department are working on several proposals that could be included in the fiscal 1984 budget plan Reagan will send Congress in January.

A White House official said Martin S. Feldstein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, suggested special unemployment-fighting programs to the president shortly after Election Day.

"Everybody (in the White House) understands that with a 10.4 percent unemployment rate, unemployment as a policy area deserves very careful attention," said the official.

At the same time, the official cautioned, proposals for cutting joblessness will be expensive, possibly too expensive for an administration looking for ways to lower a deficit approaching a record $200 billion in 1984.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said several ideas on how to deal with unemployment have been given to Reagan but "no decisions have been made."

Under one plan, tax credits would go to companies hiring young people, including those still in high school, as well as dropouts and graduates.

From an employer's standpoint, this would be the equivalent of paying a sub-minimum wage to youths without having to amend the current law mandating a $3.35-an-hour federal minimum wage, one official explained.

Unemployment is particularly high among young people. Nearly one-quarter of the teenagers in the labor market are out of work and the jobless rate among those under 25 is 19 percent.

Another plan would provide a wage subsidy to companies that hire people who have exhausted their 26 weeks of regular unemployment benefits.

Under this idea, a person either could remain jobless and collect 13 weeks of extended unemployment benefits or receive a government voucher worth 13 weeks of benefits that would go to an employer that hires the person. The voucher would help offset the new employee's wage.

Walesa back in action, shows more caution after 11 month involuntary hiatus from union

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa renewed his allegiance to the independent labor movement yesterday but took a cautious line toward the martial-law government and urged his supporters to confine themselves to peaceful action.

He also said he needed at least a month to get acquainted with the situation in Poland and decide his future course of action.

"I was, I am and I will be faithful to the spirit of August," said Walesa, referring to the August 1980 agreement that launched the Solidarity labor federation.

"I will not depart from the letter of that agreement," he told his first news conference since his release after 11 months of detention. But he added, in a vein reminiscent of his moderating influence on the union before his arrest, "As you know, I never wanted to destroy or knock anything out. I am for peaceful solutions."

He displayed even more caution when asked to define his stand on the new trade unions under Communist Party control, envisioned by the law Oct. 8 that also banned Solidarity.

Even the Solidarity statutes had spoken of union "pluralism," he said, adding, "You can join one trade union, you can join another, and you are free to join or not to join."

Walesa said he would "do everything" he could to effect the release by "peaceful means" of Solidarity supporters still in detention. But he pleaded for time, saying:

"I must think about the situation because I don't know the existing situation now. Give me at least one month."

He spoke more forcefully the night before on his arrival in Gdansk.

"We have to reach agreement, but not on our knees," he told a cheering crowd of 500 outside his apartment house. "I will be faithful and there is no force that can divide us. I want everything to go the way we established it. I will not abandon the road and the ideas which we set forth in August."

Yesterday afternoon, after the shifts changed at the Lenin Shipyard where Solidarity was born, about 2,000 people assembled outside Walesa's drab apartment building, shouting for him to appear. They were dispersed by a bodyguard who said: "You better go. Standing here, you do harm to him."

Walesa had put on weight during his 11 months of forced inactivity and was hoarse but relaxed at the news conference, held in his living room with portraits of himself and Pope John Paul II on the walls. He still wore his familiar walrus mustache.

The Communist government said it released Walesa after he offered to meet with government leaders for "serious discussions on problems of mutual interest." He indicated he took a forceful line in the interview with Interior Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak that preceded his release, saying, "They were man-to-man talks, and I thought the result would be prison. But on the next day, I was surprised to be told that I was free."

Bishops dispute American nuclear weapons strategy

WASHINGTON — The nation's Roman Catholic bishops argued yesterday over whether to condemn American nuclear strategy, with some assailing the proposed move as undermining resistance to Soviet aggression.

But other bishops said the disputed declaration, which would preclude even a U.S. threat to use nuclear weapons, upholds Christian teaching and enhances chances for peace.

The debate came in the opening hours of a four-day meeting of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, most of it to focus on the draft pastoral letter over nuclear policy.

"It minimizes concern for the horrible suffering of those enslaved by Communism," said Archbishop Philip M. Hannan of New Orleans. "It lacks proportional recognition of the oppression and aggression of the Reds."

But Archbisho John R. Quinn of San Francisco called it a "balanced document" of "strong and clear moral principles" that recognizes the Soviet threat and need for defense but that also says a "decisive no to nuclear war."

More than a year in drafting and redrafting, the planned teaching letter on peace has stirred extensive dissent in the church and criticism from U.S. administration defense officials.

It condemns any first-strike use of nuclear weapons of their targeting on installations near population centers — both now enunciated as necessary options in U.S. strategic planning.

The document also denounces any intention or threat to use nuclear arms, calls for a nuclear freeze and offers only qualified support even to possessing such weapons as a deterrent, calling it tolerable only if disarmament also is being pursued.

West Coast oil discovery won't affect Georges Bank

BOSTON — The large oil find off the coast of California probably would not draw oil companies away from Georges Bank and other Atlantic drilling sites, Richard Delaney, director of the Massachusetts Coastal Zone Management Office, has said.

Two spokesmen for oil companies involved in Atlantic drilling tend to agree with him.

"There's a five-year lease schedule and they are pretty much committed to drilling in certain areas regardless of finds in other areas," Delaney said, of the large find near Santa Barbara.

"Their strategy is to look everywhere they can and it's not likely they would concentrate the majority of their efforts in one area."

Stephen Chamberlain, an official of the American Petroleum Institute in Washington, was quoted in a published report as saying the Point Arguello find would help shift major offshore drilling activity to the West Coast.

The Point Arguello find, announced last month, could rival the Prudhoe Bay find in Alaska, the largest field discovered so far in the United States.

Michael Gross, a spokesman for Mobil Oil Corp., which has drilled two exploratory wells on Georges Bank this year, said the company could not comment on its future drilling plans as a result of the California find.

Herald-American sale a mysterious proposal

BOSTON — A meeting with newspaper unions to discuss possible purchase of the Boston Herald American by Australian publisher Rupert Murdoch has been postponed indefinitely, a union leader said yesterday.

Union officials earlier reported a meeting was planned for yesterday, then today, "to clear the air and find out exactly what is happening," according to one union official.

But today's session was unexpectedly called off, said the official, who asked not to be identified. No reason was given, he said, and no new date was set.

"Everything was set up and everybody was ready to go," he said. "We don't know what happened."

Martin Fischbein, vice president and assistant general manager of Murdoch's U.S. flagship paper, the New York Post, would not confirm the report of a planned meeting. "I simply have nothing to say," he said.

Robert Danzig, vice president and general manager for newspapers of the Hearst Corp., which owns the Herald American, did not return two calls from a reporter yesterday.

James Dorris, publisher of the Herald American, and Dennis Mulligan, general manager, declined comment.

Last Friday the head of Boston Typographical Union Local 13 posted a letter in the Herald American composing room, saying an "agreement in principle" had been reached for Murdoch to buy the newspaper.

The Boston Globe reported Saturday that a preliminary sale agreement had been reached, subject to conditions that include settlement with the Herald American's unions.

Pond urchins found with self-splicing RNA

NEW YORK — Researchers said yesterday they have discovered genetic material that can rearrange itself without the help of enzymes, a much simpler process than scientists had thought possible.

"The discovery is so novel that one doesn't know the full implications, but it will certainly change the way we discuss things," said Phillip Sharp, a biologist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The researchers at the University of Colorado in Boulder, led by the biochemist Thomas Cech, found what they call "self-splicing RNA" in a singlecelled animal called Tetrahymena that lives in ponds.

Ribonucleic acid, one of the complex chemicals that carries genetic information, is normally cut, rearranged and spliced together by enzymes, proteins made for that purpose.

The research will be published today in the journal Cell.

The discovery of self-splicing RNA has attracted the attention of biologists interested in evolution, Cech said, because it is a very simple process that could have operated in even the most primitive organisms.

In higher animals, genes made up of DNA — deoxyribonucleic acid — carry a code that directs the production of RNA. The RNA is spliced by enzymes, and then it, in turn, directs the formation of the thousands of proteins that make up living cells.

Knapp urges state universities to place more emphasis on high-tech education

By BRIAN K. SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

President of the University of Massachusetts, David C. Knapp called on state universitites and land-grant colleges to redirect the resources of higher education into engineering and computer science to meet the economic needs of the United States.

Knapp said the United States, Western Europe and Japan are passing through a period of social, political and economic change which will lead to a society based upon knowledge.

He said just as land was once the base for past agricultural societies and capital the base for industrial societies, knowledge will be the heart of our new society beginning to emerge.

"Never before has the United States shown a stronger objective need for precisely the things that higher education, and especially our land-grant schools, can and should provide," Knapp said.

In the speech delivered Nov. 8th in St. Louis to the 96th meeting of the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges, Knapp endorsed a proposal to update the Morrill Act — a piece of legislation that created the land grant college system in 1862 — stated in a book Global Stakes by James Botkin, Dan Dimancescu and Ray Stata, a member of the Massachusetts Board of Regents.

The authors of Global Stakes propose an alliance among industry and state and national governments to invest money and equipment into science and technological curriculum at land grant colleges.

"This proposal, set forth in the book Global Stakes as a new high technology Morrill Act, has led to a legislative proposal by Sen. Paul Tsongas (Democrat) of Massachusetts. At our last count, in fact, 38 such bills had been filed for consideration," Knapp said.

Knapp urged his listeners "to think of ways to join in supporting and sharpening the Global Stakes proposal."

Knapp said the strength of the proposal came in its three way alliance among high tech industries, governments and public and independent universities.

Knapp used the University of Massachusetts as an example of how a major public institution can successfully shift resources into advance tech fields and still not damage "other sectors of the university."

"We have persuaded private donors to give both dollars and equipment to a public institution, a break with long tradition in the nation's citadel of independent higher education," Knapp said.

Knapp said he believes that this new alliance between UMass and industry has been "a vital progression in our sense of what we are as a university and what we do."

He said land-grant universities as a whole must pursue this course to provide a pool of trained individuals for the needs of the country if the universities "are to play the vigorous and strategic role in American society which our founder envisioned for us."

Sexual harassment policy in two weeks?

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Staff

Consider this: a student at the University of Massachusetts suspiciously approaches the office of a professor after receiving an ungraded term paper with the message "see me" written on it. Upon entering, the student is offered a seat and a proposition.

"There is a problem with your term paper that can easily be remedied outside the classroom," the professor explains. "It is my personal philosophy that students can learn more in a relaxed atmosphere. If you agree to come to my home for a drink later, I assure you, you will learn more than ever before. In fact, I see a potential A in this troubled paper."

Although hypothetical, the possibility of the above situation happening is real. In response to the problem of sexual harassment at UMass, a sexual grievance procedure has been designed to provide students and employees with a route through which a complaint may be channeled.

In a document revised five times since the procedure was first proposed by former Chancellor Henry Koffler two years ago, action constituting sexual harassment includes "unwelcomed" sexual advances and requests for sexual favors as conditions of employment or academic work. If the conduct creates an "intimidating, hostile or offensive" atmosphere that interferes with an individual's work performance, it too is considered sexual harassment.

The proposal, already approved by the Faculty Senate, the Board of Trustees, the president's office of the Student Government Association and Legal Services Offices, is currently on the desk of Chancellor Joseph Duffey where it is expected to meet with endorsement within the next two weeks.

The scheme of the grievance procedure is organized in a formula similar to the court system with modifications made to accomodate the University community. Those who choose to follow the procedure must first report the incident to the vice chancellor of the department where the sexual harassment occurred.

Individuals are encouraged to settle complaints informally due to the emotional stress usually accompanying sexual harassment incidents. If an unrestrained resolution of the complaint cannot be reached, a request for a formal hearing is filed with the University's Ombudsperson, who reviews the formal procedures for both parties involved.

The establishment of a hearing board, consisting of 13 representatives from the faculty, staff, student and administrative body chosen by the Chancellor, proceeds with the issuance of a formal complaint. The board hears evidence to determine whether a violation of the University's sexual harassment policy has been violated and recommends sanctions and reliefs.

If an individual is found guilty, the board is called upon to issue sanctions that reflect the severity of the incident. Penalties range from written warnings to be included in the individual's file to dismissal.

A process of appeal is open to either party within 10 days after the decision of the board is stated. A review of the findings is conducted by the appropriate vice chancellor who passes a decision on the board's findings.

Get ready, fish here comes UMass

Although more than 100 miles from the Atlantic Ocean, students at the University of Massachusetts still have the opportunity to take a course in scuba diving for university credit which can ready them for oceanic adventures.

Archie Moe, one of the instructors in the scuba class, said the class concentrates on safety and awareness to the aquatic environment.

"The basic scuba class places emphasis on safe diving and exposing students to a different environment. Students learn about diver physiology, the marine environment, the water planet, diver physics, navigation and diver skill," Moe said.

The University also offers an advanced scuba class, which goes more in depth in subjects such as navigation, boat and night dives, search and recovery, and diver rescue.

The highlight of the course includes an open water dive in the ocean.

"We also spend a weekend in Rockport involving one snorkle and four scuba dives," Moe said.

Moe pointed out that physical conditioning really is not that important for diving.

"The fallacy that to be a diver you have to be strong, able to swim ten miles and be in top physical condition isn't true," he said.

Moe said students take the course for a variety of reasons, ranging from professional to adventurous goals.

"There are a lot of marine biologists, marine geologists and lobster hunters in the class. But some of the students go in for diving because they want to try something new, or their girlfriend or boyfriend dives, or maybe their goal is to find that wreck full of gold at the bottom of the sea," he said.

Scuba instructor Archie Moe explains an aspect of scuba diving to students Wayne Amos, Cheryl Morotta, Kevin Hayden, and Paul Soskey in the Curry-Hicks pool.

Moe also works for Project DEEP (Diving Education "Project Deep is interested in diver education, whether it be marine biology, a basic course teaching students how to dive, or an advanced course in scuba diving," he said.

Moe said the course usually has 20 to 25 students in each class. The students must attend one class a week for 10 weeks. The classes are taught Monday through Thursday nights at the Curry-Hicks pool.

Sixth annual fasting drive to raise awareness of hunger

By BILL THOMAS
Collegian Staff

The growls of empty stomachs that have missed a meal could be overwhelming Thursday night as the University of Massachusetts Hunger Task Force in conjunction with Oxfam America, holds a Fast for World Hunger for the sixth year.

University Food Services will donate $1.12 of every meal given up by students Thursday night to Oxfam America, a non-profit, international development agency that funds self-help programs in Asia, Africa and latin America. The purpose of the fast is to raise money to combat hunger and to raise awareness of the problem of world hunger.

"I'm appalled at the level of awareness of nutrition majors on this issue," Sammons said. "World hunger is a problem that doesn't go away. The fast is a good way to get people to realize this."

Food science and nutrition professor Kenneth Sammons, who has been involved with the issue of world hunger as co-chairman for the Episcopal Diocese of Western Massachusetts, said the consciousness of students on the issue of world hunger needs to be raised, even among his own students.

"I'm appalled at the level of awareness of nutrition majors on this issue," Sammons said. "World hunger is a problem that doesn't go away. The fast day is a good way to get people to realize this," he said.

The reason for fasting is that it is a spiritual experience that results in a feeling of solidarity with hungry people throughout the world. In this way you get an idea of what some people deal with day in and day out," said Mary Jo Langston of the Task force.

Last year about $7,000 was collected from the fast. In the six years the Task Force has been organizing the fasts, the most successful year was the 1980-81 academic year, in which 7,000 meals were given up by UMass students to raise $8,500 to help those suffering from hunger. About 170,000 meals were provided for the hungry as a result of the participation of UMass students in that year, according to task force members.

To participate in the fast students may sign up today, tomorrow and Thursday in the Dining Commons. Students wishing to fast must tell the dining commons cashier "I want to fast" before handing the cashier their student I.D. card.

Students not on the meal plan may contribute to the Fast Day by making donations at locations in the Student Union, Campus Center, Earth Foods, Campus Center Coffee Shop, The Blue Wall, Whitmore Coffee Shop and the Munchies stores.

A student on the meal plan does not have to be on campus Thursday evening in order to participate in the fast. If the student has signed up to skip a meal and does not eat at the Dining Commons on Thursday night, the donation will still go to Oxfam America.

UMass Peace Corps office seeks adventurous graduates

By BILL THOMAS
Collegian Staff

"The toughest job you'll ever love."

The current slogan for the peace corps is "corny, but true" according to one of the volunteers in the program at the University of Massachusetts.

Mary Jo Langston, a worker at the UMass Peace Corps office in Draper Hall, said she thinks the experience is one of the most memorable a person can have.

"You experience the highest highs and the lowest lows in the Peace Corps. I meet people now who were in the Peace Corps 10 and 15 years ago and still they talk about what an impact it had on their lives," she said.

Langston said she looks for "a balance" in the factors motivating potential Peace Corps volunteers.

"If you don't have a sense of adventure, you're not going to go in the first place. I also like to see people with some professional expectations that will help them stick with it and do a good job, people who want to spend time in another culture, who are curious to learn how other people live," she said.

"If anyone comes in and seems to be particularly strong in any one of those points then I try to make sure they spend more time talking about the other things."

Presently there are about 5,400 Peace Corps volunteers working in 56 different countries within Africa, Asia, the Pacific, Mid East, North Africa and the Caribbean.

The Peace Corps has jobs for interested people with a B.A., B.S. or masters degree in any discipline, although individuals with backgrounds in agriculture, health and nutrition, home economics and community services are especially sought after, Langston said.

The Peace Corps also needs persons with skills such as carpentry, plumbing and woodworking to teach the people of Third World nations in non-formal education projects and on-the-job training.

"We're looking for people with a degree, who've had some work experience, related course work, people who have volunteered for different kinds of projects, people with strong interpersonal skills, people who will be able to deal with a variety of situations," Langston said.

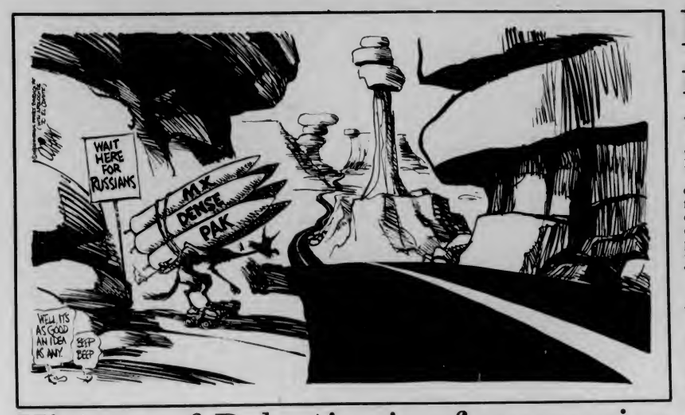
EDITORIAL/OPINION



History of Palestine is of oppression

Palestine is an ancient land. At the start of this century more than 90 percent of its inhabitants were Palestinian Arabs — mostly muslim but with significant numbers of Christians. Their nearly four million descendents alive today are the Palestinian Arab people, generally referred today simply as Palestinians.

They are not a new people; only Western recognition of Palestinians and their national rights is new. The fundamental injustice of the Palestinian dispersal in 1948 is at last penetrating the consciousness and conscience of the Western world.

Abdallah Tamimi

Palestine, located at one of the main "crossroads of civilization," has often undergone foreign invasion, occupation, and control. This conquer-and-rule pattern has meant that outside powers, such as Turkey and Britain — instead of Palestinians themselves — have ruled the nation.

Organized political Zionism, which started in 1897, attained its major goal in 1948 with the creation of a Jewish state. One result: the uprooting and dispersal of hundreds of thousands of Palestinians from their homeland. The name "Israel" replaced Palestine on maps.

Israel's creation caused the homelessness of the first wave of Palestinian refugees as they sought safety in the surrounding Arab countries. The second exodus of large numbers of Palestinians resulted as Israel conquered the areas West Bank of the River Jordan, the Gaza Strip, and the Sinai Peninsula in the 1967 war. Presently, 800,000 Palestinians remain in the West Bank 500,000 in the Gaza Strip.

While the images of Palestinians as refugees and as guerrillas have been the main pictures shown by the Western media, Palestinian achievement, like that of any other national group, has many facets — social, cultural, economic, academic. As though it had recently made this discovery, the New York Times in February of 78 ran a lengthy series of articles on the subject. In one section of that series the Times said that Palestinians in exile have "the highest levels of literacy and academic achievements in the Arab world, dominating the economy of Jordan, filling key positions in the Syrian bureaucracy, forming the professional backbone of Oil states like Kuwait, reporting and editing for a disproportionate number of periodicals that mold Arab opinions."

Regardless of where they are and of their living conditions, Palestinians everywhere cling to the vision of their homeland and insist their right for self-determination. Alienation and homelessness intensify Palestinians' awareness of their national identity.

Crayton seen unfairly in letter

To the Editor:

Last month an editorial appeared in the Collegian dealing with the former Director of the Office of Third World Affairs; Tony Crayton. We were very disappointed that a student chose to criticize Tony on an incident that took place nearly four years ago; particularly since Tony is no longer here to offer a rebuttal.

It is not our intention to recreate the controversy of four years past. Rather, we simply wish to state that Tony is not now nor ever has been a hater of Jewish people or any other people whose race or ethnic background differs from his own. The fact that the controversy Seth referred to in his October 20th editorial left the reader (we feel) with an unreal perspective of Tony's relationship to the Jewish community at UMass. That relationship is evident in the strong and genuine friendship that developed between Tony and Rabbi Saul Perlmutter of Hillel soon after. Recently Saul had this to say about Tony: "Tony and I agreed to disagree — and disagree we did on many many things. But, I'd like to think that both Tony and I benefitted from the fact that we not only talked to each other, but we listened to each other as well. We had a very friendly relationship, one that I valued."

We in the Office of Third World Affairs believe we are speaking for Third World people here at UMass as well as much of the larger community when we write that Tony was a leader and organizer second to none on this campus. More than that however, Tony had that certain quality of humanism that made him truly special and we will forever be proud of the legacy he left behind

When it comes to trying to make this world a better place to live in, we believe there is only one race to belong to — the human race.

Homecoming means unity

I am writing in response to Chris Bacich's article entitled "Black Homecoming Ominously Promotes Segregation," published in the Collegian, November 10, 1982.

I would first like to point out that segregation is a product of the "majority" not the "minority." Let us not forget 20 or 30 short years ago the "majority" of this country legally segregated public facilities such as lunch counters, public bathrooms and waterfountains. Even park benches were legally segregated by the "majority" who posted signs which read "For Whites Only."

Phillip Jennings

The racist laws were then reinforced by state and local police who brutalized Black citizens if they dared oppose the unjust laws established by the "majority." It must be difficult for the "majority" to imagine paying state and federal taxes but not being able to drink from a public waterfountain or buy a hamburger at the local Woolworths Refreshment counter. That was segregation, racist and legal!

The editorial reads, "No wonder there is racism at our university, some students insist on grouping themselves in such a way that it intimidates the "majority."

Black Homecoming is held as a means to unify the Black community, not to intimidate people. If you are intimidated by the promotion of Black unity then maybe you should reach into your sub-conscious and ask yourself why. Black students do attend the university's Homecoming in addition to Black Homecoming which is held annually. Black Homecoming is held to promote Black unity within the community in a positive way, not to threaten people. Black homecoming was clearly advertised and anyone can join in on the festivities. Posters advertising Black Homecoming did not read "For Blacks Only" as did posters of segregation established by the "majority" back in the 50's.

"Black Homecoming is held to promote black unity within the community in a positive way, not to threaten people."

Let's take St. Patricks Day for example. Thousands of Irish descendants march in the St. Patricks Day parade. Are they ominously promoting segregation? No, they are promoting unity and their culture in a positive way. How about the Ku Klux Klan? They are allowed to parade up and down the streets of America promoting racism, hatred and hite supremacy. Why is it that 60 Blac college students are intimidating but the Ku Klux Klan is not? It is obvious that the ignorance which many students possess has limited their vision to narrow-mindedness.

Finally Bacich writes, "Isn't the aim of various cultural organizations to help assimilate and also to alleviate the situation for the "minority" student?

Conversely, I would like to point out that the aim of cultural organizations is not to assimilate. Rather the aim is to help alleviate the situation for the "minority" student by helping them to understand their true history and to reject the distorted, stereotypical version which is continuously forced down our throats by the "majority."

The theory of the "Melting Pot" is diverse ethnic groups bringing their culture to America which would blend together to form a new and unique culture within America. Where as some people insist on believing that diverse ethnic groups who come to America must forget their ethnicity and adopt the norms and values of the Anglo society or the "majority" as Bacich understands it.

In conclusion, we, the so called "minority" students maintain the right to promote our culture and history in the ways we see fit, no different than other ethnic groups, without having to explain or justify their purpose to every other student who questions their existence.

Guardsmen to stand trial in El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A criminal judge Monday ordered five national guardsmen to stand trial in the murder of four American Roman Catholic churchwomen nearly two years ago.

Judge Bernardo Rauda Murcia, who conducted the nine-month equivalent of a grand jury probe here, ruled there is enough evidence for a trial against the guardsmen. Details of the indictment have not been made public.

The case has added significance because of demands from the Reagan administration that this and other cases of alleged government brutality be stopped as a condition for continued U.S. aid.

The United States is providing $238.5 million in economic aid and $81 million in military assistance this year to help the government fight a 3-year-old insurrection by leftist guerillas.

The three Roman Catholic Nuns and a lay worker, who had been working with Salvadoran peasants, were detained and shot dead by a national guard patrol 30 miles outside the capital Dec. 4, 1980. Some showed signs of rape.

The bodies of nuns Ita Ford, 40, of Brooklyn, N.Y., and Maura Clarke, 49, of Queens, N.Y.; Dorothy Dazel, 41, and lay worker Jean Donovan, both of Cleveland, Ohio, were found by then — American Ambassador Robert White. They had been hastily buried in a shallow grave.

Indicted Monday were Sgt. Luis Antonio Colindres Aleman and Guardsmen Franco Orlando Contreras, Jose Roberto Moreno Canjura, Daniel Canales Ramirez and Carlos Joaquin Contreras Palacios, the judge's secretary said.

Afro-Cuban dance and drum delights

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

As a special presentation in celebration of the Caribbean Week, the group "Olu-Bata" performed at the Student Union Ballroom last Sunday night November 14.

"Olu-Bata," is an Afro-Cuban group whose artistic objective is to "show the authentic rhythms and dances (Black Cuba), in an effort to help develop a better understanding of the great cultural, musical and historical value of this fascinating music", Amaro J. Laria, the group leader said.

Cuba was one of the countries in Latin America that recieved a great number of slaves by Spanish colonists. Although these large populations lost their land once they were forced to come to the new world, they refused to lose something very precious to them; something that kept them in contact with their gods and other supernatural beings: their music. To these people music was more than a form of entertainment, music, as Laria explains "was the most intimate way to satisfy their need to identify themselves with nature." As time passed the influence of the Spanish culture clashed with the African culture to form what is called "Afro-Cuban."

"Olu-Bata" is an "authentic" group composed of eight members. Five of these make up the musician sect and the remaining three the dancers sect. I apply the term "authentic" to the group because five of its members have come originally from Cuba during the past three years.

Among these are the lead Vocalist Enrique Cardenas, a "born orator"; Lazaro Lopez, tumba and quinto player; Rodovaldo Miranda, Sandra Rofo, and Lazaro Fernandez, as the dancers. To these five people this performance was as natural as living because they were born into the "Afro-Cuban" culture and belonged to this religion where they practiced these dances as they worshipped their gods.

"Olu-Bata" means "Best of the drum player" in the Yoruba language and as the name implies the group uses a variety of drums: tumba, large conga drum; tres-dos, medium size conga drum; quinto, smallest conga drums, usually the one that improvises; and Bombo, hand bass drum. Other instruments used by the group are cencerro, cowbell; cascara, rhythmic pattern produced with sticks struck on wood; claves, a pair of thick sticks which produce the fundamental beat of these rhythms (2-3; 3-2); and shekere, round gourd with beads strung around it.

This was a special presentation sponsored by AHORA, Spanish students organization in their celebration of Caribbean Week running from November 12 until the 18. This was the second presentation of events to be held. The next event will be a film entitled "Dios Nos cria" on November 17 at 7:00 p.m. in room 903 of the Campus Center.

The last event of the celebration will be a conference with guest speaker Felix Arroyo on, "How Reagan Economics affect the Carribean." This will also be held in room 903 at the Campus Center at UMass.

Black vote makes difference

By NORMAN HILL
A. Philip Randolph Institute

On November 10th President Reagan met with a number of prominent blacks in an effort to improve black perceptions of his Administration. This public relations gesture was a direct result of the clout which black voters demonstrated in nationwide elections on November 2nd.

Within the black community, the 1982 election was widely perceived as an opportunity for registering a protest against the Administration's anti-worker and anti-poor policies. The official unemployment rate of 20.2 percent among blacks drove home the idea that this election involved the basic pocketbook issue of jobs. Black voter participation was heightened by impressive get-out-the-vote efforts mounted nationwide by Operation Big Vote, the NAACP, and the A. Philip Randolph Institute.

Exit polling done by the television networks suggests that nationwide as much as 93 percent of the black vote went for Democratic candidates. But even this indication of the cohesiveness of the black vote does not do total justice to the impact blacks had on the 1982 results.

A clearer picture of that impact can be gleaned from a look at the results in House districts and states with substantial black populations. In the 85 House district in which blacks make up more than 20 percent of the population, Democrats took sixty-eight seats (68) and the Republicans only seventeen (17). In the twelve states in which blacks make up more than 10 percent of the population and in which gubernatorial elections were held, ten Democrats were elected, one Republican was elected and the outcome in one state, Illinois, is still uncertain. In the races for the Senate, of the ten states in which blacks constitute 10 percent or more of the population, eight Democrats were elected. And in the two Republican Senate victories, the margin of victory was 2 percent.

Some political observers argue that blacks voted Democratic out of traditional identification with that party. However, the black vote was based on something quite different and far more sophisticated than mere habit. Blacks voted largely along class lines and as a result of economic and class interests.

Indeed, black voters even went so far as to cast their ballots for such politicians as John Stennis and George Wallace, preferring, one would guess, the lesser of two evils. Nationally, the ranks of the Congressional Black Caucus increased from seventeen to twenty on November 2nd. Four new faces are to be found in the Black Caucus. They are Representatives Major Owens and Ed Towns from New York City; Representative Katie Hall from Gary, Indiana, and Representative Alan Wheat, who was elected in a predominantly white suburb of Kansas City, Missouri.

Regrettably race proved to be a factor in the defeat of Robert Clark, who lost his bid to become Mississippi's first modern-day black congressman. Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley, a moderate Democrat, also was defeated in his quest of California's governorship, largely because he was black.

Yet overall, the results of the election have to be viewed as a step forward for blacks and all working Americans. The fact that the Democrats increased their majority in the House of Representatives from 243 to 269 seats out of 435, that 19 of 33 Democrats running for the Senate were elected, and that Democrats increased by seven their control of governorships was a clear demonstration of widespread voter discontent with Reaganomics. The fact that blue collar workers and union members also returned solidly to the Democratic fold by a vote of some two to one is an indication that it is possible to reconstruct the same coalition for social justice which set the direction for national policy throughout the 1960's.

That the Democrats did not score an even larger electoral victory is in large measure due to the fact that the Democratic Party failed to articulate a comprehensive, unified economic strategy aimed at putting out nation back on the road to recovery. An important battle will be waged within the Democratic Party in 1983 and 1984 over just what such a Democratic program will be. A critical force within that battle will be the coalition of organized labor, blacks, and other minorities.

If blacks and the unions are successful in playing a key role in developing a socially just program for tackling the problems of economic growth, reindustrialization, and modernization, the 1982 election will have been a harbinger of a new decade of social responsibility. If this coalition fails, the working people of our country will continue to suffer from the misguided policies of economic conservatism.

Announcements

Third World Caucus meeting

The Third World Caucus of the Student Senate will hold its weekly meeting at 5 p.m. on Wednesday (Nov. 17) in room 308 Student Union.

Kwanza Planning Meeting

There will be a meeting to plan events for Kwanza on Thursday November 18 at 5 p.m. in room 308 Student Union (OTWA). Please bring ideas and suggestions. For more information call 545-2517.

Brothers and Sisters,

An urgent situation now exists which demands our immediate attention. It concerns the status of the Third World Caucus of the Student Senate. Our interests are simply not being well represented or respected due to the lack of participation of said Organization.

The importance of Third World representation of student government can not be emphasized enough! It would seem obvious that we would want to monitor and have an impact upon decisions on how our money is spent. The future of Third World Student Groups here on campus are in serious jeopardy. Unless we start paying more attention to the issue at hand, there will be little hope for Third World Groups as we now know them. At present the responsibilities of the Caucus are being handled by only a few dedicated people who are overworked and under-supported. We expect to be hearing from representatives of each Third World Group this week. If you are interested in becoming a Student Senator, please contact the Office of Third World Affairs (545-2517). We need you now!!

Greetings! Believe it or not, budget time is rapidly approaching. The Office of Third World Affairs would like to help each non-white student group prepare for the budget process. Being well prepared involves good bookkeeping practices, planning and analysis. We would advise the treasurer of your group to begin assembling all of the data pertinent to your group's current budget as well as a prospective budget for Fiscal 1984. Please call our Office to set up an appointment if you have any questions or conerns. The OTWA is in Room 308 Student Union No. 545-2517.

Wolff returns to the area

By WENDY WALSH
Collegian Correspondent

Edward Albee's Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf is a play of truth and illusion.

It is the story of a prolonged nightcap with two couples, an established professor and his wife, and a new-to-the-game young professor and his meek wife.

It is the story of a floozy, spoiled, biting wife, daughter of the University President, mother of a scholarly son. Truth or illusion?

It is the story of her husband, six years her junior, the bog of the history department who accidently killed his parents and then wrote about it. Truth or illusion?

It is the story of an inevitable young biology professor who married his girlfriend during a hysterical pregnancy, and now plans to mount faculty wives to climb the ladder to success. Truth or illusion?

It is the story of his "wifey mouse" who vomits on schedule and performs secret self-abortions. Truth or illusion?

It is the story of a 21-year-old son, torn between his forever clashing parents and their illusions. Truth or illusion?

Lastly, Virginia Woolf is the story of human relationships portrayed through witty prose and intelligent characters.

Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf is currently being presented by the No Theatre (acquired its name because it has no permanent performance space) at the Resident Theatre at Thornes Market Place. It is fitting that this former Broadway hit be performed in the five college area, for Smith College and Northampton was the location for the film made in the late sixties.

The character of Martha, the condescending wife, is considered by many to be the central role, mainly due to her loudness and ugly sexuality. In character, Judey Fine bears a marked resemblance to Elizabeth Taylor who played the role in the movie. In conjunction with Albee's script, Fine as Martha becomes increasingly vulgar until one wonders if the description of her ugly wart-nosed step-mother is not really a description of herself.

As Martha's husband George, Roy Faudree handles the part superbly. For the most part, George takes his wife's insults, only lashing out with his powerful intellect when he sees fit. His "Get the Guest" game and his invention of their son's death are his two triumphant moments.

The parts of Nick and Honey, the subordinate couple, are perhaps more difficult to play for their character development is more discrete. They must remain spectators most of the time. Honey, played by Jane Karakula, is the hipless, frail, intoxicated wife of an aspiring professor. Karakula brings subtle human characteristics to what might have been a stereotypical part. David Curran, a newcomer to the stage takes the part of Nick and plays it to the hilt. His most prizing moment is when he opens up to George in a man to man talk, getting to use male cliches like "You know women."

The organization of the Thornes theatre space is wonderful. The audience is seated almost in the midst of the set, and is able to perceive the rest of the house easily.

This tight performance of a yet untired subject will be performed next weekend for the final time. Performances are Friday and Saturday night at 8:00 p.m. General Admission is $4.00 and reservations are highly recommended.

Criner and Clouds coming to S.U.B.

By DOUG MUISE
Collegian Correspondent

In what is being touted by valley jazz aficienados as the jazz event of the semester, the contemporary jazz ensemble CLOUDS will perform at 8 p.m. on Sunday November 21 in the Student Union Ballroom. CLOUDS is comprised of seven of the more outstanding jazz musicians on the jazz circuit today. Perhaps the most outstanding is keyboardist Clyde Criner (below). Criner has toured extensively with prominent jazz artists such as Dizzy Gillespie, Harvey Mason, and Billy Harper throughout Spain, Europe, and the United States. He is featured on the new album by Chico Freeman, Tradition in Transition and has performed with bassist Alphonso Johnson on such recordings as Spellbound and The Best of Alphonso Johnson. Other members of the ensemble include Joe Ford on Saxophone; John Blake on Violin; Victor Bailey on electric bass; Omar Hakin on drums; Akau Dixon of cello; and Gail Dixon on violin.

Sunday night's performance is sponsored by the Duke Ellington Committee and the Union Program Council. Tickets are $6 for students and $7 for the general public and are on sale at Union Records.

Nanci Weglowski and Sherri Leigh June, above, star with Breffny Rouse as three friends — Kathy, Joanne and Mary — in Jack Heifner's Vanities. The show has been playing in repertory at the Rand Theatre and will present two final performances, tonight and Saturday at 8 p.m.

Response to the show, which had its origins off-Broadway, has been strongly varied; and if nothing else, the show must be praised for its ability to draw emotions from the audience, to make one think.

The show follows these young women from high school as cheerleaders in 1963 through college as sorority sisters and culminates in a reunion almost ten years later. Between scenes, the women change costumes onstage, metaphorically changing over the years. They grow apart, make individual choices and follow personal ideals. Joanne chooses marriage, Mary chooses freedom and Kathy, always the planner, becomes a somewhat kept woman.

With the exception of a poorly blocked third act, the production was ably directed by David Knauf. Knauf has pulled good, if overwhelming, performances from his actresses. June is a standout and although her ideals are the most questionable, the sincerity and humor she brings to the part make her the most likeable. Rouse, so outrageously impressive in last semester's Pippin, brings the biting obnoxiousness of Mary to a level which renders the character virtually unwatchable. Weglowski's character is thought to be the strongest at the show's conclusion, but this is only because she has very little dialogue.

The show is technically sound. The set is impressive and connects well with the beautiful theater. The Rand's practice of filling up the back of the house first is questionable, however.

Vanities is disturbing. It achieves a delicate balance between pain and humor. But draw your own conclusions, it would be a shame to miss out on a production like this.

New University Gallery exhibits

Recent works by Barbara Zucker
The World of Donald Evans
University Gallery

By ANDREA MILLSTEIN
Collegian Staff

"The Monster," "The Triangle," and "The Ellipse" are not new science fiction movies or chilling novels. They are part of "The Recent Works" exhibit by artist Barbara Zucker on display in the University Gallery.

These three sculptures created for this exhibition stand between eight and nine feet high and are comprised entirely of lattice work. Zucker has taken four layers of black wooden lattice and sandwiched them together to form these awesome architectual creations. The walls in the North and Main Gallery are also painted with a lattice design to emphasize the effect these sculptures project. Zucker has demonstrated a unique technique of using the traditional New England architectual device of lattice to pierce her sculptures.

In the North Gallery, a recent series of steel sculptures entitled "Standing Drawings" are on view. These works have been cut with a metal band saw creating forms that appear to have casual scissor-cut edges. In these Standing Drawings, the artist is attempting to convey her feelings about drawing and sculpture. Many of her creations were inspired by unique methods of sculpture devised by the great Picasso. Also exhibited in the North Gallery are a sampling of Zucker's drawings which contain the imagery of sculpture. Her most recent painting is a 24" x 33½" canvas of mixed medias.

Barbara Zucker is Chairman of the Department of Art at the University of Vermont. Her sculptures have been exhibited extensively in New York and Nebraska.

Imagine illustrating over forty imaginary countries through handpainted postage stamps. This is exactly what the talented Donald Evans has accomplished in the second exhibition in the Gallery. Evans has handpainted almost 4,000 postage stamps beginning in his childhood through his adulthood traveling around the world. In these miniature watercolors, Evans has illustrated over forty fictitious countries each having its own significance. These fantasy countries have names such as Amis et Amants (Friends and Lovers located in France), Lo Stato di Mangiare (The State of Eating in Italy), and La Republica de Banana (a corrupt Central American country). The stamps depict varieties of fruits, vegetables, butterflies, societies, and tropical paradises. The technique Evans uses is simple watercolor on paper, yet each stamp is complete with accuracy and researched detail. The viewer becomes enveloped in this imaginary environment Evans has created through ordinary postage stamps.

Unfortunately, the career of this accomplished artist tragically ended in 1977 in a studio fire, however, the "World of Donald Evans" certainly lives on.

Both of these intriguing exhibits will be on display through December 19. So, the next time the monotony of classes has you down, drop in for a temporary escape into the worlds these two artists have brilliantly created.

It's bowl time in college football, the professional strike continues

By ELLIOTT KALB
Collegian Staff

There are some great college bowl games coming up in the next week or two: Oklahoma-Nebraska and Pitt-Penn State are the best...both meet November 26, the day after Thanksgiving....The Southeastern Conference has an unusual way of deciding tie-breakers: whomever the Sugar Bowl selects! What a joke that conference is — teams in the same conference (Georgia and Alabama, for instance) never have to play each other. Georgia will never meet Alabama with Herschel Walker...

NBC's contract with Major League Baseball is up at the end of this year, with NBC having made the tactical error of signing baseball announcers Joe Garagiola, Dick Enberg, Bob Costas, Tom Seaver (if he retires), and probably Vin Scully from CBS. Baseball can put a gun to NBC's head and double their previous contract.

This year's Tip Off Classic College basketball game between defending national champion North Carolina and Big East power St. John's will be televised by NBC to kick off their college schedule. If the football strike is still in effect, the game from Springfield's Civic Center will be shown Sunday afternoon. If the strike is settled, the game will be played on Saturday.

The New York Knicks are going through all sorts of problems tantamount to what the Celtics went through a few years ago. Please Celtic fans, don't be too hard on us Knicks fans. It's not easy rooting for Truck Robinson, Bill Cartright, And Marvin "Unabridged" Webster...Remember Sidney Wicks and Bob McAdoo.

Any NBA All-Star team could include Magic Johnson, Marques Johnson, Kareem Abdul Jabbar-Johnson, Larry Bird Johnson (not to be confused with Lady Bird Johnson), and Johnson and Johnson's.

On the final four-day series of the year between Milwaukee and Baltimore in early October, a reporter asked Mike Flanagan about his former days at UMass: "In my sophomore year, I had more complete games than credits." Way to go, Mike...Come to think about it, I have more columns in this semester than credits.

Other excellent sports books that escaped my attention in writing a previous column include Jerry Kramer's Instant Replay and Jim Bouton's Ball Four. Just testing, sports fans.

It came to me in my dreams — the winner of the NCAA college basketball season will be Memphis State. Keith Lee was the best freshman in the nation last year, and is just awesome. Georgetown is every bit as good as last season.

The NFL strike situation is reaching ridiculous proportions. It's a terrible situation, altering the way millions of Americans spend their working or leisure time, disrupting a familiar way of life. Especially now that it is cold outside.

In that sense, it's far worse that the hostage crisis in Iran. If you think about it, the Iran crisis affected the lives of slightly more than 52 American families. The NFL strike affects half the population.

My solution to the NFL strike: start everyone 0-0 when play resumes and pick up the season as seeduled. Play until January 23 (a week before the scheduled Super Bowl in Los Angeles) by making up selected weeks of the schedule missed by lottery. Eliminate playoffs in a strike-shortened season and play the Super Bowl this way:

Take the all-star performers from the divisional winners (say the Miami, San Diego, and Pittsburgh teams in the AFC if they all win their divisions and all-stars from the NFC divisional winners like the 49ers, the Lions, and the Cowboys.) This way, the season is resumed, now thrown away when a settlement is reached. Also, no team can lay claim to a 1982 Super Bowl, but the divisional rivalry is renewed, the Super Bowl is played, and records are kept and maintained....Just a suggestion.

ENROLL IN AMERICA'S LARGEST MANAGEMENT TRAINING PROGRAM.

Becoming an officer in today's Army—which also includes the Army Reserve and Army National Guard—requires getting the right kind of management and leadership training.

What's the best way to get it? By enrolling in America's largest management training program-Army ROTC.

In the Army ROTC 4-year program, you'll acquire discipline of mind and spirit, and the ability to perform under pressure. We call it learning what it takes to lead.

It'll pay off, too. First, during your last two years of college, when you'll start receiving up to $1,000 a year.

And, most of all, on graduation day, when you receive a commission along with a college degree.

ARMY ROTC. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Women swimmers starting fast; take out Smith

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

Women's swimming is underway at the University of Massachusetts, and this year's edition of the UMass swim team is off to a fine start.

The Minutewomen started the season with a win over the University of Vermont last Thursday and continued their winning ways by routing Smith College 85-64.

"The team swam well and were really up for the Smith meet," said UMass coach Valerie Turtle. "We've started off well and we want to keep it going."

The swimmers got off to a fast start in the Smith meet, never trailing after the UMass 200 medly relay team of Debbie Chisholm, Laurie Keen, Rosalie Nataupski, and Jean Nicolai won the opening event with a time of 1:56.27.

UMass featured four triple winners and blew out a Smith team that Turtle considered a quality opponent.

"I thought they would be stronger but they had some injuries, said Turtle." But, that is something every team has to deal with.

Freshman Laurie Keen appears to be a valuable addition to the UMass swim program. After only two meets she has impressed Turtle considerably.

Keen was a triple winner against Smith. In addition to her part in the medley relay win she also won the 100 yard breaststroke with a time of 1:12.89 and the 200 yard breaststroke with a 2:41.99 time.

"Breaststroke was a gap in the team last year," said Turtle. "But the best thing about Laurie is that she improved her time over the Vermont meet."

The next meet for the women swimmers is Saturday at the University of Connecticut. Turtle expects a tough meet.

"They beat University of New Hampshire, which is a good strong team. It looks like they have some good freshmen," said Turtle.

Turtle indicated that there was a surprising number of spectators at the Smith meet.

"We had quite a few people in the stands against Smith and that had to help," she said.

Lesinski leads UMass defense in UNH rout

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

You could see them on the sideline, in their maroon varsity jackets, following play up and down the sidelines during the University of Massachusetts 27-0 rout of the University of New Hampshire Saturday at Alumni Stadium.

They are the fallen Minutemen players, players whose seasons were ended or curtailed by injuries. These were the people who were supposed to be a big part in the 1982 football season, but they were injured.

But for every injury victim, a chance arises for another player, someone who might not have had the chance to play regularly, to step in and show the coaches and fans that he can play.

Craig Lesinski has done that and much more. The junior linebacker stepped in for the injured Steve Foreman the third game of the year against Harvard and has been a fixture at linebacker ever since.

The junior from Walpole leads the Massachusetts defense in tackles and assisted tackles, and has three interceptions to his credit, trailing only safety Grady Fuller, who leads the team with four interceptions.

Against New Hampshire Lesinski came up with his finest game of the year. He had three unassisted tackles, assisted on nine other hits, picked off two passes, and also came away with the only UMass quarterback sack of the day.

"Lesinski played a tremendous football game," said UMass head coach Bob Pickett after Saturday's whitewash of the Wildcats. "The whole defensive unit had a great day."

It was an incredible defensive performance at Alumni Stadium Saturday. The Minutemen defense held New Hampshire to an embarrassing 67 total yards on offense (29 yards rushing, 38 yards passing).

Granted, New Hampshire isn't exactly Penn State, but we're talking about a UMass defense that has been put together week to week by Pickett and defensive coach Jimmy Reid, depending largely on the injury count of the previous week.

"It was just a tremendous accomplishment by our defense today," said Pickett.

If you can hold a team, any team to 67 total yards in a football game, you've got yourself a tough defense.

Men's basketball: Playing in the Atlantic Ten

Three point play instituted

UMass basketball coach Tom McLaughlin doesn't feel the newly instituted three point play in the Atlantic Ten Conference will have that great an effect, but you never know.

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The road to a winning season for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team will be paved with more than one possible pitfall since their league, the newly formed Atlantic Ten is filled with a couple of very good basketball teams.

"The league as a whole is very balanced," said head coach Tom McLaughlin. "You have teams like West Virginia, Rutgers, Temple and Saint Joseph's which are a little bit better than the other teams but, on any given night anyone can knock off each other."

The way things stack up right now, McLaughlin is working with a team that features seven sophomores (including Skip Connors who hasn't played in a game yet) and four freshmen. The team is a good one, but is still strong.

"I know we'll be decent," said McLaughlin, "but I can't tell exactly how we'll do. It's too early."

Keeping in mind that the Minutemen were in just about every game they played last year and remembering that the squad is supposed to be better this time around, the outlook for success is higher than McLaughlin's first season.

"I think that just by the addition of all the new players, we're gonna be very competitive," said McLaughlin.

The league will also have some new twists to keep the fans guessing while watching the game. The innovations are the implementation of a 40 second clock and the one that has caused a lot of buzzing in the NBA, a three point shot.

The three point shot will enable some teams who possess accurate bombadiers to come back in a contest even if they are down by more than a couple of points towards the end of a game.

Other than the end of the game, McLaughlin doesn't think that there will be any major changes in style just because a long shot is worth an extra point.

"Everybody's looking at it (the three point line) from the bleachers without seeing defenders or a crowd in the stands. How many times in a game do you see someone shoot from that far out?" he said.

The interesting point that McLaughlin brought out when talking about who would shoot three point shots for UMass should a situation call for one , was his order of selection.

"John Hempel has a natural shot from there," McLaughlin pointed out first. "Donald Russell and A.J. Wynder can hit it. Skip Connors can also hit that shot."

Hempel is the big recruit story of last spring. He is 6'7" tall. If UMass has a big man with that kind of range, watch out.

As for the 40 second clock, which is a clock which starts every time a team takes possession of the ball, it allows 40 seconds to that team to get a shot off. Basically, it is just a slower 24 second clock. McLaughlin doesn't feel it will have that great an impact either.

"The 40 second clock or three point play won't change the way we play at all because our philosophy is going to be to play as if it isn't there," he said.

One way or the other, the new rules will at least have a minor effect on the way the game is played and while McLaughlin hasn't been working on setting up for the bomb, he does plan to do so within the next week.

And you never know, maybe if John Hempel decides to start firing them up from 20 feet, UMass fans can be treated to a real shootout at the Cage.

President's order affects scientific investigations

By RUSSELL TURNER
Collegian Correspondent

An executive order issued by President Ronald Reagan may have serious implications for the future of scientific research at universities.

"The interests of the United States and its citizens require that certain information concerning the national defense and foreign relations be protected against unauthorized disclosure," states the preamble to Executive Order 12356, issued by the President April 2.

"Without academic freedom, university research would not exist," said University of Massachusetts physics professor Hajime Sakai, one of the first scientists to be affected by the presidential order. Sakai was instructed by the Defense Department last August not to publish two papers on infrared spectroscopy in the upper atmosphere.

In contrast to previous executive orders concerning classification of information, the most recent being that of President Carter, Executive Order 12356 significantly broadens the authority of the government to classify information as secret. Some of these changes include:

— A removal of a previous requirement for classification that damage to national security be 'identifiable.'

— A new provision for indefinite classification.

— A directive stating that questions about whether or not to classify research be resolved in favor of classification.

— An expansion of categories of classification to include non-classified research developed by scientific investigators outside the government.

"Executive Order 12356...gives unprecedented authority to government officials to intrude at will in controlling academic research that depends upon federal support," a recent report of the American Association of University Professors states.

"The order permits and encourages the classification of information merely on the speculative assertion that its open dissemination may damage the national security."

The Pentagon, which responded to the executive order by creating a new office and publishing Department of Defense Directive 5020.1 last August, disagrees.

"I don't think it's a drastic departure from past practice. It's a practical approach to the government's security needs," Chief of the Armed Forces News Branch, James B. Freeman said.

"The trend towards government openness went virtually unchallenged for 30 years and we supported that for a long time. The previous executive order (of the Carter Administration) looked upon classification almost as an evil to be avoided at all costs."

Freeman pointed out that the only additional agency authorized to classify information under the new executive order is the Environmental Protection Agency.

Executive Order 12356 expands the definition of "confidential," the lowest level of classification, to include all that could reasonably "be expected to cause damage to the national security." This is a change from the previous wording of "identifiable damage to national security."

Under the order, information "produced by or for" the government is subject to classification and sanctions may be imposed on government "contractors and grantees" who violate the executive order.

A provision in the order says "basic scientific research information not clearly related to the national security may not be classified."

Professor Sakai's papers were two of 92 papers due to be presented at an international optics symposium in San Diego and suppressed by the Pentagon in a last minute move that angered many scientists.

"In this particular instance a very firm directive came from Air Force Headquarters saying that unless the papers had been specifically reviewed by the Department of Defense they should not be presented," John T. Obrien, a spokesman at Hanscom Air Force Base said. Hanscom Air Force Base, through the Air Force Geophysical Research Laboratory, has funded Professor Sakai's research.

Professor Sakai had already submitted his papers to the Air Force for review and had been cleared at the local level to publish them. The decision was then reversed until last week.

The incident in San Diego created a storm of protest from scientists and scientific organizations throughout the country, but UMass was the only university of officially complain to Washington, according to Samuel F. Conti, dean of Graduate Studies and Research at the University.

Many universities depend on Department of Defense contracts for their funding, Conti said. It is not surprising that most have been afraid to stick their necks out, he added.

The incident created concern that there might be a conflict with UMass policy that disapproves of classified research and prohibits the University from entering into any grants or contracts that require outside approval before publication.

"It is legally within the rights of federal agencies to screen any research that they fund," Conti said. The Pentagon was not violating UMass policy because technically they only delayed publication and did not suppress it, he siad.

Conti has been in touch with many national organizations on this subject and will be attending a conference dealing with the issue in Colorado Springs in December.

"It's pretty much agreed that free university research is the bulwark of scientific research," he said. "Every scientific society and the National Academy of Sciences is looking into this and I don't think it's been resolved yet."

UMass health council report aims to curb alcohol abuse

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Staff

The trickle of Friday afternoon student customers to local package stores develops into a flood by early evening. As some students finish up their classes, they head for the liquor, not sure where they're going or what they're doing later in the evening, but sure that they'll have their alcohol.

In order to combat student alcohol abuse at the University of Massachusetts, the UMass Health Council has written a special report on student alcohol use and abuse on campus which it will present to the Faculty Senate.

The report lists seven proposals the council feels will help solve the problems that result from alcohol abuse on campus.

The report suggests giving students alternative weekend activities that are not alcohol-oriented. The report also recommends students be provided with safer ways to get home from local bars.

The report also suggests the University establish a campus policy saying alcohol abuse is unacceptable behavior and will not be tolerated.

It calls on the vice chancellor for Student Affairs, Dennis Madsen, to create a task force to address the issue of alcohol abuse on campus. The force would include representatives from Health Services, Academic Support Services, residence halls, the Dean of Students office, the Student Activities Office, the Department of Public Safety and the five area governments. This task force would look at the need for alcohol education discussion in the New Students program, enforcement of the existing policy in the residence halls and strengthening the existing disciplinary system. It also seeks to establish policies that would limit the amount of alcohol served at campus sponsored events, encourage non-drinking alternatives for students at night and on weekends and review the Collegian's policy for accepting ads for "two-for-one" - and "all-you-can-drink" - type functions.

The report asks, provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs Loren Baritz to open Boyden and NOPE gymnasiums and other recreational facilities on weekend nights to encourage students to participate in activities other than drinking on weekends.

It also calls for Acting Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse to arrange for transportation to and from off-campus bars and other party sites on weekend nights. The transportation would be paid for by students on a fare basis.

The report suggests that Food Services and the Campus Center establish and operate coffee houses to provide non-alcoholic entertainment on weekends, with the Fine Arts Council providing the talent for these events.

The report urges courses that address abnormal behavior to make alcohol abuse a part of their curricula.

Finally, it requests the faculty to try to recognize alcohol-related problems in counseling and advising.

The study resulted from an editorial in the Collegian on Dec. 4, 1981 which said students have little else to do on campus except drink on the weekends. The Health Council then decided to address the issue of alcohol abuse to see if it could rectify some of the problems raised in that editorial.

Journalism myths debunked by Canadian correspondent

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Staff

Canadian journalist, author and editor Walter Stewart last night said journalism is in high demand, not in low repute, contrary to popular opinion.

During an address to his largest American audience of about 50 people at the School of Business Administration, Stewart rigorously revealed what he sees to be the major misconceptions surrounding the press in a talk called "The Seven Myths of Journalism: A Canadian Perspective."

Stewart told his listeners the "myth of objectivity," held more widely by journalists than by the public, is "the notion journalists can be counted on to view events around them with scientific detachment — a bizarre notion."

Because objectivity does not exist, Stewart said he could not envision a Washington reporter being able to refrain from developing a political bias in his work. To think otherwise, he said, is only misleading. Rather than claiming something that cannot be delivered, fairness — not objectivity — should be pursued by the media.

The second myth, that of "journalistic belligerance", portrays journalists as "sturdy individuals" compromising a "tough group" of reporters. Stewart said despite the notion that journalists reveal information attackingly, the dominant trend in news delivery points to "exercise in mush-mouthing" that serve to support, rather than criticize, dominant public figures and policies of the day.

A "hard-digging" journalist is characteristic of the 'myth of the tireless investigator," a role Stewart said can be seen exclusively on the Lou Grant show. "Real investigative reporting," he said "is not the norm for journalism."

Journalists like Woodward and Bernstein of the Washington Post were considered to be "freaks" and were treated as such by that newspaper, he said.

Calling the "journalist as the defender of freedom," his fourth myth, Stewart said "there have been times when journalists fought long and hard for freedom but there have been other times when they have run with the pack."

During the McCarthy era and the Civil Rights movement, he said journalists merely covering the freedom fighting activities and not engaging in them, most often "kept their head down and their mouths shut."

Stewart said the pages of newspapers are available for the "rich and the righteous" and not for the "poor and pitiable." This fact fact dispells "the myth of the journalist as a friend of the little people." Because it is not the views of the "little people" that are sought to be "embodied in print," he said "there is nothing remarkable about the fact that journalists follow movers and shakers — they are after all, movers and shakers themselves."

IRS unveils new tax form; will make singles' life E-Z

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service yesterday formally unveiled the 1982 income-tax forms, including a new 1040EZ that may be the ultimate in simplicity. But IRS said there may be no way to simplify the long Form 1040.

At the same time, Internal Revenue Service Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. said the Reagan administration is reviewing its decision to end the toll-free phone service for answering taxpayers' questions on how to file their tax returns. That decision has met with strong dissent in Congress and Egger agreed it is possible the "hot line" will be continued.

The chief purpose of the news conference was to draw attention to the new 1040EZ form, which the Internal Revenue Service anticipates will be used by 11 million single people when the filing of 1982 returns starts on Jan. 1.

The Internal Revenue Service now has three basic forms for individual taxpayers:

—The 1040EZ, a single page accented in mint green with only 11 lines of figures to fill in — and the Internal Revenue Service has printed in one of the 11, the $1,000 personal exemption. This form can be used only by single people who have no dependents, no tax credits, taxable income under $50,000 and all of it from wages, tips and no more than $400 of interest.

However, a new deduction of up to $25 for charitable contributions for taxpayers who don't itemize deductions may be taken on any of the three forms.

—The 1040A is a two-page, 31-line pink-tinted form usable by any taxpayer with taxable income under $50,000 in wages, tips, interest, dividends and unemployment compensation. It can be used to claim the new deduction for working couples to help offset the "marriage penalty," or to take a credit for the working poor or for political contributions.

Amherst Student chides alumni: 'grow up or stay at home'

AMHERST (AP) — "Grow up or stay home." That was the message the Amherst College student newspaper delivered to high living old grads after the 161-year-old liberal arts college's annual alumni homecoming weekend.

"Recalling the worst of their college days, many alumni were back to romp in what they seemed to think was their private playground," said an Amherst Student editorial on Monday after nearly 2,000 alumni and their families visited the campus Saturday.

Many attended undergraduate-hosted dormitory and fraternity parties after Amherst dumped Williams 52-26 for the Little Three football title in the 101st meeting between the two schools.

"Drinking irresponsibly, all too many did damage to college dorms and fraternities with puerile delight," said the editorial.

"So while, it may seem a hard line to take after this weekend, we have only one injunction: grow up or stay home..."

Brad Campbell, 22, a Philadelphia senior and chairman of the newspaper's editorial board, said he waked up Sunday, "finding doors smashed, glass cases smashed and other damage."

Many alumni "won't react positively ... and will feel a sense of ingratitude because they are a source of money," he said. "The ones who are really the problem aren't those who care enough to give anyway."

William Mueller, college maintenance director, said there was some vandalism in one dormitory and in some fraternity houses, but it was impossible to tell who was responsible.

"Everything considered, we didn't have too much," Mueller said. "Whatever the damage was, it was more of a superficial type, such as broken windows and defaced walls, but nothing of a structural nature."

Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia said police received no calls of rowdiness from the college.

'New girl' rivals 'old boy'

BOSTON (AP) — A New Girl Network, rivaling the Old Boy Network that supposedly helps men get ahead in business, is growing out of a women's-only graduate school of management that claims to teach students how to compete with, if not beat, men at their own game.

"I don't do business until I pick up my alumnae directory and see who is doing what," said Sheryl R. Marshall, 33, a graduate of Simmons College's Graduate School of Management and a self-proclaimed member of what she calls the New Girl Network.

Ms. Marshall is one of two women stock brokers in the Boston office of New York Stock Exchange member Drexel Burnham Lambert.

A graduate of the Class of '76, the second in the eightyear-old women's program, Ms. Marshall, the mother of a 3-year-old daughter, says she also works the network by keeping in touch with a classmate, now a partner in one of the country's largest venture capital firms.

"I want her to alert me to any new stock issues coming on the market," she explained.

The directory indicates how far the New Girl Network has flung since Simmons started its graduate program in 1974 with a $12,000 shoestring grant and 51 students and five professors.

Docs testify on child abuse

BROCKTON (AP) — Two doctors have testified in the trial of a Brockton couple accused of child neglect that 6-year-old Keith Harmelle suffered from malnutrition and had lost up to a quarter of his body weight in the three months before he died.

Dr. Eli Newberger, a pediatrician at Children's Hospital Medical Center in Boston, told a Superior Court jury Monday that on the day Keith died, Jan.6, 1981, the boy weighed only 36 pounds, 10 pounds less than he weighed the previous October.

Newberger, an expert in child abuse and neglect, was testifying in the trial of Paul and Theresa Orme, foster parents charged with child neglect in Keith's death.

"He was malnourished," Newberger said."I base this on the objective observation of the loss of 20 to 25 percent of his body weight in an interval of no longer than 10 weeks."

Newberger also said an autopsy showed there were six marks underneath the boy's scalp, caused by brain movement that is the result of trauma or force.

Newberger said his investigation showed a pattern of neglect and abuse of other children in the Ormes' care.

Medical examiner Dr. Howard Carpenter said Keith died of bloodclots migrating to the lungs, a condition triggered by malnourishment and very unusual in a child of that age.

Space shuttle commander says 'Yes sir, we deliver'

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — The space shuttle returned to Earth yesterday as a tried-and-true carrier of space cargo, its commander exulting, "Yes sir, we deliver." With dawn's early light shining off the American flag on its side, the shuttle cut through desert clouds to a centerline landing.

"We've been on a fantastic voyage," Vance Brand said.

Making it look easy, the spacecraft commander steered Columbia over California's Mojave Desert and glided to a smooth stop with more than 5,000 feet of concrete left.

"You certainly lived up to the motto on this flight," Roy Bridges at the console in Mission Control, told the astronauts.

The motto, repeated often during the flight, was "We Deliver."

Columbia flight five was the first operational mission of the world's first reusable spacecraft. With more than 10 million miles on its flight log, the ship will undergo a 10-month overhaul.

Challenger, the next ship in the fleet, is being readied at Cape Canaveral to take the next three flights, beginning with flight six, Jan. 24. James A. Abrahamson, NASA's associate administrator for space flight, said the space walk scrubbed on Monday because of malfunctioning space suits may be taken then "if we are certain we understand exactly went wrong and have corrected it."

Mission specialist Joseph Allen recalled that after he and William Lenoir deployed two communications satellites last week Brand commented that the only flight objectives left were an EVA (extravehicular activity) and a landing. Allen said he responded:

"If we have to make a choice, we want a safe landing. It turned out we made that choice."

As might be expected, Columbia no longer looked as if it just came out of the box. Its white surfaces were streaked with smudges. Its dark surfaces were more gray than black.

Thirty minutes after touchdown, the astronauts — Brand, pilot Robert Overmyer, Allen and Lenoir — stepped from the ship that had been their home for five days. Waving and smiling, they bounced jauntily, one after the other, down a stair ramp, walked around Columbia and appeared pleased with what they saw.

Although the space walk was scrubbed, Columbia accomplished its primary goals: acting as a carrier, then a launch platform for two communications satellites.

The satellites were deployed on flight days one and two. Their own rockets then sent them to their "stationary" orbit 22,300 miles above the equator.

The space walk scheduled for mission specialists Lenoir and Allen was abandoned when both their $2 million suits malfunctioned. If it can't be worked into flight six, it will be scheduled for flight seven, Abrahamson said.

Students to lobby for financial aid in Capitol

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

Students Advocating Financial Assistance (SAFA) will be making its fourth trip to Washington, D.C. to lobby for financial aid during the weekend following Thanksgiving.

The main purpose of the trip, according to SAFA Co-president Jim Shaw, is to insure the reinstatement of the continuing resolution, a bill that constitutes a major portion of federal financial aid to students. It is known at the level funding bill.

About 40 students will leave the University of Massachusetts at noon Sunday, November 28. Students will visit senators and representatives on Monday and Tuesday, returning late Tuesday night.

Student lobbyists will thank supporters of financial aid legislation while asking for their continued support. They will try to enlighten opponents of financial aid, explaining the reasons why they should support student assistance, Shaw said.

Opposing legislators often cite waste and misuse of funds as reason for voting down financial aid legislation, Shaw said.

"Education is a basic foundation of economic growth in this country. It's a terrible thing when a congressman can't see the importance of education," he said.

SAFA expects to meet with most of the Massachusetts delegation as well as key legislators from out-of-state, including Rep. Paul Simon, D-Ill, chairman of the House sub committee on Post-Secondary Education. Shaw said he expects ten groups of four people to make the rounds during the lobbying period.

"We don't change a lot of votes, but we do make an impact," Shaw said. "The Speaker of the House (Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill) always supports us. It's always helpful to have the Speaker of the House on your side."

Shaw said more than 80 percent of the student body is affected by SAFA's efforts. SAFA membership includes students receiving financial aid as well as those who don't, Shaw said.

Dealing with Congress directly is the only way to really understand the way it works, Shaw said.

"It's a very intricate institution," he said.

"Many students in the past have said it's easier to see your congressman than it is to see your professor," said Gerry Grady, Coordinator of Community Relations at UMass. Grady, who advises SAFA, is going on the trip to Washington.

SAFA plans to organize similar student groups at other universities in the state and the rest of New England.

Military buildup may reduce job opportunities for women

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

President Reagan's economic policies, particularly his adament stance on military spending, have cut jobs and job opportunities for women, said a Wellesley College professor.

Theresa Amott, who has taught labor economics at Wellesley College for four years, spoke about "Reaganomics and the Working Woman" yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

"less than one percent of human beings employed in military contracts are women," Amott said. "Women's voting patterns suggest women are willing to make a stand against military spending because they realize it holds no future for them."

"Military spending doesn't generate jobs women have traditionally held, which is not to say women want those traditional jobs. But women are not going to be employed in these contracts," she said.

Amott criticized Reagan's military buildup. Instead of spending $50,000 for one military job, she suggested creating five jobs in social services with $10,000 salaries.

"Military spending is programatic. It doesn't generate jobs for the equivalent amount of military spending," she said. "The government has very sophisticated weapons which cost a lot of money, don't work very well and we have to pay for them. We pay taxes and they (the government) turn around and pay for weapons."

"I'd like to see that same anger that was focused on the 2½ proposition here directed toward military spending," she said.

Much of Reaganomics involves spending less money in other areas of the government programs and directing that money towards military spending, Amott said.

"Obviously the social programs had to go," Amott said. "They had to go for political reasons, to make room for military spending."

Amott said she does not think Reagan's budget cuts in other governmental agencies were intended to force women out of work. He wants to eliminate the agencies and it can not be helped that women are a major part of these agencies, she said.

However, one of the major problems with Reaganomics is Reagan's belief about American workers, she said.

"Reagan believes it is necessary to discipline the 'highly paid' American worker," she said. By cutting down unemployment benefits and social welfare programs, Reagan believes workers will be more willing to accept any type of low-paying job, she said.

Employers are beginning to realize that they may have cut labor costs so much that no one has any money to buy their products.

"The economy could get worse because of the inability to sell goods and services because so many people are unemployed," she said. "We may have gone too far with the economy."

Amott's presentation was the fourth segment of an eight-part series dealing with women and work.

Spectrum calls destruction 'specific act of vandalism'

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Staff

The publishers of Spectrum magazine have decided to report the destruction of 3,000 copies of their publications that were being stored in a dressing room in the Campus Center Auditorium as a "specific act of vandalism" against their organization.

Charles Francis Carroll, Spectrum managing editor, said after a discussion with Irene Richards in the Recognized Student Organizations Student Activities Office, the magazine reported the destruction to the police as an act of vandalism aimed specifically at that group.

Carroll said, earlier this semester, 25 out of 30 boxes of magazines had been ripped apart, the magazines torn in half, the walls of the dressing room spray painted with yellow paint and the lightbulbs broken.

Carroll said the Campus Center failed to report the vandalism when it happened.

"The original vandalism wasn't reported by Building Operations," Carroll said. "They probably went in there, saw a mess and just wanted to clean it up."

However, Dudley Bridges, director of Building Operations at the Campus Center, said his office did report the vandalism and that the magazine was to blame for the vandalism.

"We did call the police on that and they came over," he said. "Besides, it wasn't storage space. They were supposed to remove their stuff. They weren't supposed to leave it there for a year."

Bridges also said Carroll exaggerated the amount of damage that took place, claiming there was only "10 or 11 boxes" that were destroyed.

Carroll said the Student Judiciary also received an anonymous charge of "mismanagement of the magazine."

Because of vandalism, Spectrum has had to cancel its plans to distribute an issue this semester. Carroll said. He said the organization is now beginning its submission drive for the next edition.

Graduate senators propose seperate commencements

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate last night voted unanimously to propose a separate graduation ceremony for graduate students.

The proposal was put forth by a special subcommittee formed by the senate to investigate the idea's feasibility. The subcommittee investigated separate commencements at other large schools and how they had been received. The group noted that seperate graduate commencement exercises are held at the University of Minnesota and Michigan State University.

The subcommittee's original proposal called only for further investigation into the idea. It also included a clause that allowed for the review of the exercises. That proposal was amended in the senate because senators believed the clause was not needed.

The new proposal, which the senate will send to UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey, read: "The Graduate Student Senate proposes a separate commencement for graduate students effective within this academic year."

Senate President Jack A. Delmond said Duffey had expressed his support for a separate commencement at a meeting last week. According to Delmond, Duffey said that he recognized graduate students' need for a different type of speaker than undergraduates and had encouraged the senate to come up with a proposal.

During debate, senators noted that a separate commencement could be approached in a number of ways. Graduate and undergraduate exercises could be held at different times on the same day, on different days of the same weekend, on the same day and time in a different location, or the graduate ceremony could be held in December.

Senators pointed out that separate commencement exercises would allow graduate students to get more attention upon receiving their degrees and would also draw more media coverage to the University. Senators said a graduate commencement would draw prestigious and more academically-inclined speakers and that separate ceremonies would be much easier on friends and relatives to attend.

Although the senate's proposal calls for the separate ceremonies to be implemented this year, Delmond said the possible additional costs of these ceremonies may prevent the University from implementing the proposal this year.

Health advisory board wants students to quit during Smokeout Day

By DAN LEBERFIELD
Collegian Staff

Smokers from coast to coast are asked to participate in the Sixth Annual Great American Smokeout tomorrow. The goal of the project, sponsored by the American Cancer Society, is to get at least one in every five smokers nationwide to give up their cigarette habit from midnight today to midnight tomorrow.

Locally, the Student Health Advisory Board at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is sponsoring smokeout activities. A booth at the Campus Center will feature buttons, stickers and a prize to the individual with the closest guess of the number of broken cigarettes in a jar.

Larry Hagman is returning as national chairman for this year's smokeout. Last year Hagman sponsored a "Quit Smoking Letter Contest." The winner of the contest, Mrs. Janet MacAinish, proposed that everyone trying to kick the habit should wear a rubber band around their wrists as a reminder not to smoke. This year the American Cancer Society will be distributing red rubber bands, with Hagman's photo and signature attached to them to all participants.

"The day is designed to get people to stop smoking for the day but hopefully they will quit for longer," said local Smokeout organizer Ruth Coburn.

In 1981, according to a Gallop poll, over 16 million Americans attempted to give up smoking on Smokeout Day. Over 5 million of the participants succeeded for the full 24 hours. Eleven days later, nearly 3 million of these people were still not smoking.

"If people don't give up smoking after the Smokeout at least they saw they can go for a while without smoking and maybe next time they will quit for good," Coburn said.

Dukakis pledges to improve record of appointing women to government

BOSTON — Conceding his first administration could have done better in placing women in government, Gov.elect Michael S. Dukakis pledged yesterday to do a better job this time but declined to promise fulfilling a feminist demand to double the number over the next four years.

"I don't think it's unrealistic," Dukakis said of the aim of the Massachusetts Coaltion for Women's Appointments. "I've had some experience with lead pipe guarantees in the past which makes me reluctant to get into the numbers game."

"But more than 50 percent of our citizens in the state are women and a great many of them voted for Mike Dukakis and John Kerry, so we're going to work very hard to open up this process..."

Women hold about 15 percent of the 3,000 jobs filled by gubernatorial appointment, said Florence Rubin, a coalition coordinator and former League of Women Voters president.

"We aim to try to have that doubled so at the end of this adminstration, we will have about 30 percent filled by women," she added.

Ms. Rubin said the coalition of 30 women's groups is soliciting resumes to create a pool of qualified women available for appointment.

"I think you know that John Kerry and I share those concerns, share those goals, share your commitment," said Dukakis. "We're going to do everything that we can to make that reality.

Auto insurance increases certain

BOSTON — State Insurance Commissioner Michael J. Sabbagh says an increase in automobile insurance rates is certain next year, but the specifics won't be decided until December.

Sabbagh recently conducted hearings into the industry's request for a $216 million rate hike in 1983, about 19.4 percent on a statewide average. Legal briefs summarizing the participants' arguments are due in today.

The three recommendations before Sabbagh are the industry's 19.4 percent increase request, a 2.5 percent hike proposed by Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti's office, and a 7.3 percent increase recommended by the State Rating Bureau.

Herpes — no one's laughing

To the Editor:

In regard to October 29th's joke issue; more specifically, the supposedly amusing herpes stories:

I want whoever was responsible for both writing and approving these stories to realize what they did in doing so. I want you to picture the reader who has herpes. This person may be having a first infection, or a recurrence, or may simply be waiting for another infection to occur. He or she is experiencing tremendous physical and psychological pain, which cannot be described adequately. He or she is wondering whether or not a normal life will ever be possible, and facing the possibility of spending life alone. This person is thinking that he may be rejected by anyone with whom he might otherwise have had a relationship. The last thing in the world he needs to see is articles like the two printed in the Collegian. As that student out there, the one of more than 20 million persons who have herpes, sat reading those words last week, he or she quietly died inside. I want you to think about that for a while. I want you to remember that the next time you think about telling a herpes joke. One can learn to live with herpes, but herpes is not funny. The jokes hurt.

Criticism of Homecoming letter

To the Editor:

I would like to comment on the letter of Chris Bacich ("Black Homecoming Ominously Promotes Segregation." 11-10). To whom is Bacich addressing his queries? Does his inquisitiveness stem from genuine curiosity, irresponsible ignorance, or callous self-righteousness?

America is not a homogeneous melting pot. There are diverse people with various backgrounds, etc. The idea that everybody should do what the majority does is ridiculously chauvinistic. People of color are usually excluded from the 'regular' Homecoming. Who seeks our opinion and ideas when planning Homecoming? Our involvement and participation is either ignored, not solicited or written off. Bacich makes some extremely offensive and incorrect statements: "Who in their right mind holds the notion that Black students should have a different homecoming?...There is a blatant segregationist attitude being displayed here. No wonder there is racism at our University..."students grouping themselves...intimidates the majority."

This sounds like "blame the victim" to me. Afrikan-Americans do not make up any "little cult." We also do not impose our will upon the larger community. Nor do I think that a celebration of Black pride, history and accomplishments in any way "nurtures racist sentiments." There is nothing sentimental about racism. People of color did not invent racism, it grew and continues to fester like a deadly bacteria because folks like Bacich fail to accept, respect and appreciate the diversity of groups of people. We are different; and we reject any ideas that we, as people of color, should always try to assimilate into the so-called majority. In fact, the American system was set up so that Blacks were excluded, except when they were needed by the white 'majority.' And if you look around the world Mr. Bacich, you might notice that Caucasians are the real minority.

In the future, it would be nice if folks would kindly direct their energies in more positive ways. All of this business about questioning the validity of the affairs of Third World people is unjustified, nebulous and should cease immediately.

Gary Lee
Acting Director
Office of Third World Affairs

To the Editor:

In response to the letter on November 10, 1982 concerning Black Homecoming written by Chris Bacich, we believe that his perceptions of the facts are highly distorted.

This is another example of a racist ignoramus blaming the victim. The fact is that it is not we the minority that has chosen out of joy to group ourselves, but the majority's racist attitudes that has forced us to do so for the protection of our history, culture, identity and ourselves. Furthermore how ignorant can you be, could you possibly call racist or segregationist the celebrations of White ethnic groups (i.e., St. Patricks "Irish," St. Joseph "Polish," Bastille Day "French," Columbus Day "Italian," etc.)?

Also no one ever said that we wanted to assimilate, nor do we have a need to do so. We minorities are very, very proud of our heritage and history to change our culture for anyone elses, and nor do we expect another to do so for ours. We have no desire or need to be White. The Black (people of color) experience is not the White experience. The Black experience is unique in a thousand and one ways. Therefore we suggest that it be recognized, accepted, and most importantly respected.

It is clear that Mr. Bacich does not understand one damn iota about the issues of racism or oppression and if he is a representation of what the Whites on this campus feel, then they are indeed people to be pitied. Furthermore, we would like to suggest to Mr. Bacich that he reevaluate his position in life, stop being an ---- and learn about first world people so that his childish fears could disappear.

...and another view

To the Editor:

In his rebuttal to Chris Bacich's article on Black Homecoming, Phillip Jennings has grossly misinterpreted the positive attitude conveyed in Bacich's reaction. It is an attitude in which, if held by more people, there would be no need for Black Homecomings, Greek-American parades, Puerto Rican Day parades, or St. Patrick's Day. Segregational attitudes only serve to perpetuate the prejudices that ironically each cultural group works to eliminate.

When a certain group feels it necessary to promote their culture they are forgetting that they are people first. Is it not possible to celebrate the UMass Homecoming with a Gospel Choir, folk dances, lectures, etc., without an exclusive label? I am a black person proud of the accomplishments of all people of any culture or color.

We as thinking, intelligent beings belong to one race. With the state of our world, no group should segregate itself to attain certain goals if we are to resolve the social and economic problems that everyone shares as humans.

The guest speaker for Black Homecoming, Ms. Nikki Giovanni, apparently advocated this necessary attitude by opening her lecture curiously asking, Is there a "White Homecoming" too? The message there, just as the message in Chris Bacich's reaction should not be ignored.

Can killer cancer be cured?

The following is an account of a guest speaker in Microbiology of Cancer 160, a speaker intimately familiar with the struggle for life in the face of the threat of cancer.

She speaks with dignity. The kind that comes from having all that is yourself stripped away; through chemotherapy, through a bone marrow (the doctor told her "it will be as if I'm ripping your big toe-nail off." she said it was more painful than childbirth), through having all of your hair fall out, through having your face swell up to freakish proportions.

She speaks and her voice cracks and she pauses, to regain her breath, to regain her calm. And she shares with us what it is like to have terminal leukemia; to have a limit of two years put on your life; to take a risk wherein your chance of survival is 30 percent.

She tells us because she is able to tell us. She has fought death and she has beaten it. She has survived cancer.

John B. Kenney

"It was not until I came to the end of the pamphlets the doctor had given me, that I realized that leukemia was cancer. That what I had was that dreaded disease that other people got...I had just saved a person's life that summer with C.P.R...My name was in the paper...I was on the news. This couldn't be happening to me. What had I done to deserve this?"

She is 29 years old and a year ago September she was told that she was going to die.

Last year, she had to have a physical examination. That was no problem though. She had always been healthy. But suddenly she was called back. Something was wrong with the blood test.

Her doctor was worried. He wasn't sure. He sent her to an oncologist (oncology is the study of tumors). The oncologist told her that her white blood cells were multiplying at 25 times the normal reproduction rate. He told her that she had terminal leukemia. He gave her a prescription, a bill, a few pamphlets and said good-bye.

"I walked around in a daze. I was scared and angry. My husband hadn't come with me because we didn't think it was anything serious...I started crying...I found a phone and called him and shouted, 'See...see what you've left me to face alone...I've got cancer!' I burst into tears, choking because I could hardly breathe. He asked exactly where I was. He said not to move, that his secretary would drive him there. But he was 45 minutes away.

"I had time to compose myself while I waited. I was so scared. When my husband came we hugged and walked and talked about a lot of personal feelings we had."

"We went to get my prescription. I handed it to the pharmacist and he looked up at me. I knew by the look in his eyes that I was going to die.

"The pharmacist said he would call around because he didn't stock that drug. He found a pharmacy that had a small amount. I was mad...I was angry...that the doctor didn't tell me how powerful the drug was. He hadn't prepared me at all...I was so afraid."

She went on. And then, as if slapping us in the face, she spoke of her children. A boy, age 7, and a little girl, age 2.

"I want to see my children grow up," she cried.

She motioned to the back of the room, of Mahar Auditorium (silent, less the struggle to hold back welled up eyes and noses), where her brother stood.

Keith Simon is a student here at UMass. At his sister's command Keith switched on a slide projector that made real our mental images, of her children, of her; bald, grotesque, dying.

"I heard of something called a bone marrow transplant while I was having tests done at hospitals in Boston. I heard that it was new and the results were unclear and that it was dangerous.

"I asked my doctor what he thought about it. He said it was a decision my husband and I would have to make. My husband asked, 'Doctor, if it was your daughter, would you have it done?" He still would not say. but we got the impression he would. We decided to try it."

The bone marrow transplant involved a great deal of work and sacrifice on her part for it to be successful. She would have to spend 4 months in the hospital, in Seattle, (3000 miles from family, from children). She would have constant bone marrows (a needle driven into the hip bone to remove bone marrow, the essence of blood and it's birthplace), chemotherapy treatments (To the point where she vomited every fifteen minutes of every day. She had to have her head held up because she was too weak and too sick to do it herself.), and drug injections to help the pain because her body was trying to kill her.

She spoke of her fight to overcome depression that tried to set in everyday. She worked, body and mind, to cure herself. And she spoke of this approach, this wholistic approach.

This is the principle that everything in the body interconnects. That you treat the cause and not just the symptom.

As Albey Reiner, professor of biology, and teacher of this course puts it, "The mind is not restricted to the brain. The mind can work with the body towards the cure."

She sat down with her children and told them she was going away for a while, but that she'd be back. She told them she and Uncle Keith were going to make her bad blood better (Keith was chosen as the best possible donor through their genetic match-up. He decided to take time off from school to help save his sister's life.).

Her son looked at her and cried, "You're gonna die," he screamed, "You're gonna die and you're never coming back."

"I got out of the hospital last February...I feel great. And all my hair's back too, see? She smiles and a quiet murmur of laughter arises. Eyes are wiped and throats are cleared.

"I want to live. I wanted to see my children grow up. I wanted to retire with my husband...and I will."

She speaks of courage and of strength, and of the will to live. It is the rawest of human emotions. She has cultivated it to an art.

We all know someone with cancer, or someone who knows someone with cancer. In this age of individuality it is the common threat that runs through us all.

We cannot hide from it. It attacks the elderly, it attacks children. It attacks us, the people in the prime of life, healthy and fit.

We must reevaluate life always, for it is important. The fight to live is the fight we all must face, together.

Revenge in radical feminism

One Sunday afternoon I was trying to study; but I was too tired to concentrate, so I went across the hall to bother my neighbors for awhile. One of my neighbors has a subscription to Playboy magazine. I was happy to see that the November issue had arrived. What I have to read for my classes contains no pictures, so "reading" Playboy is usually a change of pace for me. But on this occasion a certain title caught my eye that I just couldn't pass by. I began to read the article that was underneath it with interest.

"The New Puritans" was the title. There was a caption below this title which said, "a recent book by radical feminists reveals that their goal is the rejection of male sexuality." This was of interest to me as I had taken the Foundations of Feminism class with Prof. Lee Edwards. I was one of four men out of a class of sixty or more people. I have also read a small amount of feminist literature outside of this class. Despite all the attention I've given this subject my understanding of it still seems to me to be incomplete. I'm always interested in listening to what anyone has to say concerning it.

I did not look to the Playboy article for the answers. In fact, two things occured to me as I began to read it. This magazine is exactly the sort of institution that radical feminists love to despise; so the first things I thought was that, knowing who its enemies are, Playboy would be looking after its own interests in putting down the radical feminists. This being so, I was prepared not to be surprised if these feminists did not get a fair treatment at the hands of the author of the article. Next, I considered the claim expressed by the caption. I thought it was wild. It's a mighty leap from the knowledge that one book is in support of the rejection of male sexuality to the claim that such a rejection is the fundamental goal of the radical feminist movement. To make this leap, the author of the magazine artricle would have to show that the only way to account for the contents of the book he wishes to discuss is to say that all radical feminists have the fundamental goal he thinks they do.

The argument in the Playboy article centers around the radical feminists reaction to rape. It claims that these feminists "have taken the trauma, the devastation of the isolated criminal act and fashioned a politic of revenge, a politic of repression. And that is criminal." As the author of the article sees it the goal of radical feminism to be the rejection of male sexuality, we can deduce that he believes that they wish to reject male sexuality because it makes them feel as though they are getting revenge for criminal acts of rape.

Now, the book that this author wants to talk about is Take Back the Night. He must believe that the only way to account for the existence of this book is to say that all radical feminists want revenge for rape. He mentions the views of a certain woman named Robin Morgan. It is not clear from the article, however, that this woman wrote Take Back the Night, although it is clear that the author of this article thinks that it is really her views that are symptomatic of the radical feminists' desire for revenge.

The author of the Playboy article quotes Robin Morgan as saying the following: "Rape is the perfected act of male sexuality in a patriarchal culture — it is the ultimate metaphor for dominion, violence, subjugation...I claim that rape exists any time sexual intercourse occurs when it has not been initiated by the woman out of her own genuine affection and desire." It is clear that Robin Morgan considers male sexuality, in its purest and most perfect form, to be the 'ultimate metaphor' for all the bad things in the world. Traditionally, the ultimate metaphor for all the bad things in world has been called the "root of all evil." It is also clear that Ms. Morgan believes that it is very common for the root of all evil to reach its purest and most perfect form. By doing away with the root of all evil, we could do away with all the evil in the world as there wouldn't be any way for it to come into being. If Robin Morgan would like to get rid of all evil in the world we can predict that she would go about doing so by doing away with male sexuality in its purest and most perfect form. Now, how exactly would she go about doing this? Would she want to reject all men sexually herself? On the contrary. She holds no scruple to having sexual intercourse with men — just so long as she can be the boss. In fact, she sees male sexuality as being quite harmless just so long as women are on top. But let a man get the upper hand and what happens? Violence! War! Disease! Pestilence!

The author of the Playboy article wants to say that the only way to account for Morgan's viewpoint is to say that all radical feminists want to reject male sexuality in order to reap revenge for rape. This is not entirely true. There are other ways to account for Morgan's viewpoint: One could say that she has a naive view of the nature of evil; one could say that she has a slightly warped view of human relations. One need not drag in the whole flock of radical feminists and say that they share her viewpoint; but one would not be wrong if one did.

Robin Morgan is not the only example of radical feminists who view male sexuality as the root of all evil. In fact, she is not even the best example. There are two groups worth mentioning as better examples, they are: the 'separatists,' and, the 'political-lesbians.' Unlike Morgan, both these groups do not want to have anything to do with men under any conditions. I was once in a philosophy class in which the professor told about an article he had read. In this article the founder of a radical feminist sperm bank was interviewed. The founder said that the bank was put in operation so that the women who did not wish to have anything to do with men could, nevertheless, still have children. I laughed when I first heard this; but I lost my sense of humor when I tried to imagine what sort of man would agree to make a deposit in this bank. I have often read and talked to radical feminists who foolishly believe that the world could be a heaven on earth — a garden of Eden — for women if they could just do away with men and find some other source of sperm. They are living in fantasy. It is like they are looking for the fountain of youth except that they are looking for another kind of fountain.

It is clear that the radical feminists I have mentioned reject male sexuality; but it is not clear that they do this out of a desire for revenge for rape. In fact, it is not even clear that their rejection of male sexuality has anything to do with their reaction to rape. Let us assume, for now, that they reject male sexuality as a reaction to rape; but let us also assume that their goal is not merely revenge, but that they think that their rejection of men sexually will put an end to violence against women. We want to assume these things so that we can ask the question: is the rejection of male sexuality the best way to stop violence against women? I don't think it is.

I have the naive view that it would be better for the sexes to learn how to live together then to try to live without each other. If I am right, then the prevention of violence against women is not justification for the rejection of male sexuality. If I am right then the radical feminists I have mentioned will have to find some other way to justify their view that it is better to live without men. Perhaps some individual woman will say "I just can't live with men. I can't explain why, but I just can't and I don't want to." This is a valid justificaiton for her; however, the radical feminist groups I have mentioned seek to convince other women that male sexuality is the root of all evil. They advise and admonish other women to join them and forsake men. Would they do this if they knew that it is simply not true that male sexuality is the root of all evil? If they would, then it is clear that their only motive for doing so is revenge. If letting them have their revenge would stop violence against women then we men have no grounds to complain against them; but as their revenge can only foster more bad and ugly feelings I do not see any reason why they should be allowed to have their revenge.

It is clear from all that I have just said that I believe they would be taking their revenge only if they would knowingly deceive other women into believing that men are the root of all evil. As men are not the root of all evil (any more than women are the root of all evil — perhaps we must say that human beings are the root of all evil in human form, but this is just to state a tautology) we must educate these women who believe that men are, so that they will stop trying to make other women believe it. If anyone tries to convince any one else (male or female) that one sex is responsible for all evil even though they themselves know it is not true, we must expose them as liars, cheats, and deceivers; and thus, we will prevent them from reaping their revenge.

In search of Friday's traveling Amherst drinker

Something has been on my mind:
I'd really like to know
After Friday Happy Hour
Where do the people go?
Pitchers empty; ales are quaffed
The bar is packed no more.
But where do tipsy students head
When on the bus they pour?

The time is not yet Friday night
No crowds fill Amherst bars.
What do unsober people do
Between the sun and stars?
"Dallas" isn't on till nine;
Just channel 40 local news
Which can be indigestible with dinner, after Blue Wall booze.

Does everbody sit and wait
in limbo — between dusk and night?
Do they stare at bedroom ceilings?
Curse their halfway drunken plight?
Oh what do the poor students do
When Happy Hour's over?
Continue drinking? or take a break
Till nine — and then start over?

Lower Back Problem
If you've been treated for lower back problem and the pain and discomfort are still there, you may be able to benefit from chiropractic treatment.
If your spine is out of alignment, this may be causing other problems in addition to lower back pain. Because the body's nervous system is closely integrated with the spine, any misalignment can cause painful irritation. Abnormal nerve function may affect whatever organs, glands, or tissues that are supplied by that nerve.
The nerves of the lower back, for example, are connected to certain organs and other structures in that area. If lower back spinal misalignment is putting undue pressure on the nerves, you may be suffering from more than lower back pain. It may be having a direct effect on other areas of your body.
A thorough examination can disclose exactly where the problem is and how it can be corrected.

Just funk rehash and covers

By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Staff

The Bad C.C. is Carl Carlton's first album since his big hit of last year, "She's a Bad Mama Jama." Sadly, nothing on this album comes even close to the excitement and good funky feeling of that song. Since last year, Carl Carlton has switched labels from 20th Century to RCA and this also means switching producers. His new producer is Narada Michael Waldon, a man capable of finding and highlighting the worst qualities of any performer. While Waldon does not take anything away from Carl's superb singing, he gives Carl some of the worst songs in existence to sing. Even the decent songs are so poorly arranged, they obliterate any of the joy Carl is putting into them. There are three cover tunes on this album, none do Carl any justice. The Four Top's "Baby I Need Your Loving" sounds like they took the original mix and stuffed a heavy bass drum right down its throat. "Under the Boardwalk" is boring, and the Rascals' "Groovin" does not even sound remotely like the original. The original songs are tired funk rehashings of old melodies and even older themes. How many times are we going to have to hear songs about everyone in the world being a star before the recording industry is satisfied that we have the message?

Carl Carlton has a strong voice perfect for funk/soul music, which, if given the right songs and production, could be one of the hottest things currently around. It is certainly a pity that someone with such talent has been victimized by his recording company and his producer. Lets hope Carl Carlton's next album is worthy of his talents.

Carl Carlton's new album is reviewed above.

Heavy Metal from Hell

TOO FAST FOR LOVE
(Elektra/Asylum)
Motley Crue

By YANETT PENA
Collegian Correspondent

Heavy metal music has taken a lot of abuse over the years from both the critics and the public, categorized as nothing but silly mindless noise. Even the term "heavy metal" has been used as a derogatory means of labeling bands such as Van Halen, Black Sabbath, Judas Priest, and others.

Despite this criticism, however, there has been a recent "new wave" of heavy metal bands cropping up in England. Groups like Iron Maiden, Motorhead, and Girlschool have played in the States to enthusiastic audiences. One of the the latest and most original of bands to emerge from all this is L.A.'s own Motley Crue.

Resembling a cross between Kiss and the New York Dolls (the lyric sheet inside contains a picture of the band also looking like possible "Rocky Horror Picture Show" cast members), this four-man band has written and produced a debut that is a definite pleasant surprise. The nine songs included deal mostly with sex, and more sex, although they're not delivered as arrogantly or satanically as other heavy metal bands tend to do these days. Vince Neil's vocals are a departure from the snarling gruff heard elsewhere. His singing is clean and almost feminine in some areas. I found this contrast very appealing.

"Too Fast For Love" is actually a re-released version of the original album on Leathur Records. Having obtained a major record deal with Elektra/Asylum, the record contains several modifications, including several overdubs, a slicker sound production, and even a song omission.

"Live Wire," the album's opening cut, is a typical hard-rocker containing a fast rhythm and massive distortion. The remaining songs, however, combine simple melodies with loud drumming and, again, distorted guitars played by Mick Mars. The music sounds purposely off-key at different times giving it a strange effect that still makes the album work. "Piece of Your Action," "Merry-Go-Round," and the title track are all perfect examples of this.

In summary, Motley Crue is not your typical heavy metal band, and "Too Fast For Love" is not your typical heavy metal album, though it may take a few listenings to truly appreciate it. I'm hoping to hear more from this band in the near future.

Gallery Prints

by Julie Schiffo

Bruce Beck: Photographs, November 13-27 at the Student Union Gallery, Scenes from Italy, Yosemite National Park, and Hawaii grace the walls, but these aren't just landscape prints. Through the use of an old and painfully slow process, Beck contributes his own personal touch to each photograph. Thus, each scene exudes an unearthly quality.

The University Gallery has three shows this month. Each exhibit will run until December 19. The first is a collection of Barbara Zucker's recent works. In the main gallery, Zucker has created three large, black sculptures. Their ominous feeling is quieted by a lattice structure which adds a traditional New England touch to them. An area in the North Gallery consists of "Standing Drawings," metal sculpture of a much smaller size.

"The World of Donald Evans" is a purely enjoyable exhibit of this man's work. He has made up his own world, his own language and made it appear real through the use of stamps, postcards and letters. This show is very humorous and appealing.

Selections from the Gallery's Permanent Collection are also on exhibit. Studies for Murray's "Quinnipiac" and Fleischner's chain link maze are featured here among other interesting drawings. Works by the Amherst Weavers and Rita Deanin Abbey are on display at Herter Gallery until November 24. Both shows are quite interesting. Harry Bartnick will be at Hampden Gallery until November 19. There is not much time left for this show. Come down and take a look!

WIN THIS RECORD
David Lindley and El Rayo X

By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Staff

Guess what black sound the L.A. white boys are trying to usurp these days? It seems every new L.A. pop album has at least one reggae groove tune. So, what happens when everybody's favorite L.A. session guitarist decides to put out his own album? He makes most of his material slip in and out of "that fonky reggae beat, mon." Fortunately, David Lindley and his band, El Rayo-X, know how to play these grooves extremely well. This is not tasteless, bland L.A. fodder, like the Rondstadt reggae.

David Lindley is best known for his lead guitar and slide work with Jackson Browne, but do not let that stop you from checking this record out. The guitar work on this album is brilliant. Lindley is an extremely tasteful guitar player, he knows how to build his solos to extreme crescendoes, and most important, he knows when not to. Since the death of Lowell George, Lindley has become the unsung hero of the slide guitar, his leads on this album should firmly establish him as the current king.

When the band is not playing the L.A. skank, they strip all the gears for some crazy bluesy soul. Either way they play it, this group is above the average. Songs that stand out include; "Rock It With I," "Spodie," and "Somethings Gonna Happen to Me." If you want to buy an L.A. pop album filled with maudlin self-pity, buy the new Jackson Browne, but if you prefer your L.A. without the pity and more of the bite, check out Win This Record.

WANTED:

The Collegian, in conjunction with the Union Video Center, will soon be launching a daily half-hour news program to be aired over the cable TV system in the Campus Center and Student Union Building. We need a coordinator to write, rewrite and edit wire copy and Collegian staff reports which will then be read over the cable TV. Low pay, but great opportunity to help create a new UMass student service. Some experience in writing and television work is helpful. Bring us your ideas. Apply to Ed Levine in the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, by Friday, Nov. 19. The Collegian and UVC are equal opportunity employers.

It's a mighty long way from Boston to Austin

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

You know, there is an old adage that says that it is better to have tried and failed then never to have tried at all.

"Just what are you trying to say, Jim?" a lot of people out in UMass sportsdom are most likely saying to themselves right about now.

Well, to tell you the truth, I'm not really sure myself. But, to be more specific, there is a team at UMass that has a chance to compete in a national championship that is in severe danger of not being able to take that chance.

I get it now. What I'm trying to say is that it would be better for the women's ultimate frisbee team to have a chance to try for the national championship than to have them not have a chance to try.

The whole situation came about two weeks ago when the ZULU team won the New England championship by defeating the defending national champions, BLU, a Boston based team.

The following week, in the Northeast Regionals, ZULU was again victorious. This time they trounced a team from Cornell University in the finals by a score of 20-7. The tournament championship qualified them to go to the final, five team tournament that would decide the champs.

But, the invitation creates the problem. The national championships are not being held in the Southwest playing fields. They're not even off an exit ramp in New Jersey. Nope, these games will be held in Austin, Texas. (For non-geography majors, that's a place that is far away).

To get from UMass to Austin will cost money, a lot of it. And a lot of money is not something that ZULU possesses.

So, in an effort to try to get together enough money for the pilgrimmage, ZULU has asked an awful lot of student and administrative bodies around campus to help sponsor the trip.

But why would anyone want to help sponsor them. I mean, it's only a national championship. It only means hours of practice and advancement to a point just short of the ultimate goal (no pun intended).

UMass should support ZULU, if it can, and let them have a chance to try and fail or maybe even try and win or something like that...I'm confused again.

A national championship? Wow.

Oh, and while I have your attention. The 40-Minute Gang will be holding its first organizational meeting Friday night at 6:30 p.m. For any unaware sports fans, the 40-Minute Gang is the men's basketball team fans who plan on going crazy throughout the men's home games. Tee shirts.

The respective hoop teams will hold intra-squad scrimmages today. The women will play at 4:30 p.m. and the men at 7:30.

pound match freshman sensation Mike Bossi, a 1981 and 1982 Massachusetts high school champ, beat junior Mat Herried.

Dana Richard, a sophomore, won by decision over freshman Mike Rodgers, in the 167-pound weight class. "We brought in some super wrestlers this year in Butto, Rodgers, and Bossi, to build for the upcoming years," said coach Freitas.

Their were no challenges in the upper weight classes. At 177-pounds, senior Dave McEntee will start. He finished second in New England's the past three years.

Tony Gaeta, a freshman, will start in the 190-pound class.

The heavyweight class is vacant now, but hopefully Mark Bavelock will recover from his illness and be able to wrestle.

"We match up good against Boston University. They won New England's last year, and beat us by one point in a dual meet," said Freitas.

"We'll have to beat them early and dominate the upper weights to win." The team finished 4-8 last year, and hopes to improve on that record this season.

Agreement reached in NFL dispute

NEW YORK (AP) — A tentative agreement was reached last night to end the 57- day-old National Football League strike, the longest and costliest walkout in sports history, sources said. The season is to resume Sunday.

The settlement is subject to ratification player representatives of the 28 clubs and the owners' NFL Management Council and then three-quarters of the owners and a majority the 1,500 players.

The agreement was reached after two days of renewed negotiations that began after the National Labor Relations Board refused the union's request to cite the league for bargaining in bad faith.

Estimates of the costs of the strike ranged upwards of $275 million, based on league estimates of $30 million a week in revenues and union estimates of $9 million a week in player salaries.

Last year, major league baseball players struck for 50 days. By the time play resumed, 59 days of the 1981 season had been lost and the estimated cost of the strike was $150 million.

The football strike affected 112 of the originally scheduled 224 games.

This Sunday's games are Baltimore at the New York Jets, Cincinnati at Philadelphia, Detroit at Chicago, Kansas City at New Orleans, the Los Angeles Rams at Atlanta, Miami at Buffalo, Minnesota vs. Green Bay at Milwaukee, New England at Cleveland, Pittsburgh at Houston, San Francisco at St. Louis, Seattle at Denver, Tampa Bay at Dallas and Washington at the New York Giants.

On Monday night, San Diego will visit the Los Angeles Raiders.

The nine-game schedule will be the shortest in the NFL's 63- year history. Only 10 games were played each season from 1943-45 because of World War II, and at least 11 games have been played every other year.

Miller said eight teams from each conference will qualify for the playoffs, 16 in all, four more than the usual six division champions and four wildcard entries.

Under the revised playoff format, eight games — four in each conference — will be played the weekend of Jan. 8-9, with the winners playing the weekend of Jan. 15-16. The conference championships leading to the Super Bowl then would be played the weekend of Jan. 22-23.

Training camps were to open Wednesday morning.

"I'll be there at 6 a.m. with my lunch bucket in my hand," said Derland Moore, a defensive tackle with the New Orleans Saints.

Los Angeles Rams' Dennis Harrah will be back into his customary role of playing offensive guard this Sunday, instead of serving brews, thanks to a settlement in the NFL players strike.

Wrestlers wrestle-off to prepare for BU match

By STEVE FITZ
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts held their team wrestle-offs Sunday night at Boyden Gym, in preparation for their November 23 opener, here, against Boston University.

The wrestle-offs were to determine who starts in each weight class.

In order to win the starting nod, each wrestler had to beat his challenging opponent two out of three times.

"We wrestled really good tonight, the 126-pound and the 158-pound matches were very close," said second year head coach Rick Freitas.

In the 126-pound match, junior Brian O'Boyle, who finished third in the New England's last year, defeated teammate Greg Porrello, also a junior, by a close decision, to win the starting position.

Scott McQuiade, who finished third in New England's last year, faced off with sophomore transfer John Butto in the 158-pound bout.

Butto transferred from Upsala College last year and is ineligible until after Christmas. He was a AWN Freshman All-American last year at Upsala, where he had a 32-10 record.

Butto beat McQuaide in the first match, but McQuaide came back and won the second match. They didn't wrestle a third match because it was an exhibition, since Butto is ineligible.

Marc Weisman won by decision in the 118-pound match over Doug Gotlins.

Senior captain Doug Johnson, who finished third in New England's in 1980 and 1982, looked very impressive in his decision over freshman Gus Mazzocca in the 134-pound weight class.

"Johnson is looking really good, we're going to key on individuals this year, and build for the future," said Freitas.

Junior Paul Sullivan defeated senior Al Levy in the 142-pound bout. In the 150-

Men's basketball: Big men abound this season

Veterans return ready

Edwin Green drives for the hoop during pre-season workouts. John Emerson is defending on the play.

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the third in a series of five articles previewing this year's men's basketball team.

Head basketball coach Tom McLaughlin has an added advantage to his frontcourt game this year. It's called depth and it will be very important when competing in the Atlantic Ten this season.

Depth means that when one of the regulars gets into foul trouble, McLaughlin won't have to grimace as he sends a new face in. He's got some good big beefers ready to do some bruising underneath.

Though McLaughlin says he isn't 100 percent sure who will start when the Venezuelan National team on Sunday night (yes, basketball season is THAT close,) there are several prime candidates for starting roles.

Horace Neysmith heads the list of returning lettermen in the frontcourt. The 6'5" 220 pound sophomore from Jamaica, New York led the Minutemen in rebounds last year, while setting a freshman record for most rebounds in a season with 239 for an 8.8 average. (That average was good enough for 26th in the nation.)

For his efforts in 1981-82, Neysmith was named to the Eastern 8 All-Rookie Team.

"Horace Neysmith is a much improved offensive player," said McLaughlin. "He's really concentrated on improving his weaknesses. He's a better player than he was last year."

Another key returnee to the frontcourt is 6'7" Edwin Green. Green, a junior, was the Eastern 8 Rookie-of-the-Year as a freshman. According to McLaughlin, Green looks to be playing his best basketball since he's been coach.

"Edwin has been forced to work because of the competition between all the players and he has responded well," said McLaughlin. "He's worked as hard as he can possibly work."

The main addition to the Minuteman frontcourt at the moment has been 6'7" John Hempel. Hempel, one of the most highly recruited high schoolers in the country last year, possesses a superb range with his outside shot.

"He can shoot from 25 feet out with no strain," said McLaughlin of Hempel. "It's phenomenal."

Further reinforcing the depth chart for the hoopsters is 6'6" sophomore Bobby Braun. Braun joined the Minutemen at mid-season last year and proved to be an instant contributor while averaging 4.2 points and 3.2 rebounds over the course of 15 games. Braun also enters the 1982-83 campaign after having shed several excess pounds during the off-season.

"Bobby Braun lost weight and is quicker," said McLaughlin. "Bobby will regularly dunk the ball three to fives in practice each day."

Next in the long line of big men is the youngster who McLaughlin refers to as "Mr. Steady," 6'6" sophomore George Ramming, a starter for much of last year.

"You know what you're gonna get out of George. He plays hard," said McLaughlin.

Another new man on the court who UMass basketball fans will recognize is 6'8" Skip Connors, a transfer from Manhatten College who was red-shirted last year. Connors can handle the ball exceptionally well for a player his size and, like Hempel, is a big man who can be a scoring threat from the outside.

And, the biggest of the bigs was saved for last. Freshman Tom Emerson ranks as the tallest man in on the UMass roster at 6'9". Emerson, however, was sick for a couple of weeks and is still in the recuperative stage. He will be needed in order for the Minutemen to do well since they need a dominant center in the pivot.

With the way the big men stack up this year, UMass fans can only hope for more success from the Eastern 8's number one team in rebounding last time around.

Bond agreements may be in violation

The University of Massachusetts Building Authority is violating bond agreements which require that it repay excess bond construction funds on dormitories and dining halls completed over 20 years ago, Student Government Association (SGA) President Jim Murphy told the Undergraduate Student Senate last night.

According to the bond trust agreements, once the buildings are completed and the final cost is known the Building Authority is required to file a "Certificate of Completion" and then to use any excess construction funds to repay or repurchase some of the bonds.

"In the trust agreement, it provides for certification of buildings when complete," said Peter Graham of the SGA President's Office elaborating on Murphy's report. "They never certified any of the buildings."

"They're pretending that Brett, Gorman, Orchard Hill, and Southwest (among others) are still under construction," Graham said.

Graham said the failure to certify the buildings and repay the bonds was beneficial to the bank holding the money.

"The interest is 14 or 16 percent, and the money just rolls over year after year," Graham said. "If you're a banker, you'd like having an account like that."

Graham noted the bonds were issued at an interest rate of three percent but the interest being earned is 14 percent. He said the University considers this "gain" on the unused money to be reason to continue holding it.

"If this were a business investment, it might be good and it might not," Graham said. "But this isn't a business. It's a public trust, and it's illegal."

Murphy and Graham both said they have been trying to get names of the bondholders to notify them of the illegal actions.

"Bondholders are potentially able to sue the University in federal court for malfeasance of feduciary responsibility," Graham said. "The Building Authority has been negligent in their responsibilities."

Before the meeting, Legal Services Office attorney Michael Pill said failure to certify the buildings was "legally questionable."

"It appears the Building Authority is using a paper fiction that the buildings are still under construction to avoid repaying the Bonds," Pill said. "I am at a loss as to what legitimate reason could justify this."

Bonds totalling almost $80 million were issued by the Building Authority in the 1960's and 1970's to build dormitories, dining halls and the Campus Center Complex. Because the construction estimates were not precise, more bonds were issued for each project than were actually needed. These excess bond funds total over $1.6 million, Graham said.

H.J. Littlefield, Director of Planning for the University, said the certificates of completion have never been issued, but that he does not think this is illegal.

The excess funds have been an issue in past years, when Housing Services requested that the funds be used to make fire, safety and energy conservation renovations to the dorms.

Alcohol report draws concern from Senate

Upset with the disciplinary tone of the UMass Health Council's report on alcohol abuse, the Undergraduate Student Senate made a motion to request that the Council delete certain parts of the report in order to rework these parts.

SGA President Jim Murphy said parts one and two of the report are oppressive to students because they propose to punish students without understanding the reasons behind alcohol abuse. Section one of the report discusses the need to establish a policy that states "alcohol abuse constitutes unacceptable behavior and is not sociably tolerable." Section two discusses the need to "establish a task force which would be responsible for addressing alcohol related issues and problems on campus."

"The faculty Senate should not endorse sections one and two of the Health Report. I think sections one and two are very oppressive and single out students," Murphy said.

Student senators expressed concern that there was not enough input by students into the alcohol problem and that the council should have students intervening in this problem.

"I think the primary responsibility has to be with the students. We need some input from those students who will be able to point out things we don't like," said Murphy.

Student senators said it is important for the faculty members to realize they do not want to condemn the entire proposal. Instead, the report should be concerned more with the causes of alcohol abuse, Murphy said.

"Alcohol abuse is not a function of whether a person is good or bad. You don't cure a contagious disease by shunning them," he said. "You need to examine the root of the problem. Alcohol is not a disciplinary problem."

A clause in the report which proposes to review the advertising in the Collegian of "two for one" or "all you can drink" activities was condemned by some students at the meeting.

"I'm against part G of the proposal. I think it would be a dangerous precedent to start controlling what the Collegian does. We should not endorse this," said Chris Sullivan, SGA senator.

MassPIRG's RSO status in question

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts administration has made an inquiry into the status of the UMass Public Interest Research Group (UMassPIRG), according to Tom Ahern, chair of the Undergraduate Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

The inquiry was made Tuesday, Ahern said, by director of Student Activities Randy Donant, who was in turn acting for Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson. Ahern said it was his understanding the inquiry originated from the UMass President's Office in Boston.

According to Ahern, UMassPIRG is a valid Recognized Student Organization (RSO) and has met the requirements of the Student Government association Constitution.

Mitch Gaslin, a UMassPIRG member and a member of the board of directors of the statewide MassPIRG, said he knew of no problems with Mass PIRG's status.

"As far as I know, there's no problem with PIRG," Gaslin said. "It's one of the largest groups on campus."

MassPIRG was the statewide lobbying group responsible for original passage of the Bottle Bill, and the group led a statewide effort to support the referendum question which passed by a two-to-one margin November 4.

MassPIRG also works on issues such as hazardous waste, recycling and various consumer issues.

As an apparent result of the Bottle Bill victory last spring, the UMass Board of Trustees voted to abolish the "negative check-off" system, through which a $2 MassPIRG fee is listed on each student's bill but can be checked off. MassPIRG successfully filed for an injunction preventing the action and a court case is now pending.

Donant said he responded to an inquiry fro[illegible] Chancellor Dennis Madson.

"I've given information to the vice-chancellor on whether we have a procedure for RSO groups, which we do, and he (Madson) asked if MassPIRG was an RSO group and I said yes," Donant said.

Donant said he was uncertain whether the inquiry was being made on behalf of the UMass President's Office or not.

Vice-Chancellor Madson was unavailable for comment.

Reagan proposes 'hotline,' confidence builders to USSR

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is about to propose to the Soviet Union an expansion of the Washington-Moscow hotline and other "confidence-building" measures, including notice of upcoming missile tests, administration sources said yesterday.

The sources said Reagan, in his new arms control initiative, will encourage the post-Brezhnev leadership in Moscow to reach an agreement with U.S. negotiators in Geneva on at least some of the principles of his proposed treaty to sharply reduce strategic nuclear weapons on both sides.

The initiative is contained in a speech nearing completion in which the president intends to draw attention to the massive sums the two superpowers are spending on defense and urge that they intensify their efforts to reverse the accumulation of nuclear weapons.

However, he will not propose a less comprehensive pact than one mandating sharp cuts in current arsenals, nor will he support ratification of the SALT II treaty, signed in Vienna in 1979 by former President Jimmy Carter and the late Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev, said the sources.

The sources revealed the president's plans on condition that their names not be used.

The current hotline is a teleprinter circuit between the two capitals. Established under a 1963 agreement, it was designed to flash alerts of imminent, accidental nulcear attacks. It has never been used for that purpose, although presidents and Soviet leaders have used it on other occasions to exchange mesages in times of tension, notably during the 1973 Arab-Israeli war.

Sens. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., and Sam Nunn, D-Ga., have suggested bolstering the coded message system with a military crisis center, staffed by U.S. and Soviet officials who would quickly exchange nuclear information and warnings.

Reagan calls nuclear freeze advocates 'dupes' once again

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's claim that Soviet agents are partly behind the American campaign for a nuclear weapons freeze was apparently based on similar allegations in Western Europe and on an article in Reader's Digest, one of his favorite magazines.

When Reagan's assertion at a news conference last week was questioned, the White House produced a list of published materials in an attempt to document the president's statement. Those materials, however, contain few references to the domestic freeze campaign. And what little evidence they do cite relates to the charge that the Soviet Union has sought to stir up opposition to deployment of the neutron warhead and modern nuclear weapons in Europe.

According to the White House press office, Reagan also had in mind a recent Reader's Digest article when he told reporters that "there is plenty of evidence" that foreign agents have helped organize major pro-freeze demonstrations.

That article, written by John Barron and published in the October issue, named five Soviet officials, three of them United Nations diplomats, one embassy official and an official of the Soviet Institute for the U.S.A. and Canada who were said to have participated in disarmament conferences in the United States. The article identified them as agents of the KGB, the Soviet secret police.

Shortly after the allegations appeared, however, leaders of the freeze movement charged that they were misleading because the officials named had been invited to appear and present their nation's views during public programs and had not participated in the planning or organization of the events.

Reagan's charges have drawn demands, in Congress and elsewhere, for hard evidence of infiltration.
